HOME RAMBLES

Some cheap skate hocked a tire off of Harland Gunheim's Ford Saturday night. ✠ It makes us tired to be untired after we have retired. ✠ Bottle up your profane language boys and try a shot of it on yourself when you sober up. ✠ The ladies say it is a shame to hear some of you. The way things are all growing makes the farmers smile. ✠ If you have that tired feeling then try a fishing trip. ✠ The cows will soon milk only cream as the pastures are so full of good eats. ✠ The grasshoppers are hatching by the millions around here the farmers state. ✠ We like our Lettuce—Hows your Radishes? It will soon be fair time in Marshall county. ✠ C-U-There. ✠ If you get sun burned try some new skin on the bare spots. ✠ A flat tire can be fixed but a pocket book in that shape has no cure.

Koepp-Johnson

Miss Meta Koepp, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Koepp, and Herbert Johnson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Johnson, were united in marriage Tuesday at the Lutheran parsonage, Rev. L. M. Redal officiating. Miss Ruby Johnson and Mr. Ernest Johnson, a sister and a brother of the groom, witnessed the ceremony.

The bride and groom left at once for Bemidji and Chisholm.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Johnson are well known to residents of this community. The bride has taught rural school for a number of years, and the groom, since returning from Detroit, Mich., where he worked in the auto factories, has helped his father farm in Golden Valley.

The News extends heartiest congratulations to them.

Many Good Features Will Be Seen At County Fair

Presenting to the people of Marshall county and northwestern Minnesota a greater array of attractions than ever before, while space reservations indicate that exhibits will crowd the grounds, everything is in readiness for the 27th Annual Marshall County Fair which will be held at the Fair Grounds in Warren June 29, 30 and July 1.

All Marshall county is taking active interest in the 1933 exposition, with large delegations of residents of this community planning to spend one or more days at the Fair, where they will witness outstanding grand stand acts by professional showmen, races, and many novel and interesting productions by Marshall county people. In addition, everybody will make it a point to see the splendid array of exhibits, both agricultural and industrial, to be made by Marshall county farmers and farm implement distributors.

Opening on Thursday night with a complete grandstand program with feature music by the Alvarado Public School Band together with a series of fast races there will be a continuous round of activity through Saturday night with every program scheduled to have something unusual and worthwhile seeing.

Eastern Marshall county will come to the fair in large numbers on Friday for Eastern Marshall County Day when the Holt Community Band will provide music. Another big feature of the day will include two appearances of the Crookston Ladies Auxiliary Drum and Bugle Corps. Friday night the Marshall County 4-H Club Style Revue in which ten 4-H Club Queens with their attendants will pass in review in competition for the title of Queen of Marshall county and a free trip to the State Fair. Announcements of the winner of this event will not take place until the Saturday night program. In addition there will be fast pony and running races by Marshall and Northern Polk counties' fastest horses.

Community day will be celebrated on Saturday, with two unusual features for Saturday afternoon. Foremost will be the Kiddie Revue, directed by Mrs. H. F. Harrison of Warren. In this revue, twenty kiddies from five to ten years of age will perform in a pretty costume skit featuring the rhythm band. Then too, Saturday afternoon the Champion Marshall County Sheep Shearer will be named as a result of a big Sheep Shearing Contest to be staged in front of the Grandstand. R. A. Trovatten, Commissioner of Agriculture, St. Paul, will deliver a short address Saturday afternoon.

Coronation of the Queen of Marshall County by State Senator Wm. L. Peterson of Lancaster will be the big feature of Saturday night's performance. Announcement of the winners of the contest being staged on Friday night will be made during the Coronation ceremonies.

The Green Mill Follies Revue of thirty-six people, including pretty girls, clever comedians, and fancy dancers, will be the big attraction each evening. This company is one of the best on the road this year and will alone be a worthy attraction to go to the fair to see. The revue will offer a complete change of program each night. Other grandstand acts include The Seven Schallers, hand balancers and physical giants; Four Casting Johns; The Belthazers; Jack and Virginia; Four Aerial Devils; and McMahon & Wheeler, dog and pony circus.

All in all, the 1933 fair promises you complete entertainment and unusually low costs. You will enjoy yourselves immensely when you attend. Meet your friends there.

Rueben Carlson is employed as assistant at the bank.

John Simonson is re-shingling and fixing up his farm buildings.

Chris Saastad made a business trip to Grand Forks Wednesday.

Mr. and Mrs. Iver Larson and family and Lois and Dorothy Hanson spent Sunday visiting at the Willie Sorum and Ole Larson homes.

Rev. John Flint of Underwood called at the News office Saturday, on his way to fill speaking dates at Greenbush, Roseau and Malung.

J. H. Knutson and son Arthur made a trip to Warren last Thursday and got some grasshopper poison to put out on their farms in East Valley.

A number of friends and relatives from St. Hilaire and several ladies in Holt gave Mrs. A. E. Anderson a birthday party last Thursday. She was 90 years old.

Thief River Falls is all set to entertain the members of the Satesdal lag who will meet there today, tomorrow, and Sunday (June 23, 24, and 25) for their annual convention.

4-H Club News

The 4-H Club will meet at the Sunnyside schoolhouse Monday evening, June 26, at 8 p. m.

Lunch will be served at 5 cents a plate.

A large number of Holt residents are planning to attend the Marshall County Fair at Warren next Friday, June 30.

Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Anderson and Stilof visited relatives at Lisbon and Valley City, N. D., last week, returning Saturday.

Red Lake Falls will celebrate the opening of a new bank there July 1. They have been without a bank there for several months.

The Great Northern railway is offering special round trip tickets at reduced rates, to the World's Fair at Chicago and for Fourth of July excursions.

Mr. and Mrs. Theo. Ness, Miss Amanda Fosholm, Mr. and Mrs. Olaf Ness and family, and Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Ness and family spent Sunday at the Red Lake Narrows.

Mr. and Mrs. F. K. Fredrickson, Mr. and Mrs. H. O. Hanson, and Ethel Nohre are on a trip through North Dakota and eastern Montana this week. They left by car last Friday morning.

Among those who attended the Legion convention at Crookston Sunday were: Mr. and Mrs. O. E. Sovde and Lowell, Mr. and Mrs. Carl Peterson and family, Mr. and Mrs. Renie Werner and family, and Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Nelson.

Sons and Daughters of Sweden to Have Picnic

The American Sons and Daughters of Sweden, of Thief River Falls, are staging their annual Mid-Summer Picnic with the same organization of Warren, in the City Park at Warren, Minnesota, on Sunday, June 25. The program, consisting of speaking, musical numbers, and vocal selections, will begin at 2 p. m. Lunch and refreshments will be served at the grounds. A large gathering is expected for the occasion.

Economic and Monetary Conference Opens in London—Illinois and Indiana for Prohibition Repeal—Varied Doings in Congress.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

R. W. Morrison

SIXTY-SIX nations were represented by some of their best financial and economic authorities when King George formally opened the world economic and monetary conference in London. It was a momentous occasion, for on the results obtained from the conference depends in great measure the welfare of the world, at least in the immediate future. The delegates will be in session for many weeks, and the success of their deliberations rests on the mutual concessions that may be made, for no one nation or group of nations can expect to obtain only advantages.

Most vital of the problems to be tackled is admittedly the stabilization of currencies, which involves the return of all nations to the gold standard or at least to a metallic standard; and this return must be a synchronous movement so that all countries will be on the same level at all times. In the debate on this question leading parts will be taken by Senator Key Pittman of Nevada and Ralph W. Morrison, retired banker of Texas, the members of the American delegation to whom the monetary problem was especially given for formulation of the policy of the United States.

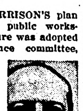
Senator Pittman before the conference opened told something of a plan he had devised by which the nations could use silver as a certain percentage of their currency reserves, thereby economizing on gold and stabilizing the price of silver. He insisted this would not constitute bimetallism as gold would still be the standard. The nations appear to be in agreement, Mr. Pittman said, that the currency reserve of gold should be lowered below the 40 per cent now required in the United States. Twenty-five per cent gold coverage was mentioned for purposes of illustration by the senator, who said that one-fifth of this reserve should be silver.

When the price of silver was low the governments would buy and maintain reserves of the metal, which they could sell when the price was up, the senator said.

The other major aims of the conference are the raising of the world price level, and the lowering of international trade barriers. Of course the three are inextricably intertwined, and they affect all other problems that will come up. Back of it all is the matter of the ten billions odd owed by European nations to the United States. War debts were excluded from the agenda by Washington, but they will be continually in the minds of many of the delegates and eventually something must be done about them.

ILLINOIS and Indiana by popular vote added themselves to the list of states that assure their ratification of the amendment repealing prohibition. In the former state the vote was about 4 to 1 in favor of the wets, and the Hoosiers voted for repeal by approximately 2 to 1. There had been no doubt as to the result in Illinois, but Indiana, long one of the driest of states and the very center of the Anti-Saloon league's power, was counted on by the prohibitionists to stand against ratification. One of their leaders, L. E. York, explained their defeat by saying:

"The repealists had ample funds supplied by the breweries and distillers and the state organization had paid workers at the polls."



Sen. Harrison

SENATOR PAT HARRISON'S plan for financing the public works-industry control measure was adopted by the senate finance committee, which then reported out the bill for debate. The backbone of the Harrison program, which is calculated to raise $227,000,000, is a capital stock tax of one-tenth of 1 per cent on the net worth of corporations. This tax is expected to raise $80,000,000. Corporations are to be allowed to declare their own valuation, and as check on this provision a penalty tax is provided of 5 per cent on surplus profits of more than 12½ per cent.

Second feature of the Harrison program is the imposition, in lieu of normal tax rates levied on the individual as the house bill contemplated, of a 5 per cent tax on corporation dividends to be levied at the source. This is expected to bring in $73,000,000.

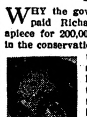
Third is an additional one-half cent tax on gasoline, calculated to raise $82,000,000, instead of the three-fourths of a cent tax proposed by the house.

The railroad reorganization bill and the $2,000,000,000 home mortgage measure were among the important bills in conference. The latter was passed by the senate without a record vote.

DEMOCRATIC revolt against some of President Roosevelt's measures created discord in both the house and the senate and the administration's program for national recovery was not having a smooth road. The first upset had been the senate's action in voting a 25 per cent limitation on reductions in compensation payments to war veterans, which added about $170,000,000 to the independent offices appropriation bill before it was sent to conference. Mr. Roosevelt, accepting his first defeat, sought peace by compromise. At his direction new regulations were prepared governing the payments to disabled war veterans and to the dependents of deceased soldiers, under which the veterans would receive an additional $50,000,000 or $60,000,000 over that which was contemplated in the President's original orders.

The reduction in payments under the new orders would be about $400,000,000 instead of the $450,000,000 originally contemplated. The veterans' bloc in congress was not at all enthusiastic over this compromise.

CYRUS H. K. CURTIS of Philadelphia, one of the oldest and best known of American newspaper and magazine publishers, died at his home at the age of eighty-three years. He had been ill since May of last year when he was stricken with heart disease while on his yacht near New York. The Ladies Home Journal, the Saturday Evening Post and the Country Gentleman were Mr. Curtis' magazines, and he was also president of the Curtis-Martin Newspapers, Inc., publishing the Philadelphia Inquirer, the Public Ledger, and the Evening Public Ledger in Philadelphia, and the New York Evening Post. His gifts to charitable and educational institutions totaled many millions.



Louis Howe

WHY the government should have paid Richard B. BeVier $1.40 apiece for 200,000 toilet kits for men in the conservation corps—a price that the War department said was 55 cents too high—was a question that the senate military committee found hard to answer. Louis McHenry Howe, secretary to the President, talked with BeVier 15 minutes before the signing of the contract by Robert Fechner, director of the conservation corps, but Mr. Howe told the committee he never directly or indirectly attempted to influence any decision as to the purchase. He said he transferred the whole matter to F. W. Lowery, assistant to Budget Director Douglas. Then Mr. Lowery took the stand and declared he never had any responsibility in the matter, simply making a recommendation to Mr. Fechner. This Mr. Fechner testified he construed as an order.

There was no least intimation of improper motives on the part of any of the gentlemen involved, but the senators seemed agreed that Mr. BeVier was a "supersalesman."

When Mr. Howe was on the stand Senator Dickinson of Iowa asked him why he did not turn the matter over to the War department instead of "starting up all this new purchasing machinery."

"Well," Mr. Howe replied, "this seemed to be a complaint against the War department itself. I was told the War department was about to make a purchase that would be disadvantageous to the government."

"Who said it would be disadvantageous?" asked Senator Robert D. Carey of Wyoming.

"Mr. BeVier," responded Howe.

CREDIT must be given the council of the League of Nations for inducing the Hitler government of Germany to abandon part of its warfare on the Jews. The council, acting on the petition of a resident of upper Silesia, unanimously adopted a report declaring that the boycott of Jewish shops in that territory and some regulations affecting doctors, lawyers and notaries were in conflict with the Polish-German minorities convention. Thereupon Friedrich von Kellar, spokesman for the reich, told the council the German government would restore Jews in German upper Silesia to positions they had lost since the beginning of the Nazi regime.

WHEN Princeton's scholastic year opens in the fall the old university will have a new president, its fifteenth. He is Dr. Harold Willis Dodds, who has been professor of politics in the university and chairman of the administrative board of the school of public and international affairs.

Professor Dodds, who is not quite forty-four years old, is the youngest man to be chosen for the presidency of Princeton in 175 years. He is recognized as an international expert on electoral methods, and is regarded as an authority on municipal government.

CONVENTIONS by the dozens and scores are being held in Chicago this year, numerous especially because of the World's fair. Most of them are commercial or professional, but among them was one, just held, that exhaled a delightful perfume. It was the annual meeting of the Garden Clubs of America, held in the Drake hotel which overlooks Grant park and the lake front. The organization is a federation of local garden clubs whose members are for the most part women of position and means in their various communities. Their interests are especially in the conservation of wild flowers, the preservation of the redwoods of California and the elimination of the billboard along highways. Mrs. Jonathan Bulkley of New York city was re-elected national president. Mrs. Oakley Thorne of Millbrook, N. Y., is the honorary vice president. The hostess clubs were the organizations in Lake Forest, Kenilworth and Evanston.

A feature of the convention was a supper held in the Shedd aquarium, where the ladies gave evidence that their interest in gardening included an interest in the culture of gold fish in rock garden pools.

O. P. Van Sweringen

FERDINAND PECORA, counsel for the senate committee that has been investigating the doings of J. P. Morgan Co., undertook to bring to light the details of the operations by which the Van Sweringen brothers of Cleveland financed their extensive railroad expansion. He said he intended to show that those men, with associates, "purchase railroads with money paid by the public, but always they sit in the saddle." O. P. Van Sweringen was the chief witness, and he was the "forgettingest" witness yet to appear before the committee. To almost all Mr. Pecora's questions he replied, "I don't recall," or "I don't remember," until he drew a sharp rebuke from Senator Barkley, who was presiding.

"It seems incredible that a man of as large affairs as yours could have so little information about them," the Kentucky senator said sharply.

"I don't want to depend on guesswork," Van Sweringen replied.

About all he remembered was that he and his associates received from the Morgan firm two loans totaling almost $40,000,000 on October 21, 1930.

Persistently, however, Mr. Pecora drove at two matters—first, to show that the Van Sweringens had built up their railroad holdings, not through investment of their own money, but through borrowings, the pyramiding of holding companies, and the sale of holding company securities to the public; second, to show the rise of the Morgan interest in the Van Sweringen holdings, beginning with equipment loans which were used in several instances to buy from companies doing business with the Morgans, and ending, as future evidence is meant to show, by Morgan & Co. acquiring control over the Van Sweringen interests.

VOCIFEROUSLY and loudly Senator Arthur R. Robinson of Indiana, Republican, demanded in the senate that Secretary of the Treasury Woodin be impeached and that Norman Davis, "ambassador at large," be recalled, because their names were on the lists of "preferred" investors of the house of Morgan. And he included in his denunciation Robert Worth Bingham, ambassador to Great Britain.

"I say you have a secretary of the treasury that ought to be removed immediately because the American people have no confidence in him," shouted Senator Robinson. "Time after time he accepted gratuities from the house of Morgan. Is he beholden to Morgan? Of course he is, or else he is an ingrate. If the President does not remove him, the senate should impeach him."

R. T. Sherwood

RUSSELL T. SHERWOOD, that elusive gentleman who was reputedly the financial and business agent of Jimmy Walker while the latter was mayor of New York, and who disappeared when he was wanted as a witness during the Seabury inquiry into Walker's affairs, came back from hiding and was promptly called before a federal grand jury in New York that was investigating the former mayor's income tax returns. His attorney, Michael F. Dee, was in an anteroom but Sherwood did not call on him for advice, which was taken as an indication that he answered fully and freely all questions put to him. When dismissed Sherwood hurried to his temporary residence in New Jersey so that he would not be arrested on the state charges pending since he fled during the Seabury inquiry. At that time he was fined $50,000 for contempt, and, as Attorney Dee said, he did not wish to be jailed for default in payment of the fine.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT nominated South Trimble, Jr., of Kentucky to be solicitor for the Department of Commerce.

He also sent to the senate the following nominations of United States attorneys: John A. Garver for Idaho, William J. Barker for New Mexico, Carl C. Donaugh for Oregon, and William McClanahan for western Tennessee.

GOOD MENUS FOR SUMMER PARTIES

Hints for Planning Dinners or Luncheons.

By EDITH M. BARBER

Early summer brings with it many excuses for throwing a party. There are brides to be entertained, graduates to be honored, guests who choose this pleasant season to visit, and then there are farewell parties for those lucky persons who are going to Europe or some other place for the summer.

If we ourselves are going off to a summer cottage there may be a party or two which we have been intending to have all winter still left on the list. And then there are those parties, perhaps the nicest of all, which we have for no reason at all, except that we like to have our friends in our house.

I have been having half a dozen or so of my friends at a time for dinner recently, and you may like to hear what I chose for the menu. One began with half an avocado filled with fresh crab meat mixed with a sauce made of mayonnaise, chili sauce, worcestershire and curry. If you like, you may sprinkle a little lemon juice on the pear before you fill it. Then came broilers, split, covered with sliced onions and baked three-quarters of an hour in a hot oven. With this I served noodles dressed with butter, browned almonds and poppy seed! The vegetable was asparagus with brown butter and grated cheese. Relishes were chutney, olives and celery, and jelly as well as Melba toast were passed. The salad was sliced cucumbers, endive and chives, mixed with a highly seasoned french dressing and served in a large bowl. Toasted crackers and cheese and guava jelly were passed with it. I omitted dessert and served coffee in the living room.

Another day dinner began with a tomato juice cocktail, with which thin cucumber sandwiches, stuffed celery and ripe olives were passed. Then came broiled ham with a cream gravy, corn griddle cakes made of the water-ground meal and baked at the table. Peas dressed with a little cream, enough to flavor them but not to make them too moist to serve on the dinner plate, furnished the vegetable. Peach jam and mustard pickles were passed. For a salad I chose a mixed vegetable salad and served frozen dried beef with it. The dessert was more corn cakes with fresh maple sirup.

This was also true at an informal dinner in the country recently, which began with mixed hors d'oeuvres. The soup was strong beef broth with whole kernel corn and toast sticks. The main course was roast duck with fried apples, potatoes in the half shell, creamed spinach, buttered beets and tiny hot bran muffins. There was jelly, mixed pickles and spiced grapefruit rind also. The salad was made up of lettuce, grapefruit and tiny balls of cream cheese served in a large bowl and dressed with a spicy dressing. Dessert was coffee marshmallow mousse with fresh sponge cake.

In selecting menus for luncheon or dinner do not hesitate to break all the usual cook-book rules for these menus. If you have any specialty, serve it, even if it is unusual to find a dish of this sort at this particular type of meal. Your friends will not only enjoy it, but for once they will demand it again, as for instance they did at a certain house where they were disappointed if the dessert was not old-fashioned rice pudding!

Frozen Dried Beef.

12 slices dried beef
½ cup cream
1 tablespoon horseradish
½ apple, scraped or grated

Whip cream, add horseradish and apple. Mix well and drop a teaspoonful into each piece of beef. Roll up and place into freezing trays and freeze in automatic refrigerator several hours.

Cocktail Sauce.

1 cup catsup
2 tablespoons tarragon vinegar
¼ teaspoon tobasco sauce
1 teaspoon worcestershire sauce
Salt
1 tablespoon horseradish
1 tablespoon celery, finely minced
1 tablespoon onion, finely minced

Mix ingredients thoroughly and serve with oysters, clams or any sea food.

Asparagus With Brown Butter and Cheese.

1 bunch asparagus
⅛ cup butter
¼ cup grated cheese

Cook asparagus. Arrange on platter and dress with brown butter. To prepare brown butter melt butter in frying pan and brown slightly, add grated cheese and stir well. Pour over asparagus.

Quick Meal.

Tomato juice cocktail
Lamb chop. Potato chips
Fresh peas in cream
Lettuce with french dressing
Ice Cream cake with strawberries
Coffee

Lamb chops are always the standby of the busy housekeeper. Fresh peas are so good and so reasonable that we are tempted to use them more often than when they were a luxury. A crisp lettuce salad with a highly seasoned french dressing goes well with almost any dinner.

For dessert a combination of vanilla ice cream, crushed strawberries and sponge cake makes what is known sometimes as an ice cream sandwich and sometimes as an ice cream cake. Of course, you can omit the cake and have a homemade sundae.

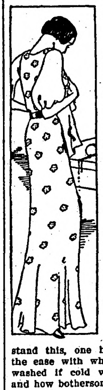
The Household

By LYDIA LE BARON WALKER

The time to remove a spot or stain is just as soon as it is made. Then it comes out easiest. It does not set and the extraneous substance get ingrained with the fibers of the weave. Unfortunately it is not always possible to apply removing agents immediately, but it should be remembered that much time and trouble is saved by such expediency.



Another thing that helps in the effective removal of spots and stains is the knowledge of what made them, for one agent will be required for one substance, and a different one will be needed for another. This is why when taking a spotted or stained garment to a cleaners, the question is always asked, "Can you tell what made the discoloration?" One can see its importance.

Here are some simple things to remember. Spots caused by egg, meat juices and blood, or gravy respond to cold water. Hot water sets the albumen and increases the difficulty of the work. To understand this, one has only to realize the ease with which egg dishes are washed if cold water is first used, and how bothersome it is to get them clean quickly if, by accident, the hot water runs over them. If the substance is a textile fibre, the difficulty of removal is increased, for the same hardening of the albumen occurs.

Gravy stains will require two treatments, but the cold water application should come first. The reason why two different processes are needed is that gravy consists of both meat juices and fat. The cold water takes out the blood, but it hardens the fat. So a second process to remove the grease is needed. Hot water will take out grease stains.

Double and Triple Agents.

Ice cream spots on textiles usually require two processes for removal, one for the fat in the cream, the other for the coloring and when eggs are an ingredient, the cold water treatment may make a third. Use cold water first for it will take out whatever responds to it. Then for fruit pour boiling water through the spot. Having done these things, wash the places with white laundry soap and warm water.

The various remedies given are applicable to wash goods and those in which colors are fast. The textiles may be wool, cotton, linen, silk—any kinds which are not impaired by hot and cold water and white laundry soap.

Encouraging Friendship.

"All my friends like you," I heard one young woman say to another.

"You say such nice things about me," was the reply. "Everyone is looking for the nice qualities you tell them I have."

This was all I heard, but it was enough to set me thinking of the influence on others that our remarks about people make. We can set the minds working to make friends or to break them, to make persons wish to know those of whom we speak, or to hesitate to meet them. We can light a torch of friendship and hand it to another, and it will lighten her mind to see the good points in those we love. We can dim the brightness of friendships by uttering comments derogatory of others. In such little ways as passing comments can we render persons agreeable or disagreeable to know.

There is more said about the strife which unkindly remarks cause than about the harmony which kind words create. It is a mistake not to accent the good as much as the bad when the good is equally potent, and good words are as powerful as unkind ones. The nice things we say have as strong an influence as the disagreeable ones.

Stuffed Baked Potatoes.

Select medium-size potatoes. Bake in a hot oven, 450 degrees Fahrenheit, 10 minutes, then lower the temperature to 350 degrees Fahrenheit and bake until soft when pressed with a towel. Remove from the oven, and cut potatoes in halves at once. Take out contents and mash with milk, butter, seasoning and minced parsley. Return to shells and bake in a hot oven, 500 degrees Fahrenheit, until brown.

Baked Tomatoes.

Remove thin slices from the stem-ends of smooth, medium-sized tomatoes. Take out the pulp, add an equal quantity of bread crumbs, season with salt, pepper and onion juice, and refill the tomatoes with the mixture. Place in a buttered pan, sprinkle with buttered crumbs and bake 20 minutes in a hot oven, 450 degrees Fahrenheit.

Lemon Butter.

Melt one-fourth cupful butter—do not brown. Add two tablespoonfuls lemon juice and one tablespoonful minced parsley and reheat, being careful not to brown mixture.

Hints for Those Fond of Rhubarb

Delicious in Combinations, or Served Without Additions.

Suggestions for serving the always delicious rhubarb are always in order. The following methods are set forth by a recognized expert:

Fresh rhubarb pie plant and spring were once synonomous. Now, like most other vegetables and fruits, its city season is long extended both by shipments from warmer places and by hothouse forcing. Early summer, however, does bring a drop in price and puts it into the class from which it rose.

Every town backyard used to have its own supply of "pie plant," some of it pretty sour and tough, but which when cooked with plenty of sugar made a sauce or a pie whose tang seemed just what we needed for that jaded appetite.

Rhubarb of today is lovelier in color, with its deep pink contrast to the light green of the stalks. The skin is usually so tender that it need not be removed, and therefore color may be preserved during cooking. To keep the color, and keep the pieces in shape, there are two "best" ways to cook rhubarb — one is to bake it with sugar in a covered casserole—the other is to cook it over hot water in a double boiler.

Some people like to serve rhubarb hot, although I think the average person likes the sauce cold. There may be the addition of raisins during the last few minutes of cooking, or the combination of the cold sauce with sliced bananas or oranges or with cooked prunes. Rhubarb cut in small pieces and chilled in its syrup makes a good foundation for a fruit cup, with any other fruits you may like to use.

Most puddings made with rhubarb are best hot, it seems to me, as it is with those made of apples. In fact, almost any good apple recipe can be adapted to rhubarb with the use of some extra sugar. There is brown betty, bread and butter pudding, or tapioca pudding.

Rhubarb, with its tartness, makes a good component of marmalade—the more elaborate conserves. Sweeter fruits, such as pineapple or cherries, and sweet oranges, contrast well with it. It can so often be found at such a low price that it makes an economical foundation for other more expensive fruits.

Rhubarb pie is associated in my mind especially with American cooking, although probably in its tart form it may be found in other countries. I do not seem to remember having it any place but in this country, when it was combined with pastry. Individual shortcakes with rhubarb sauce are surely an American origination. A few strawberries add color and form to this dessert.

While we probably do not give it the enthusiastic welcome which was given it by our ancestors, who were deprived of fresh fruit all the winter, we still give it our appreciation. By the way, I suppose rhubarb is really a vegetable, as the tomato is really a fruit, but we nevertheless use them to the contrary.

Rhubarb and Pineapple.

Take equal parts of rhubarb, cut in one-inch pieces, and fresh pineapple diced. Add two cups of sugar to one quart of fruit. Let stand one or more hours. Place in saucepan, let heat slowly until sugar is dissolved and cook without stirring until rhubarb is soft but not broken. Cool and serve.

HOW SHE LOST 29 POUNDS IN 3 MONTHS

"I am using your Kruschen Salts to reduce and I've used a bottle and a half and dieted some and lost 29 pounds in 3 months. I feel so much better and intend to keep on taking the Salts as I was almost 50 pounds overweight." Mrs. Thelma Gravely, Roseville, Calif. (Jan. 11, 1933).

To lose fat and at the same time gain in physical attractiveness and feel spirited and youthful take one half teaspoonful of Kruschen in a glass of hot water before breakfast every morning.

A jar that lasts 4 weeks costs but a trifle at any drugstore in the world but be sure and get Kruschen Salts the SAFE way to reduce wide hips, prominent front and double chin and again feel the joy of living—money back if dissatisfied after the first jar.

The SILVER FLUTE

SYNOPSIS

On her eighteenth birthday, Barbara, motherless daughter of Christopher Thorne, lovable but impractical artist, awakes with lively anticipation of the joys of the day. She receives, among other presents, a birthday ring from Bruce MacLain, young artist friend of the family, but more than friend to Barbara. Barbara and Bruce go picknicking on the sands at Provincetown.

"It's like the storm Manuel tells about." Barbara's voice was tinged with awe. "You remember, Bruce—when seventeen men were drowned. That storm came on a beautiful day."

Thinking of Manuel's story made her suddenly afraid. Why? She didn't know. It was like something seen through a fog, a dim white ghost of fear. She shivered and pressed closer to Bruce.

"Frightened?" he asked, conscious of the shiver.

She nodded, seeing it still, the dim white ghost of fear.

"Why?"

"I don't know. Sing to me, Bruce."

"I'll tell you a story instead."

"That will be nice." She nestled against him, sighed. "A happy story, please."

Child, Bruce thought, feeling still the hurt of her unconcerned, "I hope you'll have a nice trip." He saw her fingers curling around his hand and all other emotions were lost in tenderness. She was a frightened child, clinging to him, wanting to be comforted. . . .

"Once upon a time," he began, his lips close to her ear, "there was a gypsy boy who loved very dearly a little gypsy girl. Her face was the shape of a heart. The boy thought it was a beautiful face. He saw it everywhere, in the clouds, in the forest pools, in the flames of the gypsy fire. . . ."

Barbara, listening, almost held her breath. Was it only a story? She forgot the storm, forgot to be frightened. Was Bruce talking to her?

"They played in the woodland together," he continued, "the gypsy boy and the gypsy girl whose face was the shape of a heart. The boy didn't dare to tell her he loved her because she was a little girl, no higher than his heart, and he wasn't sure that she knew about being in love. . . ."

Barbara's heart beat fast. A ring of twisted gold! She pressed it against her cheek.

"The boy had a silver flute," Bruce continued. "He played it only for her. At night whne the moon was shining he played for her on his silver flute. The flute knew only one song—'I love you, little gypsy girl with the roses in your hair.' He hoped she would understand the song of the silver flute. He hoped she would love him, too. . . ."

She heard it singing in her heart, the song of the silver flute. It was amazing but it was true. Barbara lifted her head, saw the expression in Bruce's eyes, saw and understood. The smile that was close to tears touched her lips again.

"She understands," she said softly. "She knows about being in love."

The storm had blown itself out. The wind was quiet, now, and sunset colors, deepening into night, streaked the sky in the west. The storm was no longer a menace.

"Happy?" Bruce asked, above the noise of the engine.

"Mmm!" Barbara nestled closer into the curve of his arm. It wasn't all being happy, she thought. She felt different, older, quite grown up. It didn't seem possible that only this morning she had been perfectly happy because it was her birthday and there were going to be presents and a party.

"Bruce," she said, thinking aloud.

"Hmm?"

"I'll never be perfectly happy again."

"Why not?" he asked, surprised and a little hurt.

"Because," she gravely explained, "I'll always be thinking about all the taxis that could run over you, and germs and bombs and things."

"Darling!" The anxiety in her voice amused and touched him. "Go with me tomorrow," he said softly. "Don't let's wait."

"I couldn't, Bruce," she said firmly, although her heart beat faster at the thought. "If we put in a heater, I'll have to be here because anybody could cheat Father. And I'll have to see Miss Abbie about making some dresses for Gay, and Jamie ought to have his tonsils out and—"

"Fall house cleaning, I suppose," he teased.

"Don't tease, Bruce." Her hand on his arm asked him to understand. "You know how Father is. He's a darling but he just doesn't know about dresses and tonsils and things. I—" Her voice trembled. "I don't know how they'll manage—"

Bruce heard a stifled sob. His arm tightened around her.

"They'll manage," he said. "Martha is efficient. And you'll be here in the summer. Perhaps in a year or two we can give up the job in New York. . . . At Christmas, Babbie"—his lips were against her hair—"if you won't go with me tomorrow?"

"Yes," she promised gravely. "If Father doesn't mind."

"Darling! I love you so much."

There were lights in the gray-shingled house. Together they unlatched the gate and walked up the path to the steps.

"What will your father say?" Bruce asked, holding tight to her hand.

"Father loved Mother very much," she answered softly. "I think he will understand."

She stood on the lowest step and the light from the fanlight fell on her curly brown hair. Bruce saw, in the deepening dusk, her shining dark eyes, the grave little smile that curved her soft red lips.

"Babbie," he asked, "do you hear it now—the song of the silver flute?"

"I'll always hear it," she said.

"Always?"

"Forever and ever."

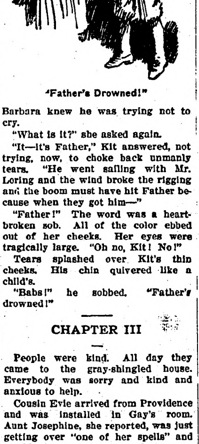
"Darling, darling! I love you so much."

The front door opened and Kit stood in the rectangle of light.

"Is that you, Babs?" His voice sounded strained and hoarse.

"What is it?" she asked, her heart thumping wildly with fright.

"I—we—" Kit paused and gulped.



"Father's Drowned!"

Barbara knew he was trying not to cry.

"What is it?" she asked again.

"It—it's Father," Kit answered, not trying, now, to choke back unmanly tears. "He went sailing with Mr. Loring and the wind broke the rigging and the boom must have hit Father because when they got him—"

"Father!" The word was a heartbroken sob. All of the color ebbed out of her cheeks. Her eyes were tragically large. "Oh no, Kit! No!"

Tears splashed over Kit's thin cheeks. His chin quivered like a child's.

"Babs!" he sobbed. "Father's drowned!"

CHAPTER III

People were kind. All day they came to the gray-shingled house. Everybody was sorry and kind and anxious to help.

Cousin Evie arrived from Providence and was installed in Gay's room. Aunt Josephine, she reported, was just getting over "one of her spells" and would come as soon as the doctor gave her permission to travel. Cousin Evie was tall and thin with crimped yellow-gray hair and a long pink nose. In Providence she was merely Aunt Josephine's echo, a "poor relation," often enough snubbed and disregarded. In the gray-shingled house she felt important.

Cousin Julia came from Augusta, Maine, and Jamie moved up with Kit. Cousin Julia felt important wherever she was because she was Aunt Josephine's daughter. She was large and rosy and handsome and very efficient and kind.

Aunt Lola wired from Florida, where she had gone for the winter. She was leaving at once, the telegram said. Uncle Herbert wired from his office in Pittsburgh that business would detain him there until the end of the week. After that, he would start for Provincetown. He and Aunt Emma and the boys sent sympathy and love.

The Thornes clung to each other, dazed, bewildered, shaken with grief. The house no longer seemed their own, a pleasant friendly place. It was, all at once, so painfully tidy and neat. They were more comfortable out of doors. There, at least, everything was as it had always been.

They sat together on the studio steps, Gay pressing close to Kit, Jamie's head against Barbara's knee, "Chips" stretched out in the sunshine across their feet. Sometimes they talked about Father, remembering little things; sometimes they were silent and each knew what the others were thinking though no one put it into words. They were to be separated again—this time, perhaps, forever.

The thought was never far from Barbara's mind. She grieved for Father deeply and sincerely, but the thought that the children might be separated was, somehow, harder to bear. There were times when she hoped that it needn't happen. Lying awake in the low carved bed, with Gay asleep beside her, she made elaborate plans. She would sell Father's paintings, the lovely ones in the attic. She would start a shop in the studio, hooked rugs and china and etchings. She would take boarders in the summer. Somehow she would manage to keep the children together.

On Approval

By ROSA Z. MARIONONI

©, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Service

MEREDITH was walking home hurriedly, her feet rippling under her, her cheeks flushed, her heart beating queerly; she wondered if the two gowns which were to be delivered on approval had preceded her home; she hoped they had, and wished they had not.

As Meredith walked along she felt conscious of two voices in her debating the issue which stood out before her. One thin, care-free voice was saying: "There is no harm in your wearing the lace gown tonight. Nothing will happen to it. Elmer will be proud of you before his friends." And another voice, a worried little voice, was saying: "What if something should happen to the gown while you wear it tonight and Elmer should find out you are wearing a dress which you do not intend buying? He is so scrupulously honest, he would never forgive such an underhanded action on your part."

Tonight was the first time since their marriage that Elmer had dared invite Mr. Sanders to his home. Mr. Sanders was the district manager of the company which employed Elmer.

When she had told Elmer about her not having a dress fit to wear at dinner, Elmer had quickly suggested that she buy a new one.

"I noticed in the paper that Lander's are having a sale," Meredith had said. "Dinner dresses priced at nineteen ninety-eight."

At this Elmer had smilingly written a check for nineteen ninety-eight. The writing of the check had meant a sacrifice for Elmer, and Meredith had felt all the more grateful for the gift.

That very morning she had gone shopping and while trying on some of the dinner dresses priced $19.98, the saleswoman had been called away. As Meredith waited for her, she had noticed an exquisite gown of blue lace over silver cloth hanging on a wall peg. She had glanced at the size and price tag. The gown was her size, but it was marked fifty-nine dollars. An insidious thought had entered her mind. "I could have this lace gown sent home on approval, wear it tonight, then return it."

When that evening the clock struck six, Meredith stood before her bedroom mirror gowned in lace and silver. As Elmer entered the room to say that Mr. Sanders had arrived, he remained breathlessly looking at her. And he was afraid to kiss her, fearing to rumple the lace and silver that made a picture of her.

"You look marvelous!" he told her. When they entered the little drawing room, Meredith's heart felt queerly cool as Elmer said with high pride in his voice, "Mr. Sanders, this is my wife."

"How do you do," she smiled; and thought, "I feel as if I were a thief."

It was about nine o'clock when Elmer suddenly said: "I think I hear the baby crying," and jovially, "Mr. Sanders, you must see our baby! You must!" Then turning to Meredith, "Go and bring in the little rascal, I want to show him off." Meredith went to the bedroom. The baby had stopped crying, she took him gently in her arms, afraid he'd crush her dress.

Mr. Sanders proved interesting to Bobby, for he had a gold watch chain and sparkling spectacles. Elmer was beaming. Mr. Sanders tried to be gracious. Suddenly the baby began to bob himself up and down in Meredith's arms. Mr. Sanders' spectacles had attracted his attention, his chubby hands reached toward Mr. Sanders' face, the gentleman slanted backward. "Better take the baby back to bed," suggested Elmer.

As Meredith turned away, the baby gave one high-pitched cry, the tiny fist closed above the mother's lace bodice, tearing, pulling.

Meredith ran into the bedroom, the child in her arms.

Time passed, the baby fell asleep, the young mother kept crying. When Elmer tiptoed into his wife's bedroom and gently touched her shoulder, she looked up at him, her eyes brimming with tears, her lips trembling, her face swollen from crying.

"What is the matter? You've been weeping," exclaimed Elmer.

"Oh, Elmer, look, the baby tore my dress!"

Elmer sat beside his wife attempting to console her but the more he tried to pacify her, the more she clung to him and wept. Suddenly, she sank her head on his shoulder and told him all, and when she had finished she was only conscious of Elmer kissing her and whispering, "My poor little girl." Elmer felt a protective pity toward his wife. He told her he would fix matters. In the morning he would go to the agent and try to have his insurance payment postponed a few months—Elmer was worried, but he did not wish Meredith to know how much.

Meredith rose to her feet, smiling through the tears, opened the closet door. "Look, here is the other gown, the one I should have worn," she said pointing to the marigold satin dress. "I'd better put it back in its box before something happens to it, too."

"Yes, let's," said Elmer. "I'll take it back myself in the morning."

As Meredith reached under the bed and pulled out the boxes, the sales ticket fell to the floor. Elmer picked it up and glanced at it. For a moment his face became tense, then his lips parted. "Look at this! Read," he cried, pointing to the sales ticket. "Two dresses on approval. Both priced at nineteen ninety-eight!"

Dog Team and Plane Aid in Rescue Work

Cogama, Ont.—An airplane and a dog team, representing the new and old in transportation, figured in the rescue of an Ojibway Indian, who was seriously ill with influenza. His cabin is located on the shores of an isolated lake, 40 miles north of here.

Word that the Indian, Ignace Twain, eighty-five, was seriously ill was brought by dog team to Fort Matachewan. It was relayed by telephone to the Ontario forestry department at Elk lake and from there by wireless to Sudbury, Ont.

Immediately a plane, carrying a doctor, set out for the isolated cabin and in twelve hours the Indian was lying in a hospital here. It took the Indian messenger three days to bring the message to Fort Matachewan.

LIFE OF CRIME IS REVEALED IN NOTE

Suicide Says "Fences" Take Profits of Robbery.

Chicago.—At the end of the road after a lifetime of crime, a man using the name of "Dr. Henry Clayton" killed himself with a stolen revolver.

The staff of the Clark Manor apartment hotel, where the "old doctor" ended his life, said that during the two weeks he had lived there, he had impressed them by his precise diction and professional bearing.

Yet, in a note to his wife, Mrs. Hattie Campbell, which indicated that she was serving time in New York state prison at Auburn, "Dr. Clayton" dropped into the argot of the criminal.

The letter told how the veteran criminal, close to seventy, had learned that he had an incurable ailment, and that he was living in fear, sustained by drugs and liquor.

Time had dealt shabbily with the "smart old doctor," he wrote, and from one hundred recent confidence games and robberies that should have been good for $25,000, he realized only 10 per cent of that amount in dealing with "fences."

The woman accomplice had deserted him, he revealed, and heroin, to relieve the pain of his ailment, was costing from $25 to $60 "for stuff that is cut three ways." And he added:

"'The Eye' is closing in on me, and a pinch now means anything from twenty to fifty years, so I have decided to take the Dutch route and square up with all my creditors."

Any criminal will tell you that "The Eye" is the Pinkerton organization.

"The doctor told me I was through," he concluded, "and so I decided to operate on myself—with a .45 revolver."

Gets Prison Term for Theft of Two Horses

Indianapolis, Ind.—An alleged horse thief—something unusual in these days of motorized transportation—was sentenced to one to ten years in the Indiana State prison by Judge Frank P. Baker, in Criminal court.

William L. Curtice, age forty-two, pleaded guilty to grand larceny in connection with the theft of two horses and two wagons two years ago.

At that time, it was alleged, Curtice appeared at a stable at 1124 West New York street and "rented" a horse and wagon. Then he went to 426 West Pearl street and rented another horse and wagon. It was the last the owners saw of Curtice until he was recognized at a sale by one of them a few weeks ago.

Curtice said he rented the horses for "another party" and that he presumed that person would return them. It was not learned what became of the horses and wagons.

Truckman So Sleepy He Snores in Court Room

New York.—Snores disturbed the calm of traffic court.

Magistrate Greenspan had an attendant awake the sleeper, Vincent Messina, delivery truck driver. Messina explained he had been driving his machine all night and had gone to court without returning home.

The magistrate suspended sentence on a charge of passing a red traffic light and directed Messina to go home to get some sleep.

Whisky Puts Infant to Sleep During Operation

Sacramento, Calif.—Whisky is an anesthetic.

At a hospital here recently surgeons were confronted with the problem of obtaining an anesthetic for use on a one-month-old baby so they might perform an operation.

A sufficient number of drops of whisky produced the required unconsciousness and the surgeons operated.

Woman Owns Valuable Civil War Time Relics

Milton, Mass.—Collecting Civil war relics is Miss Mary Forbes' hobby. She has 500 of them. Recent additions to her collection include a piece of black cloth from the funeral car that bore Abraham Lincoln's body to Springfield, Ill.; a piece of walnut hand rail from the private box Lincoln occupied in Ford's theater the night he was assassinated, and a piece of rail which Lincoln supposedly split.

News of Minnesota
EVENTS of the week throughout the "State of Ten Thousand Lakes" told in brief form

Battle Lake—The Old Settlers picnic will be held July 3.

Minneapolis—A grain elevator burned to the ground after two dust explosions started the blaze.

Pipestone—An all-time heat record for early June was set when the mercury rose to 99.5 degrees.

Chaska—Free open-air band concerts will be held here each Saturday evening during the summer.

Red Wing—Milk producers and distributors announce an increase in milk prices of two cents a quart.

Dassel—The First Lutheran and the Swan Lake Lutheran churches observed their sixtieth anniversary.

St. Paul—State highway patrols have been instructed to tag motorists who are still using 1932 license plates.

Hutchinson—The sixty-fourth annual convention of the German Baptist churches of the state was held here.

Minneapolis — One hundred fifty thousand dollars in federal relief money has been made available to the city.

Fairfax—A crowd estimated at about 10,000 gathered in the Fort Ridgeley State Park, for a festival of music in which more than 400 musicians took part.

St. Paul—Major Minnesota industries will be organized at once into trade groups under government control provisions of President Roosevelt's recovery program.

Jordan—When the wind broke off a branch of a tree, 20 feet in the air, on the farm of Mich Eischens, a few miles southeast of here, an old hoe was found embedded in the crotch.

St. Paul—Jim Foulis, Hinsdale, Ill., won the fourth annual Keller Golf tournament with a score of 283. George Von Elm, Los Angeles, was second and Walter Hagen, Detroit, third.

St. Paul—Minnesota will receive approximately $9,000,000 of the $400,000,000 for highways and related projects provided in the $3,300,000,000 federal public works program now before congress.

Crookston—The annual junior short course, which was the first of a series of summer meetings to be held at the Northwest School of Agriculture, opened with an attendance that surpassed all previous records.

Halstad—The new bridge over Red river will be dedicated July 1, and the Old Settlers' picnic will be held July 2. Governors Olson of Minnesota and Langer of North Dakota are expected to take part in the activities.

Worthington — Sweeping across southern Minnesota a terrific windstorm caused damage estimated at hundreds of thousands of dollars as it razed farm buildings, disrupted telephone and power service to several communities and injured a score of persons. The storm apparently centered in the district about Worthington, although it cut a path all the way across the state.

Minneapolis—Walter H. Newton of Minneapolis, former congressman and secretary to President Hoover, was nominated by President Roosevelt as a member of the federal home loan bank board and State Senator Robert C. Bell of Detroit Lakes was nominated for United States district judge for Minnesota, to fill the vacancy on the federal bench caused by the death of Judge William A. Cant.

St. Paul—Ringneck pheasants which choose grassy sides of trunk highways for their nests have won the official protection of the state highway department. N. W. Elsberg, highway commissioner, has issued orders that employes of the department do all in their power to guard the birds during the hatching season. On one maintenance section more than 20 nests were reported in less than 80 miles, with no special search being made for them.

Duluth—Final plans for another series of great historical pageants at Itasca state park this summer took shape at a meeting of directors of the Northwestern Minnesota Historical association with state conservation officials at Douglas lodge in the park. These pageants, celebrating the 75th anniversary of Minnesota statehood, will be presented July 2, 16, and 30, August 13 and 27 and September 4, by the state conservation commission and the association.

Duluth—Shipments of iron ore from ports at the Head of the Lakes since the opening of navigation about six weeks ago total nearly a million tons, about one-third of the total shipped in 1932.

Fort Snelling—The Citizens' Military Training camp at Fort Snelling will open Aug. 1 and continue through the month, according to word received from Maj. Gen. Johnson Hagood, commander of the Seventh corps area of the army. Candidates from Minnesota and eastern South Dakota will train here.

Defect in Attack on Marriage Tie

In the press and from the lecture platform they continue to discuss what we have always regarded as the unquestionable principle of faithfulness in marriage, a noted woman writer comments. Arguments against it are taken seriously because their exponent is one whose motives cannot be laid to looseness or wickedness—the serious-minded and brilliant philosopher, Bertrand Russell.

Mr. Russell would have a marriage only where there are children. Also, it is his idea to save young people from the wrong marriage by granting freedom to experiment before they commit themselves! Also, while the hope is that a marriage once entered into will be life-long, he believes the marriage should leave freedom for outside relationships!

Most of my readers have probably felt with me something so distasteful and preposterous about such suggestions as to make them unworthy of argument. But when they come from a source which is known if misguided, to be serious and sincere, it does the cause of sane decency and wholesomeness in marriage no good to keep quiet about it. And here is just one little item in our answer:

In his own argument for allowing experiment and freedom of the sexes in marriage, Mr. Russell says, "The mating of men and women is a union not merely of bodies, but of the entire personalities!"

Well—it would seem to be a big enough order for a poor human to manage successfully to merge with one other personality! What a strain on our capacity for adaptation to try various such "mergings" with always another "personality!" But seriously, that one statement is the answer which defeats the whole preposterous theory of curing failure and unhappiness in marriage by allowing freedom for outside "relationships." For if young people will take seriously that principle of a union of the entire personalities, they will consider more carefully what marriage entails before they enter into it, and will make a more serious effort in their marriage to achieve that union of personalities in the only way it can be done—by thought and effort and sacrifice and compromise, a willingness to yield in order to gain, a generosity in giving as well as taking, a thinking of the one they love and the success of the marriage rather than of what, at any particular moment, they want for themselves. The best argument for faithfulness in marriage comes from the enemy camp!

Youngsters Enjoy "Zoo"

There is a children's playground in the Berlin zoo where the baby animals are put. A visitor recently saw there little boys and girls of three and four sitting in a big chair nursing baby lions and bears, while a picture postcard was being photographed of them. The tamest of monkeys, baby elephants and camels, rabbits and guinea pigs, baby pigs, lambs and kids, all enjoy a nursery life.

Except for a few exceptions, there are no cages or bars, all the doors are open, and the children just play with the baby animals, carrying them in their arms and romping with them as playmates. One little tot of three was burying a fat pig in the sand, and the piglet thoroughly enjoyed it. It is a children's paradise, although perhaps the grownups get the most fun.

The Safety Man

A few days ago I read of a camping accident which apparently was one of the first of the season. A fishing party was camped on one of the streams in Northern Wisconsin. The weather was cool and the fishermen had built a big fire to keep warm during the night. A 17 year old boy sleeping near the flames rolled over onto the hot bed of coals and was fatally burned.

Camping is a wonderful sport but brings with it hazards and dangers that people do not ordinarily think of.

Do not mar camping trips or vacation time by an accident that can be avoided. Always play safe. Stop, look and listen. Think.

Crop Loss Serious Because of Drouth

Serious permanent small grain loss and severe corn damage caused by lack of rain was reported Monday in the central states, coincident with the sudden rise in wheat prices.

Wheat damage is so severe in Minnesota, said Andrew Boss, state agronomist, "the men in some western counties declared threshing machines will not be needed."

Rains Saturday and Sunday brought relief to parched fields in southern North Dakota and in some parts of the Red River valley, but the extent of relief and results over the state as a whole are puzzling grain men.

N. D. Gorman, assistant North Dakota county agent leader, after a trip through much of the northern territory ending late last week, says in his opinion the crop of small grains in the state is damaged at least 25 per cent, despite future weather relief.

Northwestern Minnesota is particularly hard hit, Boss said, while southern and southwestern portions have resisted the searing sun and hot winds better due to heavier soils.

Boss declared that damage to corn, previously slight, was becoming more noticeable and "unless the state as a whole has a two or more inch rainfall soon, the corn damage will be irreparable."

He said damage to wheat and other small grains crops was permanent and held no hope for recovery even with rain. "The fields are blighted," he asserted, "and damage is far heavier than in many years."

Meanwhile western Minnesota sweltered in temperatures that climbed above 100 late Monday, while in east central South Dakota, Huron had 107.

At Fergus Falls it was 101, while at Alexandria, in west central Minnesota, it was 102.

In North Dakota, Fargo reported 97 Grand Forks 94, and Pembina, on the Canadian border, enjoyed a cool breeze with the mercury 85 above.

Many Good Features Will Be Seen At County Fair

Presenting to the people of Marshall county and northwestern Minnesota a greater array of attractions than ever before, while space reservations indicate that exhibits will crowd the grounds, everything is in readiness for the 27th Annual Marshall County Fair which will be held at the Fair Grounds in Warren June 29, 30 and July 1.

All Marshall county is taking active interest in the 1933 exposition, with large delegations of residents of this community planning to spend one or more days at the Fair, where they will witness outstanding grand stand acts by professional showmen, races, and many novel and interesting productions by Marshall county people. In addition, everybody will make it a point to see the splendid array of exhibits, both agricultural and industrial, to be made by Marshall county farmers and farm implement distributors.

Opening on Thursday night with a complete grandstand program with feature music by the Alvarado Public School Band together with a series of fast races there will be a continuous round of activity through Saturday night with every program scheduled to have something unusual and worthwhile seeing.

Eastern Marshall county will come to the fair in large numbers on Friday for Eastern Marshall County Day when the Holt Community Band will provide music. Another big feature of the day will include two appearances of the Crookston Ladies Auxiliary Drum and Bugle Corps. Friday night the Marshall County 4-H Club Style Revue in which ten 4-H Club Queens with their attendants will pass in review in competition for the title of Queen of Marshall county and a free trip to the State Fair. Announcements of the winner of this event will not take place until the Saturday night program. In addition there will be fast pony and running races by Marshall and Northern Polk counties' fastest horses.

Community day will be celebrated on Saturday, with two unusual features for Saturday afternoon. Foremost will be the Kiddie Revue, directed by Mrs. H. F. Harrison of Warren. In this revue, twenty kiddies from five to ten years of age will perform in a pretty costume skit featuring the rhythm band. Then too, Saturday afternoon the Champion Marshall County Sheep Shearer will be named as a result of a big Sheep Shearing Contest to be staged in front of the Grandstand. R. A. Trovatten, Commissioner of Agriculture, St. Paul, will deliver a short address Saturday afternoon.

Coronation of the Queen of Marshall County by State Senator Wm. L. Peterson of Lancaster will be the big feature of Saturday night's performance. Announcement of the winners of the contest being staged on Friday night will be made during the Coronation ceremonies.

The Green Mill Follies Revue of thirty-six people, including pretty girls, clever comedians, and fancy dancers, will be the big attraction each evening. This company is one of the best on the road this year and will alone be a worthy attraction to go to the fair to see. The revue will offer a complete change of program each night. Other grandstand acts include The Seven Schallers, hand balancers and physical giants; Four Casting Johns; The Belthazers; Jack and Virginia; Four Aerial Devils; and McMahon & Wheeler, dog and pony circus.

All in all, the 1933 fair promises you complete entertainment and unusually low costs. You will enjoy yourselves immensely when you attend. Meet your friends there.

Death of Mrs. Taggert

The body of Mrs. Leliah Taggert, 53 years old, was found at 3 o'clock Monday afternoon on the steps ouside the door on her farm home seven miles southwest of here, by her husband and son. She has been subject to heart attacks. No inquest will be held. Funeral services have been set for Saturday afternoon from the Methodist church in Thief River Falls.

Survivors are her husband, Thomas J. Taggert, two daughters, three sons, two sisters, two brothers and six grandchildren.

Annual Creamery Picnic

The annual picnic of the Marshall County Creameries association will be held at the Old Mill site, west of Newfolden, on Sunday, July 9. A fine program of sports and entertainment has been arranged. John Brandt, president of Land O'Lakes creameries, and R. A. Trovatten, commissioner of agriculture, will deliver the principal addresses.

The Holt Community Band has been engaged to play at the 4th of July celebration at Goodridge, and also at the Lutheran Assembly at Thief River Fall, July 9.

Today (June 30) the Band goes to Warren to play at the Marshall County Fair.

Large Class To Be Confirmed

A class of thirteen young girls and boys will be confirmed on Sunday at the Nazaret Lutheran church. They are as follows:

Thelma Kolden, Orlene Hagglund, Clayton Gunheim, Lida Monson, Gertrude Nohre, Hazel Furr, Eleanor Peterson, Adolph Skjerping, Leonard Halvorson, Eleanor Rodahl, Orrace Johnson, Clarin Fredrickson, and Clara Engebretson.

Mr. and Mrs. O. H. Nohre spent the week end at Spring Grove, Minn., visiting with relatives and attending to matters of business.

Ramsay MacDonald

RAMSAY MACDONALD threw a fair-sized monkey wrench into the London economic conference machinery in his opening speech, but the wheels hadn't really begun to revolve, so the mechanism was not wrecked immediately. Whether it is ultimately to operate successfully depends on diplomatic skill or on the complaisance of Uncle Sam. In the middle of an otherwise well-ordered address, the British prime minister suddenly interjected the war debts issue, despite the fact that it was not on the agenda of the conference. That question, he declared, "must be dealt with before every obstacle to general recovery has been removed, and it must be taken up without delay by the nations concerned. Lausanne has to be completed and this vexed question settled once for all in the light of present world conditions."

Delegates from all parts of the British empire and possibly those from France were not surprised by MacDonald's action, but Secretary Hull and his brother delegates from the United States did not attempt to conceal their displeasure with what they considered at least a display of poor taste. Mr. Hull was soon in telephonic communication with Washington, and as a result his address to the conference which was to open the second day of the parley was postponed. Among the other speakers of that day, however, were Guido Jung of Italy and Gen. Jan Christian Smuts of South Africa, both of whom backed up MacDonald's stand.

"We firmly believe," Jung said, "that there is a preliminary problem —intergovernmental debts arising from the war. An armistice was signed for them at Lausanne. A final settlement now is imperative."

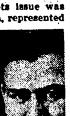
Smuts was even more offensive to Americans, frankly blaming the United States for the deplorable plight of the world.

Chancellor of the Exchequer Neville Chamberlain seconded the remarks of MacDonald about war debts, and also said the crisis in world economic conditions makes restoration of the gold standard absolutely impossible at present.

He favored multilateral treaties for lower tariffs, provided the reductions were actual and tangible, that they covered a wide area, that they did not impose undue sacrifices on lower tariff countries and that they did not lead to economic warfare. He emphasized the necessity for cheap money.

WHEN Secretary Hull arose, the third to deliver his address, it was expected he would make some sort of reply to the war debts demand. But he was silent on that subject, devoting much of his speech to argument for a renewal of the tariff truce promulgated by President Roosevelt. This must be followed, he said, by removal of trade barriers, elimination of excessive tariffs, stabilization of exchanges and abandonment of nationalistic economic policies.

"The world cannot longer go on as it is going at present," Hull said. "A successful meeting of this conference in my judgment is the key to widespread business recovery."



Premier Daladier

POSSIBLY more threatening to the success of the conference than the injection of the war debts issue was the demand of the French, represented by Premier Daladier, that the dollar be stabilized before the matter of tariff reductions and removal of other trade barriers be taken up. Both the dollar and the pound, he intimated, must be stabilized on a gold basis at the earliest possible moment.

"We feel we must end the currency war," Premier Daladier declared. "The maintenance of the gold standard is indispensable. How can circulation of goods be re-established if their value depends on luck and hazard? What would you say to an architect or builder who used an elastic footrule?"

America's hope for success of the conference was built upon a world tariff truce, and the French believe they have blocked this for the present at least. They assert this would mean nothing so long as currencies are fluctuating. Only 15 of the nations represented in the conference adhered to the temporary tariff truce which was to last during the life of the parley, and one of these, France, now refuses to renew its pledge under existing circumstances.

WHILE this sort of talk was going on in the conference hall, Great Britain and Italy were planning to evade payment of the greater part of the installments due the United States on June 15, and France was calmly ignoring the fact that she also was due to make a payment on that date, her government being determined to do nothing about it. The British offered to pay $10,000,000 of the $79,950,000 due.

President Roosevelt's reply to the British offer, eagerly awaited, was that the United States would accept the partial payment only with the explicit understanding that the money was just an installment on the sum due and that such action should in no way invalidate America's claim to the unpaid remainder.

Mr. Roosevelt advised the British that as soon as possible they should make whatever representations for a revision of the debt they desire to offer, and in Washington. He said he had no power to reduce or cancel the debt but would submit the results of the negotiation to congress.

Under the new inflation bill the President is authorized to accept silver in payment of debt installments at the value of 50 cents an ounce. So the British paid in silver obtained from India.

WAR debts, as much as discord over the matter of war veterans' benefits, caused delay in the adjournment of congress, though the latter question was the ostensible reason. The senate appeared determined to stay in session until it had learned all there was to know about the offers of partial payment and the President's response. The senators had known for a long time that Mr. Roosevelt wanted them to get away before June 15, and Robinson of Indiana read to them cabled dispatches from London saying that Chancellor Chamberlain was waiting for congress to adjourn before announcing his offer of 10 per cent payment. So they decided to stay on the job a little longer.

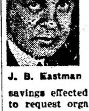
On the surface the delay was due to disagreement over the modification of the President's program for reduction of veterans' benefits, a part of the independent offices bill. The house had accepted the compromise, but 20 Democratic senators and Shipstead, Farmer-Laborite, joined with 27 Republicans to recommit the measure. Then the senate adopted the Cutting-Steiwer amendment, which would increase veterans' compensations by about $135,000,000, though the President had said he would go no further than $100,000,000. It was expected the house would accept the senate plan and that Mr. Roosevelt would veto the entire bill. But the house showed signs of going along with the President, so the Democratic senators changed their mind and, after a hot debate, accepted the program it had previously rejected. The bill was passed by a vote of 45 to 36, and what had seemed to be the first defeat for the President was turned into a victory. Congress then adjourned.

IN OTHER respects the senate acted swiftly in completing the legislation the President had asked. The important bills enacted included the almost terrifying industry control-public works measure; the Glass-Steagall banking bill which makes provision for limited deposit guarantee January 1, 1934, unless in an emergency ordered earlier by the President; and the fourth deficiency bill carrying the largest appropriations ever made in peace time. The home owners' loan act setting up a $2,200,000,000 corporation for home loan mortgage relief already had been passed and was signed by the President, who at the same time issued an appeal to mortgage holders to desist from foreclosures until the new agency can begin functioning.

The industry control bill did not get through without fierce opposition from 15 of the more radical Democrats and 23 Republicans, all led by Senator Borah, who especially denounced the giving of vast power to Gen. Hugh Johnson, the man selected as the administrator.

The senate rather ignored the executive order which President Roosevelt had transmitted, providing for regroupings, consolidations, transfers and abolitions of certain executive agencies and functions. He explained in his message the necessity for these changes and said they would effect a saving of more than $25,000,000. Many other changes, he said, were in contemplation, and he had selected only those he believed should be put into effect as quickly as possible.

NOW Massachusetts is in line for repeal of prohibition the tenth state to decide the matter. The electors voted about 4 to 1 wet in selecting 45 delegates to a constitutional convention that will ratify the repeal amendment. In Boston the vote was approximately 10 to 1, and one of that city's delegates will be James Roosevelt, son of President Roosevelt. In most of the communities the question of local license was submitted and only a few of them stood firm against license.



J. B. Eastman

JOSEPH B. EASTMAN, a member of the interstate commerce commission, was selected by President Roosevelt to be federal co-ordinator of transportation under the terms of the emergency railway act. Eastman doesn't like the labor clauses in the measure which prevent the reduction of operating forces, but believes that much can be accomplished in spite of them.

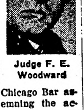
The railroad executives themselves have decided there must be savings effected in labor and decided to request organized labor to accept a 22½ per cent reduction in the basic wage scale. Their committee of nine is empowered to negotiate with the unions to a conclusion. If the negotiations fail, there would still be a long period before a strike call. Under the terms of the railway labor act, if direct negotiations fail, the federal mediation board would offer the services of a conciliator who might spend several months in bringing the parties together. Then, if both parties persisted in disagreement, the way would be open to arbitration.

Arbitration would likely extend over a long period. Should this fail, the law provides for the declaration of a state of emergency, under which the President of the United States appoints a fact finding commission, which must study the issues involved and report within thirty days.

MRS. ROOSEVELT returned home from her air trip to California in the course of which she announced the coming divorce of her son Elliott. To the Washington correspondents she explained the incident at the Dallas airport when Gov. "Ma" Ferguson and her husband failed to get into a photograph with the First Lady. The simple fact was that Mrs. Roosevelt, being hungry, was eating breakfast and asked the photographers to wait, and when she finished eating, the Fergusons had gone away in a huff.

SECRETARY of Labor Perkins announced the appointment of President Robert Hutchins of the University of Chicago as chairman of the advisory committee to be set up in connection with the new federal employment service.

Senator R. F. Wagner of New York and President William Green of the American Federation of Labor and President Henry I. Harriman of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States also have been invited.



Judge F. E. Woodward

ONE of the last acts of the house of representatives was the adoption of a resolution for congressional investigation of all acts of judges and other federal court agents in receivership cases, the sponsors being Sabath of Chicago and Celler of New York. Representative Hatton Summers, Texas, Democratic prosecutor and chairman of the house judiciary committee, said Chicago would be one of the first courts to be the subject of inquiry, because of the Chicago Bar association report condemning the actions of Judge Frederick E. Woodward in allowing nearly a quarter of a million in fees to his son's law firm as receivers' counsel. The bar association did not reflect on the integrity of the judge or the law firm, but condemned the practice.

CHANCELLOR ENGLEBERT DOLLFUSS is determined that Austria shall not be infected with Hitlerism, and the government is carrying on a determined war against the Nazis, who are accused of plotting to inaugurate a reign of terror there to be followed by a coup to seize control of the country. All known Nazis in the country are being arrested for questioning by the police, who assert more than 10 per cent of them are Germans. One of their alleged leaders, Theodore Habicht, was claimed by the German minister to be an employee of his legation, and the minister protested sharply when Habicht was arrested. In retaliation the Prussian secret police expelled from Germany Dr. Irwin Wasserbaeck, chief of the press department in the Austrian legation in Berlin. Naturally relations between Germany and Austria were near the breaking point.

IN A statement addressed to the League of Nations, the Soviet government, and the signatories of the nine power pact, the Southwest Political council condemned China's truce with Japan as a pact of surrender which the Nanking regime can implement only by precipitating a civil war.

The statement said the council would be compelled to take steps to safeguard the honor and vital interests of China as a nation determined not to be conquered.

Paraguay has notified the League of Nations that it will not accept the latest proposals of the league for arbitration of its quarrel with Bolivia over the Gran Chaco territory.

THE prince of the Asturias, son of former King Alfonso of Spain, intends to marry Edelmira Sampedro of Cuba, a commoner, despite his father's objection. Dispatches from Paris say the prince, at the demand of Alfonso's emissary, signed a document renouncing all rights to the throne for himself and his descendants in favor of his brother Don Jaime.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart

Washington.—President Roosevelt's departure from the White house for a rest and a fishing cruise calls attention again to the tremendous strain to which a President of the United States is subjected. Anyone holding that office has to undergo it and, despite attempts to make the job easier, none has come forward with a workable plan to lighten the burden.

Presidency a Heavy Load

Presidents have been criticized in communities away from the national capital many times in the past because they took a week or a month off. In other years, it has been common to hear political attacks on the President then occupying the White House on account of vacations or recreational methods that caused their absence from the executive mansion. Observers here, however, can in no wise agree that such criticism is justified. On the contrary, I believe the agreement would be on a premise that were the President unable to get away from his job periodically, he would be a broken man physically, if not mentally, in a short time.

The President of the United States has at his beck and call all of the advisers, all of the expert assistance, everything that is required to enable him to do the job. Yet, with all of this, he cannot dodge the responsibility of leadership, and that is the crux of the problem. He must lead in the right direction and that necessitates familiarity with every problem to be solved by his administration. He receives advice and assistance from all shades of opinion because it is human for men and women to have varying views. So the President has to sort them out and arrive at his own conclusions and those conclusions either make or break the administration.

In order to illustrate the truth of the statement that the job of President of the United States is a man-killer, let us review what has happened since Franklin D. Roosevelt took office. He entered the White House with the most acute banking crisis ever known staring him in the face; he assumed the Presidency when the country's agriculture was in the throes of destitution, if not actual starvation; he took over the job at a time when 12,000,000 were without work and whose resources were gone, and with the industries of the nation unable to operate as a whole at more than 50 per cent of normal activity.

The President, of course, knew how desperate the conditions were and he immediately called congress into extraordinary session, he closed the banks for a holiday so they could get started fresh after they had had time to determine whether they were solvent and he began grinding out a program for legislation by congress designed to restore order out of chaos. These things were done within a period of ten days and it was thought the strain would lessen after the banks were again operating. But the days and nights between March 4 and March 15, the period of the banking holiday, were only the beginning. Others presenting just as much of a burden have occurred until the current question is: how did the President stand it?

Strenuous Days

It may sound simple that the President called congress into extra session; that he closed the banks and that he did all of the other things mentioned above. Unfortunately, it is not so simple as it sounds. For example, Mr. Roosevelt was inaugurated at noon, March 4; he had luncheon with a few friends and went to work with the new members of his cabinet. A steady stream of men filed in and out of the President's office, as the new Chief Executive sought to map plans. This continued into the night after the President had gone to the White House itself and long after midnight he was working on a program for handling the banking situation. Awakened at seven o'clock, the circumstances of the preceding afternoon and night were repeated although it was Sunday. Then, the banking holiday proclamation was ready.

But the banks, having been closed, must needs be reopened. Emergency legislation was required. It had to be drafted quickly and it had to be bullet-proof. Bankers and experts in finance and in legislation were summoned; others were called by long distance telephone and their views and suggestions ascertained and members of the senate and the house had to be consulted that any slip might be avoided.

That was just one problem. There were numerous others, perhaps not quite as acute at that time but nevertheless vital to the country as a whole.

In order to save precious moments, the President was eating his noonday meal on his desk in the Executive office. Perhaps he had had a group of legislators or advisors with him at breakfast. He seldom was able to dine alone in the evening because there were questions to be decided at once and people whom he had called to consult were awaiting the moment they were to have with him.

It would naturally seem that the strain would subside after the first few weeks of a new administration, but such was not the case for President Roosevelt. He told the country during his campaign that he would like to have "a honeymoon" in office for awhile. He wanted to start off his administration without having congress in session and with some time to map plans. But that was not to be. The "honeymoon," if such it can be called, has been delayed until now, and even now he is not safe from the worries of his job, nor from the pestering of office seeking politicians.

The newspaper correspondents of Washington are in a peculiar position to judge the load the President carries. Those who are detailed to report White House activities are thankful when the President sends out word that there will be a brief respite. It means a moment in which those writers can safely leave their job and eat a meal without fearing that the President has sent another special message to congress or has determined to call a world conference or has suddenly decided on some less consequential thing like appointment of a collector of internal revenue or a United States attorney somewhere.

From the outlines given, it is obvious there was constant activity. But the activity itself would not have proved unbearable. It was the mental strain of reasoning out the problems and their solutions and the determination of which course should be pursued, since always there are two sides to the question. Frankly, it has always been amazing to me how Presidents have been able to survive the ordeal of their office.

* * *

Welcome Vacation

Mr. Roosevelt is taking the cruise in order to recuperate and revitalize himself. He enjoys the outdoors, just as President Hoover enjoyed outdoors and President Coolidge enjoyed fishing and as President Harding and President Wilson enjoyed golf and as President Taft enjoyed walking and President Theodore Roosevelt enjoyed horseback riding. Mr. Hoover, it will be recalled, used to spend week-ends at a mountain camp on the Rapidan river in Virginia where he could rough it and fish, and he fished in the Potomac river, too, when he had time to make a river trip. President Harding would rather play a game of golf as a member of a foursome with cronies than do anything else, thoroughly enjoying companionship. President Coolidge seemed to enjoy solitude on a yacht, although usually he had a couple of intimate friends aboard when he went on cruises.

Actually the purpose of these outings is to get away from all of the demands coming upon the office of President. He must and should have some freedom. His physical wellbeing is at stake at all times, for unless he is physically fit he becomes incapable of dealing with the tasks.

Lawmakers Hide Out

Presidents can receive whomsoever they desire to receive in their offices, but the list of visitors has to be culled closely in order not to overcrowd the Chief Executive's time. Some of the senators and representatives, however, have adopted another method of saving time for themselves in order to get work done. They go into hiding. Otherwise, folks from the home state would occupy so much of their time they would not be able to study the problems of legislation they have before them.

Few of the legislators have the courage, however, that has been shown by Senator Tydings of Maryland. His home state being within street car distance, the Maryland senator has plenty of visitors. He has solved his problem by posting a notice on his office door. It says his office hours are from morning until noon, when the senate convenes. After that time, no amount of knocking on the door will cause it to be opened. It seems to me that it has required a considerable determination to take such a course, but Senator Tydings did and thus far has not caused any real howl from his constituents.

* * *

Senator Bennett Champ Clark of Missouri is causing just a little bit of disturbance around the White House. Although the senator is still a freshman, so to speak, because this is his first full term, he has demonstrated already that he is like his father, the late Speaker Champ Clark, who came so near being the Democratic Presidential nominee over Woodrow Wilson.

The late Speaker Clark was a thorn in the flesh of President Wilson. Senator Clark is proving he is a chip off the old block by being a thorn in the side of the present President. He broke with the President on the so-called economy bill and he refused to stand hitched to several other measures, including the industrial recovery-public construction measure. The Missouri senator always has been regarded as a Democrat through and through, but he appears to dislike portions of the "new deal" because of their unorthodox character.

White Man "God" to Indian Tribes

Tribute Paid to Scottish Physician of Three Centuries Ago.

The good a man does may indeed live after him—and sometimes in strange ways.

Perhaps the most fantastic of immortalities has been bestowed on a Seventeenth century Scottish doctor, William Patterson, who was apotheosized into a god and whose cult is still spreading after nearly 300 years.

For some years there have been coming into the collections of the Smithsonian institution at intervals curious canes used by Indian medicine men in Panama and northern South America. On the heads of these canes are carved statuettes of a man with a long nose, a high hat and European dress. Some are very crude, some masterpieces of wood carving.

But the Smithsonian ethnologists noted that all obviously were intended to portray the same individual—a white man. The canes were the Shurama sticks of the Indian medicine men—their wands of authority. Among some of these tribes every occupation has its characteristic staff with some carving emblematic of the function of its bearer.

Investigation reveals that the figures on the staffs of the medicine men are intended to represent Doctor Patterson, leader of a Scottish colony which settled on the coast of the Gulf of San Blas in 1698. It was sent out by the "Company of Scotland Trading to Africa and the Indies," apparently a purely speculative enterprise.

The Scottish settlers made friends of the Indians, largely because of the interest taken in the natives by Doctor Patterson and the cures he was able to bring about. The Indians attributed to him supernatural powers. He was the greatest of "medicine men."

The colony, however, was unsuccessful. It encountered bitter opposition from the Spaniards, who believed that it was intruding on their territory, and in a few years it was abandoned and all traces of it soon vanished—all except the long nose, the high top hat and the green coat of the good Doctor Patterson. He was a god who had come and gone.

By application of the old principle of sympathetic magic they continued to make use of him. The magic staffs first came to the Smithsonian collections from among the Tule Indians. Recent acquisitions show that they have now spread into the Choco country of Colombia, the ancestors of whose present Indians never could have come into contact with the man himself. Doctor Patterson has become a powerful magic.

The face always is recognizable. The better staffs reproduce details of his attire. His coat is painted black or green. His waistcoat, shirt, necktie, collar and buttons are represented. He is the god of medicine.

Aid to Memory

A Scottish friend submits this rime of his childhood to help modern children to remember the order of the books of the New Testament—provided any modern child is interested:

Herein are twenty-seven tracts:
Saints Matthew, Mark, Luke, John and Acts;
Romans, Corinthians and the Gauls,
Ephesians, Philippians and the Cols;
Thessalonians, Timothy, T-i-t-u-s,
Philemon, Hebrews and St. James the Less;
Two by St. Peter and three by St.
John,
One by St. Jude, and the Revelation.

For the benefit of those not quite so familiar with the New Testament as they might be, we add the footnote that "Gauls" refers to Galatians, and "Cols" to Colossians.—"F. P. A.," in New York World-Telegram.

SYNOPSIS

On her eighteenth birthday, Barbara, motherless daughter of Christopher Thorne, artist, awakes with anticipation of the joys of the day. She receives a birthday ring from Bruce MacLain, young artist friend of the family, but more than friend to Barbara. Barbara and Bruce go picknicking on the sands at Provincetown. He tells her a story of a gypsy boy, a little gypsy girl whom he loves, and the song of a silver flute. She knows it is her own love tale. Her happiness turns to sorrow when she returns home to learn her father has been drowned.

The plans seemed possible at night, lying awake with Gay close and warm beside her. In the morning, however, with Cousin Julia managing everything and Cousin Evie acting as though she were no older than Gay, the plans would seem silly and childish. Bit by bit hope would vanish and her heart would feel heavy as lead. She seemed, visibly, to grow thinner. The color left her cheeks and her eyes were tragically large.

Bruce, who had postponed his return to New York, was constantly at the Thornes'. But he seldom saw Barbara alone. She seemed content, in a measure, only when she was with the children. Loving her, it hurt him to know how completely they filled her mind. Even when, occasionally, he held her in his arms, he felt that she wasn't there. Something had gone. The warm loving part of her which, for a few hours had been his, was now absorbed by the children. He felt hurt and helpless and left behind.

In his studio Bruce spent many sleepless hours. Was she old enough? he asked himself. Did she know how deeply he loved her? Had he let himself in for unhappiness? He asked her none of these questions. Loving her deeply, he tried, when he was with her, to forget, for the moment, his own disturbing emotions. He knew she was glad that he had postponed his return to New York. When he left her at bedtime, she clung to him.

The gray-shingled house filled with flowers. There were all sorts of letters and cards. Mr. Tubbs, the postman, brought a letter from "Uncle Stephen." It was a very nice letter. Barbara read it to the children as they sat on the studio steps. "Uncle Stephen" had seen in a paper, the letter said, an account of Father's death. He sent sympathy to his "little fillette."

"What's a 'fillette'?" Gay wanted to know.

"That's French for goddaughter," Barbara explained.

"Is he a Frenchman?" asked Jamie, to whom Frenchman meant the French-Canadians who lived in Augusta, Maine.

"Of course not," Kit answered. "Don't you remember how Father used to tell us that he was the only other American, besides Mother and Father, in the town where Babs was born?"

The children talked, in low voices, about Father. Barbara read the letter again. It was nice and friendly, she thought. She lingered over the concluding sentence. . . . "If a crusty old bachelor can be of assistance, please let him know at once. . . ." A crusty old bachelor! Then he wasn't married. And he must be older than she had thought. But he didn't sound "crusty." "Fillette" was a charming word. Saying it over made her feel that she knew "Uncle Stephen." . . . "My little fillette." . . . She tucked the letter inside her blouse and felt she had found a friend.

And then, on a day so blue and golden, so filled with sunshine and gentle wind and the smoky fragrance of autumn that it didn't seem possible there could be sadness in the world, they left Father beside Mother in the cemetery on the hill. The house seemed desolate when they returned, too quiet, too tidy and neat. Father was gone.

That evening they sat around the living room hearth. It grew chilly when the sun went down and Bruce had built a fire. Cousin Evie had gone to bed with a headache. Cousin Julia, in Jamie's room upstairs, was writing a letter to Cousin Will. The children were glad to be alone. Barbara told them about the plans she made at night, lying awake in the low carved bed. The children accepted them with enthusiasm.

"I can get a job after school," Kit said, his face brighter than it had been since the day of the storm.

"Dicky Woods says I can be his delivery boy," Jamie announced from the hearth rug. "I've already asked him about it."

"If Martha goes, I'll do the dishes," Gay said nestling close to Kit, her head against his shoulder.

"Stout fella'!" Kit said softly, knowing how Gay hated washing dishes and dusting and making beds.

"Other people have shops," Barbara continued, loving the children for wanting to help. She lifted her face to Bruce, feeling hopeful, wanting to be assured. "We could, couldn't we, Bruce? Isn't it a sensible plan? Don't you think we could?"

Bruce smiled but his eyes were grave. What a child she was, no older than Gay, making her fairy-tale plans. If he could bear it for her—the certain disappointment. She was too small to bear it herself, too young in spite of her courage. If he could bear it for her—he loved her, he loved her so much.

The plans seemed possible, talking about them in front of the fire, surrounded by things that were familiar and friendly and dear. They needn't be separated. They could stay in the gray-shingled house.

And then she knew that they couldn't. The plans vanished like bubbles touched by a careless hand. Cousin Julia, rosy and handsome and very kind, appeared at the living room door.

"Ten o'clock," she said in the brisk cheerful voice that made Barbara feel small and rather foolish. "Time for tired kiddies to be in bed."

"We can't, can we, Bruce?" Barbara asked when the children, marshaled by Cousin Julia, had gone upstairs to bed. "We can't stay here together."

"I'm afraid not, Babbie," he answered, his face very troubled and grave.

"I guess I knew it all along," she said wearily. "Fairy tales." Her voice quivered. Looking down, he saw that her lashes were jeweled with tears.

"Don't mind so terribly, darling. Please try not to mind so much."

"I—I can't help it, Bruce."

He knew that she couldn't help it. He knew that words were useless. He held her close, wanting to bear it for her, racked by her shaking sobs. Gradually the sobs grew less. She sighed and then was still, so still that he thought she had gone to sleep. But presently she stirred.

"Bruce. . . ."

"Yes, darling?"

"When are you going back to New York?"

"Tomorrow. . . ."

She clung to him for a moment, then raised her head from his shoulder.

"I don't suppose—" She paused and he saw, in the firelight, a faint pink flush creeping into her cheeks.

"Yes," She Sighed Contentedly, "Now We're Really Engaged."

"What, Babbie?"

"I don't suppose—" Her eyes were suddenly shy. "You couldn't take us with you—Kit and Gay and Jamie and me?"

"Why, Babbie—"

"No, I suppose you couldn't." She was grown up, now, and reasonable, too reasonable, for her years. "Shoes and things are expensive and boys eat such a lot."

"But I can take you." Bruce brushed the soft hair back from her brow. "You and I in my studio. We can count the stars through our skylight and every morning, for breakfast, I'll sing you a brand-new song."

Her eyes brightened. A little smile touched her lips.

"Bruce!" she whispered. "A new one every day!"

"And a special one for Sunday," he promised, loving the shine in her eyes.

It faded away, leaving her forlorn.

"You mustn't, Bruce. I have to think of the children." She squared her shoulders and lifted her firm little chin. "I'm the oldest. They've no one at all but me. Kit hates it at Uncle Herbert's." She steadied the quivering of her lips. "They tease him because he wants to be an artist. Uncle Herbert will probably make him sell life insurance or something he wouldn't like. And Kit's so splendid, Bruce. Don't you see. And Aunt Lola is so silly. She lives mostly in hotels since Uncle George died. That isn't good for a child like Gay. And Jamie—" She paused and drew a long breath.

"Don't, Babbie," Bruce said gently. "You're so tired. Don't think about it tonight."

"I can't help thinking. You've seen it, Bruce, the way Jamie looks at 'Chips.' Cousin Julia won't have a dog in the house. She's kind, of course, but she doesn't know about boys. And Jamie's so funny and dear."

"But what can you do?"

"Something . . . I don't know."

Bruce felt a vague sort of fear. She looked so small and determined, so very dear in her velveteen frock with its childish white collar and cuffs. If he should lose her—

"Babbie"—he held her closer, afraid she might slip away—"if you can't manage it, you'll come to me?"

"Yes, Bruce—if I can't."

He wanted to be further assured. Very gently he changed the birthday ring from her right hand to her left.

"Now we're engaged," he said.

"Yes," she sighed contentedly. "Now we're really engaged."

The Garden of Delight

By COSMO HAMILTON

THERE was to be a fete that night in the open-air restaurant of the Russian grand duke. A screen of canvas was drawn across the gate.

But that meant nothing to Ivan Storogev, the successful gigolo, who, at three o'clock in the afternoon, had crawled from his comfortable bed. A year ago he had been a waiter, a loyal member of the commonwealth of Russian aristocrats under the leadership of the dead czar's cousin in that place. He made his way through the house, saw Princess Irina Petrovna hanging paper lanterns on the shabby pergola and marched quickly to her side.

"You!" she said lightly. "How nice of you to come. None of us hangs these bedraggled lanterns with such a touch."

He said thickly, "Why don't you answer my letters?" He made no attempt to hang the lantern which she gave him.

Irina continued to put the candles in their sockets with a steady hand. "If you're not going to help me," she said, "you're badly in the way."

He said, "I can't and won't stand the way in which you're treating me. Do you hear? I regard myself as engaged to be married to you. I earn enough money on which we can keep a respectable apartment and I've saved enough to lift you from this place. Why do you hold off?"

Irina assumed an anger that she did not feel. "You bore me, count," she said. "You know the way to the gate."

Ivan stamped his foot, and the two red spots of rage were even redder now. He cried out, "Has the degradation of this cursed place dulled your moral sense? Why not say that you're in love with some one else? You think that I've lost caste by dancing at the hotel. I have. But so have you. I've seen you looking at Shakovskaya, that peasant with his 'magic' violin. If you and he have any idea of going to our church on the hill, I tell you this in cold blood here and now: there'll be murder in this Garden of Delight and suicide as well. As God's my judge, that's true."

He turned on his heels and left. With the disturbing vibrations of his presence removed, the restaurant, with its charming trees, resumed its cheerfulness. General Igorivitch, the head cook, and Prince Vladimir Dionisievitch, the xylophonist of the orchestra, were singing to themselves as they arranged the little tables.

Paul Shakovskaya, peasant and violinist, was tying pieces of colored paper to the pergola. He was simple and huge, broad of shoulder, with a magnificent torso.

If Ivan had seen Irina's eyes as Shakovskaya passed, murder and suicide would immediately have turned the Garden of Delight into a Garden of Despair. She loved him. But to Shakovskaya she was the grand duke's daughter—as far removed as though she was a star.

During the fete that night Shakovskaya watched his chief with affection and deference. Turning to Irina, he said, "A master of men, princess. One whom it is a joy and an honor to serve." And because he was happy at the fullness of the garden he took her hand and raised it to his lips.

Excited, too, that the hitherto almost empty place was now filled with laughter and talk, Irina bent forward so that her curls touched one of the high cheek-bones of the peasant's face. She was startled at the effect it had on him.

"Oh, my God," he said beneath his breath, withdrew his hand, clicked his heels, seized his violin and stuck it beneath his chin. And, when, hardly able to pull herself together, Irina took her place in front of the platform to sing, there was a tremor of so great a joy in her voice that it hushed the conversation and brought forth bursts of applause.

And at the back of the garden, in the shadow near the gate, stood Ivan Storogev with madness in his brain and a revolver in his pocket, all according to fate . . . Irina's heart was to be his target, not that of Shakovskaya.

He had made up his mind to hear Irina sing once more, and as the last echo of what was to her swan song died among the trees to send her out of the possibility of belonging to another man and then follow after her.

The orchestra went softly into the opening bars of "Le Bon Temps Viendra" which Shakovskaya had set to a haunting melody. And as the loyal peasant drew his bow across his strings he caught the gleam of Ivan's weapon and saw with horror and amazement that it was not aimed at him but at Irina—Irina who was standing, wholly unaware of impending death, a few feet to his right. With a sort of divine inspiration he flung himself quickly in front of her.

There was a loud report. He fell with a crash at her feet.

And while the startled diners crowded together with screams, a second shot rang out.

Ivan had put the barrel to his head. Chaos, the crush of running people at the gate, the startled movement of the grand duke to the platform with his faithful friends, the crumpled figure of the wasted gigolo lying on his face. And to Shakovskaya the knowledge of a hot sting in his left shoulder and Irina's lips on his mouth in that Garden of Delight.

Sudan Grass Hot Weather Pasture

Native of Africa, Produces When Bluegrass Supply Yields to Heat.

By R. D. Lewis, Extension Specialist, Ohio Agricultural Extension Service.
WNU Service.

Ability of Sudan grass, a grass native to tropical Africa, to grow during the hot weather of July and August makes it an ideal pasture grass when bluegrass is at lowest productivity.

Since the drought of 1930, Ohio farmers are turning in increasing numbers to Sudan grass as a source of cheap feed. That year five acres of Sudan grass at the Hamilton county experiment farm furnished pasture for 23 cows for 63 days.

A frequent cause of failure with it in this climate is too early seeding. According to the experiment station tests of the crop, one to two weeks after corn planting time is the earliest date that it should be sowed.

A list of recommendations for users of Sudan grass include:

Prepare the seedbed early and thoroughly that moisture may be stored and weeds killed.

Buy clean high-germinating seed free from Johnson grass, a serious weed pest.

Seed during June after the soil is thoroughly warmed, at the rate of 20 to 25 pounds on acre.

Seed shallowly on firm seedbeds, one-half to one inch deep on heavy soils.

Apply 150 to 200 pounds of superphosphate fertilizer on manured soils, or the same amount of 4-12-4 analysis on unmanured soils.

Says Ferrous Sulphate Cure for Anemic Pigs

Even the squeal of an anemic suckling pig indicates that the pig is sick, according to John P. Willman of the New York state college of agriculture. The disease, he says, attacks suckling pigs that are confined and that cannot get iron from the soil or from fresh vegetation. The confined pigs may become anemic when about two or four weeks old and the most seriously affected pigs before weaning time.

Normal pigs, when about two or four weeks old, are vigorous, active, plump, firm-fleshed, and have sleek coats. The anemic pigs are listless, lack vigor, and are soft and flabby. As the disease progresses, the pig is thin, the legs get weak and crooked, the skin and mucous membrane become pale, and even the squeal lacks the clearness of the healthy pig.

Three years' tests at the Cornell university experiment station show that one-third of a teaspoonful of a ferrous sulphate solution given internally as a drench once a week prevents the disease.

Money in Raising Colts

Everything is in favor of farmers making money raising colts on cheap feed during the next few years, in the opinion of E. T. Robbins, live stock extension specialist of the college of agriculture, University of Illinois.

The number of horses is getting smaller, prices of horses are going up, and there is no chance of increasing the number in a hurry, he explained.

There are only about 30,000 colts under one year of age in the state, if conditions in Shelby county can be taken as typical, and Robbins says they can. In that county there were only four colts under a year of age in 100 horses that were entered in the college's project to control horse parasites.

Twice as many colts must be raised in order to check the steady decline in number of horses, which has been progressing for more than a dozen years, Robbins said. At the present time there are only 742,000 horses on farms of the state, or about 57 per cent as many as 12 years ago, he reported.

Turk Alfalfa Stained Purple

Turkestan alfalfa has been found to be "of agricultural value in the west-central part of the Mississippi valley and Intermountain regions" because it is resistant to bacterial wilt of alfalfa and therefore will be stained purple this year in compliance with the federal seed act. Heretofore it has been considered unadapted in the United States and 10 per cent of the imported seed has been stained red.—Indiana Farmer.

Farm Hints

Chile expects its present wheat crop to fill the country's needs until the next harvest.

* * *

Albany county, N. Y., leads the state county farm bureaus with 1,238 members for 1933.

* * *

Delinquent taxes have caused more than 2,000,000 acres of land to be transferred to the state from land owners in Michigan.

* * *

In northern Ohio about 10 per cent of the peach buds, enough to bear a moderate crop, survived the February zero wave.

* * *

At an auction sale recently at Red Wing, Minn., an eight-year-old horse sold for $150, while an eight-year-old sedan brought only $25.

* * *

The area of land sown to wheat in England and Wales is about 17 per cent greater than at the end of 1931, says a ministry of agriculture report on conditions on January 1, 1933.

TRUTH OF SALUTE TO FRENCH HERO

The late Col. Charles E. Stanton, who said "Lafayette, we are here!" had the strange experience of coining a probably immortal phrase and of hearing it credited almost as often as it was quoted to another man. Even President Wilson and Marshal Foch in formal addresses attributed to General Pershing the famous saying at the tomb of Lafayette in Picpus cemetery on July 4, 1917. It was a natural error, for General Pershing did speak extemporaneously on that occasion and it was easy for those not present to confuse his remarks with the preceding speech of Colonel Stanton that ended in the supremely appropriate salute to the French hero.

The fact of Colonel Stanton's authorship was never in doubt; it was early asserted in this newspaper and elsewhere in direct rebuttal of the Pershing fiction. But when a legend gains momentum it rolls on and on. It seemed doubtful that a disclaimer by General Pershing himself could right the popular mistake. Colonel Stanton, for his part, sealed his lips and with the most soldierly conception of duty permitted the world-renowned saying to be given constantly to his friend and commander. If General Pershing for 13 years made no emphatic effort publicly to dispel the myth he demolished it handsomely when he came to publish his memoirs in 1931 in these words: "It was on this occasion that utterance was given to an expression that could be born only of inspiration, one that will live long in history: 'Lafayette, we are here!' Many have attributed this striking utterance to me and I have often wished it could have been mine. But I have no recollection of saying anything so splendid. I am sure those words were spoken by Colonel Stanton and to him must go the credit for so happy and felicitous a phrase."

It was only after this declaration that Colonel Stanton said he had "remained quiescent during all these years, having a firm belief that historical accuracy would eventually prevail." The gallant and modest colonel had the final assurance that his contribution to the golden treasury of quotations would bear his name.—New York Herald-Tribune.

Eczema Burned and Itched Terribly
Healed by Cuticura

"Eczema broke out in pimples on my child's head and later spread to her neck and back. It burned and itched terribly and the little one scratched and cried continually. Her clothing hurt her so that I kept a very thin dress on her. Her hair came out in handfuls and what was left was lifeless and dry. The irritation prevented her from sleeping.

"I sent for a free sample of Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I could see a difference after using them. I purchased more and after using two cakes of Cuticura Soap and two boxes of Cuticura Ointment she was healed." (Signed) Mrs. J. K. Thompson, Energy, Texas, July 26, 1932.

SAFE WAY TO TAKE OFF FAT AND KEEP IT OFF

"I take Kruschen Salts because it makes me feel 100% better and it takes fat off and keeps it off. I take it in hot water every morning, then I can eat as much as I like." Miss Ruth Milner, Des Moines, Iowa (Jan. 9, 1933).

Once a day take Kruschen Salts—one half teaspoonful in a glass of hot water first thing every morning. Besides losing ugly fat SAFELY you'll gain in health and physical attractiveness—constipation, gas and acidity will cease to bother—you'll feel younger—more active—full of ambition—clear skin—sparkling eyes.

A jar that lasts 4 weeks costs but a trifle at any drugstore in the world—but demand and get Kruschen and if one bottle doesn't joyfully please you—money back.

Music From the Sky

A CARILLON is an "organ of bells," played by both hands and feet and differs from the ordinary one-note-at-a-time chime in that chords of many notes can be played.

Carillons have come down to us through the corridor of time, having been in use in Europe since the Sixteenth century, where they are regarded with both pride and affection as a community possession and have contributed greatly to the public appreciation of inspiring music.

The largest and most complete carillon in America hangs in the tower of the Park Avenue Baptist church in New York city—the gift of John D. Rockefeller, Jr., in memory of his mother. Cast in England, it contains fifty-three bells, having 110,199 pounds of vibrating bell metal. The bells range in size from eight feet two inches in diameter, weighing 20,720 pounds (low E—said to be the deepest-toned carillon bell in all creation), to one but six and one-quarter inches in diameter, weighing only nine pounds.

Bell experts declare that there are five tones in each bell that are distinguishable to the trained ear and that in order to insure perfect harmony each bell must be tuned to itself and also with all other bells in the carillon.

Obviously, carillon music is both melodious and inspiring. In the hands of an experienced carilloneur such bells speak with surprising intelligence. No words can entirely describe the unbelievable tonal vibrations as this music from the sky floats out from a church tower and fills the air with its uplifting song.

Hundreds of thousands of cars will again crowd our highways beginning July 1 to July 4 inclusive. Many will declare Monday, July 3, a holiday and consequently all these people will be seeking picnic grounds, vacation spots and outing areas.

Drive carefully. Avoid congested roads. Do not be in a hurry. It is better to be several hours late at your vacation spot than never to reach it at all.

You cannot argue with a road hog. Give him the right of way and let him go. It is too late to argue after the accident.

Go early in the morning when roads are not so congested. Return home during the same hours to avoid heavy traffic.

Stop, look and listen at railroad crossings. Trains run all hours of the day and night and also on holidays.

4-H Club Members Win Many Prizes at the Fair

Holt Makes Good Showing in All Activities

Many people from this part of the county attended the 27th Annual Marshall county fair at Warren last week and all report having a big time. The Holt Community Band furnished the music on Friday and were given a big hand by the fair visitors.

The fair board is to be complimented upon getting up such a good fair program and wonderful attractions in these times.

In the big merchandise ticket drawing some of our Holt folks were real lucky. Marvin Sandberg got $50 first prize Friday and Alfred Larson got second prize of $30. Saturday afternoon Marvin Sandberg held a ticket which gave him another $10 prize.

The Holt 4-H Club won a lot of prizes.

The club members who won prizes at the Marshall County Fair, and their placings are as follows:

Tells How New Farm Loans Are Obtained

Any farmer interested in refinancing his farm loan under the new federal refinancing act should get in touch with the National farm loan association in his community or make application directly to the Federal Land Bank, St. Paul, Minn., explains W. L. Calvert, extension economist, University Farm. Application for second mortgage loans may go directly to J. P. Riordan, representative of the Federal Farm Loan Commissioner, Twelfth Floor, Minnesota Building, St. Paul, Minn., or to secretaries of local farm loan associations. County agricultural agents can give information concerning the law and give the name of the secretary of the local land bank.

Both first and second mortgage loans are available.

The first mortgage loans are regular Federal Land Bank Loans and cannot exceed 50 per cent of the value of the land plus 20 per cent of the value of the buildings. The interest rate is 4½ per cent during the first five years. Following the 5-year period, the rate is 5 per cent. In case there is no active farm loan association in the area, the interest rate is 5 per cent straight.

It is necessary to buy $5 of capital stock in the local farm loan association for each $100 borrowed. Purchase of capital stock is also necessary in case the loan is secured directly from the Federal Land Bank.

In case the first mortgage loan is inadequate, in accordance with act of Congress, money has been advanced by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to the Federal Farm Loan Commissioner for loans on second mortgage or on both second mortgage and chattel property.

Second mortgage loans will be made only where the loan will completely take care of outstanding obligations. The total sum loaned from both sources must not exceed 75 per cent of the normal value of the property. The amount of the second mortgage cannot exceed $5,000 to any one person. No second mortgage loans can be made unless the holder of the first mortgage agrees to limit his right to foreclose.

These second mortgages draw interest at 5 per cent. The life of the loan is 13 years. However, the law provides that if the first and second mortgage is secured wholly by real estate, and made for the purpose of reducing and refinancing an existing real estate mortgage or mortgages, the loan may be for the same period as the regular land bank first mortgage.

No capital stock is purchased by the borrower in the case of the second mortgage loan. In cases where the existing indebtedness is so great that a loan for 75 per cent of the appraised value will not cover all the indebtedness, it may be that some creditors will be willing to write down their claims in order to get cash.

Crops and Soils Day, July 17 at Crookston

The Annual Crops and Soils day will be held at the Northwest Experiment Station at Crookston Monday, July 17. A feature of the summer visitation will be the inspection of the station plots and increase fields under the direction of members of the Northwest Station, staff and the Central Station, University Farm. Superintendent R. L. Donovan of the North Central Station, Grand Rapids, has been invited to appear on the program this year and discuss "What Shall the Harvest Be?"

Included in this season's investigations are varietal trails of sweet clover, flax and small grain; a new series of alfalfa trials; plots of perennial forage crops such as crested wheat grass, perennial lespedeza, and alfalfa and meadow fescue admixture; and the third year's results with sweet clover for soil improvement. Representatives from the North Dakota Experiment Station and delegations of farmers from the Valley counties of North Dakota have been invited to join with the Minnesota pure seed growers in this vicinity.

A number of people from here are planning to atttend the program at Crookston.

Here From Philadelphia

Rev. and Mrs. J. L. Redal and family of Philadelphia arrived here Friday evening by car for a visit at the home of their son Rev. L. M. Redal and family. They left on Monday for a visit with relatives at Hendrum, near Moorhead and Portland, North Dakota. They also took in the International Luther League Convention at Fargo. They expect to come back here before they return to their home back east.

Rev. Redal is pastor of the Norwegian Lutheran church in Philadelphia and has one of the largest congregations in the east. Before going to the east coast some years ago he served many of the big calls here in the Red River Valley.

Wool Growers Close Season

The local agency of the Minnesota wool pool ceased operation Saturday when growers in this section of the state completed the marketing of this year's clip. A total of 402,335 pounds of wool was graded at the warehouse here, Manager R. J. Lund sain yesterday, in addition to which 550 pounds received following the departure of the grader was shipped to Wabasha. Shipments in 1932 aggregated 353,000 pounds, indicating a gain for this year of approximately 15 per cent above the previous high record. All wool in the warehouse has now been shipped, a total of 16 carloads leaving the city.—Thief River Falls Times.

News Review of Current Events the World Over

Americans in London Conference Reject Temporary Stabilization of Dollar and Offer Economic Program; Three More States for Prohibition Repeal.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

EXASPERATED by accusations that they were balking the operations of the world conference in London, the American delegates placed their cards on the table, informing the conference that the United States would not consider the temporary stabilization of the dollar during the life of the meeting, as was demanded by the gold bloc. They also presented their economic program, moving the adoption of a resolution binding all nations to cease raising trade barriers against each other, to remove embargoes, quotas, and other arbitrary restrictions, and to scale down tariffs by reciprocal agreements.

Raymond Moley

The delegation then moved the adoption of another resolution committing the nations to co-operative action in expanding credit and in government expenditures on public works for the purpose of reviving industry.

Meanwhile Prof. Raymond Moley, assistant secretary of state, was on his way to London for a week's stay, having been sent hurriedly by President Roosevelt to act as a sort of liaison officer between the delegation and the President.

While the Americans were framing their statement the French were fuming and threatening to bring about adjournment of the conference, and Prime Minister MacDonald was visibly worried. But James M. Cox, chairman of the monetary committee, talked privately with George Bonnet, French minister of finance, and explained Mr. Roosevelt's position on the stabilization question in detail. He outlined the Roosevelt inflation program, told how cheapening the value of the dollar was bringing about a rise of commodity prices and painted a glowing picture of reviving prosperity at home. So the French delegates consented not to disrupt the conference just yet, anyhow.

Secretary of State Hull, it was rumored, intended to return to the United States soon after the arrival of Moley. He refused to confirm or deny this report, and he also declined to express pessimism concerning the success of the conference. He had a long private talk with King George but of course could not reveal what was said.

Mr. Hull took the occasion to deny reports that the American delegation was badly split on the course to pursue in the conference. It had been reported that Senator Couzens of Michigan had read the riot act to the delegation, asserting that the Americans must decide whether to stand for a nationalistic program, represented by the powers conferred on President Roosevelt by congress, or by an internationalistic program, represented by the aims of the conference.

Mr. Hull said he could see no inconsistency. The domestic programs of recovery from depression in the United States and other nations, as he viewed it, were to be reinforced by an international program to be adopted at this conference.

SENATOR KEY PITTMAN of the American delegation submitted to the monetary committee of the conference his proposal for currency reform, in five clauses. The committee promptly and pleasantly accepted the first two clauses, which urged that stability in the international monetary field be attained "as quickly as practicable" and that gold be re-established as the international measure of exchange values.

Key Pittman

Mr. Pittman beamed and thanked the committee, but the gold standard bloc then got into action and decided that the other clauses of the memorandum, the most important part—namely: reduction of currency coverage in gold and remonetization of silver—were so serious and intricate as to demand study. The gold bloc delegates urged that they be referred to committees and subcommittees for analysis and investigation, which was done.

James P. Warburg of the United States and Lord Hailsham of Great Britain supported the Pittman resolution. Lord Hailsham also introduced an amendment to the Pittman resolution providing that each nation should be the judge of the time and the parity at which it will return to the gold standard.

Mr. Warburg also made it quite plain that the United States would return to gold only when and how she wished and would not submit to any international order on this point.

REDUCTION of world wheat crops was discussed at length in the economic section, and experts attached to the various delegations made what was hopefully termed a substantial advance toward an agreement among the United States, Canada, Australia and Argentina to cut output by 15 per cent.

Before the committee Stanley Bruce of Australia said that commonwealth would not accept the French plan to reduce the production of primary commodities as a means of raising prices. He presented the thesis that it was up to the industrial countries of the world to stop trying to be agriculturally self-contained and buy food from agricultural countries in exchange for manufactured goods.

The world has not forgotten the disconcerting proposal of Litvinov of Russia in the armament conference, that the nations represented should agree to disarm immediately. Well, the Russian repeated in London, submitting a draft proposal calling for an economic nonaggression pact by which the nations would bind themselves to refrain from economic attack on each other by means of discriminatory tariffs, special duties or conditions of trade, railway tariffs, charges on shipping, and any kind of boycott by legal or administrative measures. Of course this was too forthright to meet with the approval of the other delegates.

THREE more states are now in the prohibition repeal column, the total number being fourteen—and not one yet for the drys. The latest commonwealths to vote for ratification of the repeal amendment are Iowa, Connecticut and New Hampshire. Connecticut was one of the two states that never ratified the prohibition amendment and the result there was considered a foregone conclusion. The wets won by about 6 to 1. Iowa and New Hampshire, however, had been placed in the doubtful list, so when they turned in substantial majorities for repeal, there was great rejoicing among the antiprohibitionists.

California, West Virginia, Alabama and Arkansas are the next to vote on the issue, and the drys hope to win in the latter two, figuring that thus the question will be put over until next year, when they think their chances will be better.

SUMNER WELLES, our astute ambassador to Cuba, seems to be progressing with his plans for bringing about peace on that troubled island. His scheme for mediation has been accepted by the professors and students in Havana, foes of President Machado, and they have told their delegates in the United States to get in line or quit the opposition organization. With the assured support of the A. B. C. Secret society, the professors, the Nationalist union, the faction headed by Miguel Mariano Gomez and, probably, the partisans of former President Mario G. Menocal, observers believed the ambassador had behind him sufficient opposition strength to justify the early opening of deliberations.

Sumner Welles

It is predicted that the main points of the conciliation program will be:

Immediate restoration of political normalcy throughout the island, liberation of political prisoners, restoration of the suspended guarantees, press freedom and recall of military supervisors.

Constitutional reforms restoring the office of Vice President, eliminated in 1928, providing for his selection immediately after the reforms go into effect; curtailment of the terms of public officials prorogued in 1928 and forbidding any President to succeed himself.

Reform of the electoral code. In this Dr. Howard Lee McBain of Columbia university has been invited to aid.

TWO of the world's most prominent woman radicals died within a few hours of each other. Rose Pastor Stokes passed away in Frankfort, Germany. Born in Russia and married to an American millionaire, she devoted her life to social service and the labor movement, and in her later years turned to Communism.

Clara Zetkin, who died in a sanitorium near Moscow, was for years a Communist member of the German reichstag and once was a candidate for the Presidency of Germany. Last year she presided over the opening session of the reichstag as its oldest member and demanded the impeachment of President Von Hindenburg.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT in his leisurely cruise up the New England coast to Campobello island in the bay of Fundy showed that he is a first class sailor. He acted as skipper of the schooner Amberjack II, and, while he took no unnecessary chances with the weather, he handled the little vessel with skill and nerve. A coast guard cutter and one destroyer accompanied the Amberjack, and of course the press boats went along. After the start Mr. Roosevelt tried to avoid the photographers.

DEDICATION of the Illinois waterway and the lakes to the gulf water route was the occasion of spectacular ceremonies in Chicago near the mouth of the river. Secretary of War George H. Dern flew there by airplane to make an address, and he was accompanied by Speaker Henry T. Rainey and Maj.-Gen. Lytle Brown, chief of the army engineers. Scores of other prominent persons took part in the doings. One of the features of the day was the arrival of a tow of Mississippi river barges carrying the first commercial cargo over the lakes to gulf route from New Orleans to Chicago. It was escorted by the official yacht of the port of New Orleans and other craft.

In one ceremony, Mayor Kelly of Chicago joined Mayor T. Semmes Walmsley of New Orleans in blending water brought from the Gulf of Mexico with that of Lake Michigan. Among other speakers were Governor Horner of Illinois, Maj.-Gen. Thomas Q. Ashburn, president of the federal barge lines and the governors of several states along the inland waterway route. Delegations were present from St. Louis, Milwaukee, Peoria and other cities.

DISPATCHES from Riga, the only source of fairly trustworthy news about Soviet Russia, say that Moscow's trade monopoly is anxiously searching for a nation that will grant the millions of dollars of credit necessary to buy grain for the starving population of Russia. The negotiations opened by Smith Wildman Brookhart, now of the American agricultural administration, are being watched eagerly, and it is asserted that his cotton selling scheme is a camouflage for a secret deal with Boris Skvirski, chief of the Amtorg in New York, concerning large credits for purchases of American grain. Skvirski, it is said, has received instructions to do everything possible to purchase grain with a minimum of publicity since Russia has decided to keep the tragic news of the present famine hidden from the world.

Boris Skvirski

According to Latvian and Estonian diplomats stationed at Moscow, Russia has cotton enough to export but not enough to operate her own mills and while Moscow is willing to take anything the United States will sell her on credit, the nation's chief need is grain.

CHANCELLOR HITLER of Germany delivered a decisive blow to the nationalist followers of Dr. Alfred Hugenberg, minister of agriculture and economics, when he dissolved their fighting units throughout the reich. The police, assisted by Nazi storm troops, raided the headquarters of the nationalist fighters in all the cities and made many arrests. It was then officially announced that these units would hereafter be forbidden. The Steel Helmet war veterans' organization in the Duesseldorf district also was suppressed.

Though Chancellor Dollfuss of Austria professes to want nothing but peace with the German nazis, he has issued a decree outlawing their party and all affiliated organizations in Austria.

Hitler's new "trustees of labor" are assuming dictatorial control of the factories of Germany and it is announced they are "above all parties and interests and are responsible only to the state and its highest leader, Hitler." The employers have been warned they must operate their factories in the service of the nation, not of their purses.

GEN. HUGH S. JOHNSON, administrator for the industrial recovery administration, held a press conference in Washington and told in vigorous language something of what he and his assistants hope to accomplish. In part he said:

"The emergency phase of this job is to try to get people back to work. That's what's worrying everybody, that's what's the trouble with everything. And we've got to shorten the week and pay a living wage for the shorter week.

"How it's going to work out, where it's going, I don't want to say. There's been too much promising all along through this depression.

"The industries want to do the job as much as we do. I don't detect any slacking. I think it's going to work and put several million men back to work this summer. Maybe a snag somewhere along the line, we may stub our toes, but we're going to make a stab at it."

The cotton industry was the first to move toward placing itself under government control. Its proposed code, praised by Johnson, calls for a maximum work week of 40 hours and a minimum wage scale of $10 a week in the South and $11 in the North. This represents a 30 per cent wage advance and a reduction of 20 per cent in working hours.

THE navy formally accepted the Macon and the great airship was commissioned at Akron and left for Lakehurst, N. J. It will go to the naval air station at Sunnyvale, Calif., probably in August.

O. L. BODENHAMER, former national commander of the American Legion, lit a cigarette in an oil field near Henderson, Tex., an explosion of gas ensued and within a few hours Mr. Bodenhamer was dead of burns. He was one of the most prominent citizens of Arkansas.

SYNOPSIS

On her eighteenth birthday, Barbara, motherless daughter of Christopher Thorne, artist, awakes with anticipation of the joys of the day. She receives a birthday ring from Bruce MacLain, young artist friend of the family, but more than friend to Barbara. Barbara and Bruce go picknicking on the sands at Provincetown. He tells her a story of a gypsy boy, a little gypsy girl whom he loves, and the song of a silver flute. She knows it is her own love tale. Her happiness turns to sorrow when she returns home to learn her father has been drowned. Barbara fears she and her brothers and sister will be separated. Relatives arrive and take charge of things. Having been almost a mother to the others, Barbara cannot think of Kit's sensitive nature bruised in Uncle Herbert's household by his rough-and-ready cousins, and Gay spoiled by her association with silly Aunt Lola. Bruce urges immediate marriage, but that would mean separation.

Aunt Lola's car stood at the gate, a beautiful car, dove-gray with silver fittings and a chauffeur named Pierre. Aunt Lola, small and plump, with massaged-looking skin and hair a shade too golden, sat beside the living room fire wrapped in moleskin as soft as velvet.

Gay was bewitched by Aunt Lola, her clothes, her jewels, the dove-gray car, the chauffeur named Pierre. Already she was different, Barbara thought, watching Gay adopt Aunt Lola's mannerisms, her gestures, the affected tones of her voice. She didn't want Gay to grow up into a silly little peacock, like Gwen, Aunt Lola's daughter, married now and, according to family gossip, "leading her husband a life." Mother would have hated it so. And Father, too. Gay could be so nice.

Uncle Herbert came and went, attending to business matters, interviewing the real estate agent and the officials at the bank. Uncle Herbert was not above medium weight, ruddy and stockily built. But you felt that he was very tall and imposing.

Uncle Herbert was kind to the children. He was especially kind to Kit.

"Well, Michael Angelo," he would say, "have you painted a masterpiece yet?"

Or, pinching Kit's arm, he would say:

"No muscle!" He would pretend to be terribly shocked. "See here, young fellow, that won't do. Wait 'til we get you out in Pittsburgh. Roast beef is what you need."

Did he think they hadn't been properly fed? Barbara would try to choke back her indignation, knowing that Uncle Herbert meant only to be kind.

He would talk about Paul who played on his college football team and Joe who was a prep school star and Junior who had six medals for swimming, although he was only fifteen. Barbara, an ache in her heart, would see Kit's flush deepen and a frightened look creep into his eyes. Kit couldn't play football. He would never be very strong.

Her last hope had vanished. She had pinned up her hair and worn her longest frock, but she knew that she looked as young and frightened as she felt, when she asked them to let her keep the children there in the gray-shingled house.

"We could manage." Barbara felt her courage slipping away with the pins that held her hair. "You can live so cheaply in Provincetown. If Kit gets a job and we don't have Martha and—"

"It isn't only a question of money," Uncle Herbert said not unkindly. "There are many things to be considered. You're too young to assume such a responsibility. Besides," he added, "it isn't necessary."

It was necessary. She knew, in her heart, that it was necessary to keep the children together. But she couldn't put it into words. They confused her with grown-up logic. She shut herself up in the studio and cried helplessly with her cheek against Father's coat.

Aunt Josephine had decided not to come. The change in the weather, she wrote, made the journey too great a risk, since she wasn't as young as she used to be. Barbara was to come to Providence with Cousin Evie. She enclosed a generous check.

Barbara looked thoughtfully at the strip of pink paper signed in spidery writing with Great-aunt Josephine's name. The check would take her to New York and buy her a winter coat. A dress, perhaps. Her wedding dress. Aunt Josephine would make a fuss about Bruce. She didn't approve of artists. But Mother had married Father.

It would be lovely to be with Bruce, she thought, curled in a corner of the davenport, watching the lights in the fire. She wouldn't mind if they hadn't much money. Darling Bruce! She twisted his ring on her finger and heard the tinkling of the small gold heart. She hadn't told anybody. The children thought it was a birthday ring. The relations might make fun. She couldn't bear that. Darling Bruce! If it weren't for the children . . .

The house was to be sold. Uncle Herbert decided that was best. They couldn't understand why Barbara minded so much.

"Why should you want to keep it?" Cousin Julia asked in amazement.

"We like it, Cousin Julia." Never had the long low room seemed so charming and friendly and dear. But she knew it was useless to explain. They never could understand. Her eyes brimmed over with tears.

Cousin Julia, assisted by Martha, thoroughly cleaned the house. Things were burned in the fireplace. There was little worth keeping, Cousin Julia said. Barbara packed her sea-chest with treasured odds and ends. Everything else would be sold.

Their last day together arrived, a rainy day, chilly and depressing. Martha's eyes were rimmed with red and her scolding voice was gentle. People from the town came to say good-by.

"We'll miss you," they said. "The house won't seem the same."

Never the same again! Barbara realized it, all at once, with a sickening lurch of her heart. The house would belong to somebody else, the house that Mother had loved. They wouldn't see the willows grow green, next spring, and the apple tree burst into bloom. They wouldn't sit on the studio steps with "Chips" stretched out in the sunshine across their feet. . . .

Barbara ran blindly from the room, up the stairs, along the hall, up into the attic.

She heard a sound of sobbing. Kit lay on a broken sofa in the unused part of the attic, his face buried in his arms.

"Kit!" she cried softly, running to him, kneeling beside the sofa.

He raised a tear-stained face. His cheeks were hot and flushed. A feverish light burned in his hazel eyes.

"Sorry, Babs," he gulped, ashamed of crying, trying to be manly.

"Do you mind so much about going with Uncle Herbert?" she asked, her heart breaking for Kit.

"You don't know what it's like, Babs," he sobbed, no longer ashamed. "Uncle Herbert's boys are so strong. I—I couldn't keep up. They laugh at things I say. They—they think I'm sort of crazy. I'd rather die than go back there."

It was dreadful to hear him sob. Kit so seldom cried; not even when he was a little boy and had to sit in a chair. He minded things so terribly. Those great boobies of Uncle Herbert's, Barbara thought. It wasn't fair. She must do something. Kit shouldn't suffer so.

"You needn't go with Uncle Herbert," she said, not very sure about anything, wanting only to hush his strangling sobs. "We'll all stay together, Kit."

He raised his head, a question in his eyes.

"We'll all run away together!" A plan presented itself to Barbara. She didn't know why she thought of it. Perhaps all along it had been lurking somewhere in the back of her mind. "I know exactly what we'll do." Her voice sounded frightened, but happy, too. She felt her heart thumping against her ribs.

"What?" Kit asked hoarsely.

"We'll—"

"Yoo-hoo!"

That was Cousin Evie coming up the stairs.

"Shh!" Barbara whispered, her eyes dark with excitement, a warm pink flush in her cheeks. "In the studio after supper. I'll tell you about it then."

Cousin Evie, wrapped in a crocheted shawl, reached the top of the attic steps.

"You naughty kiddies!" she said, smiling brightly, shaking a finger in playful reproof. "Hiding up here in the cold! Come on downstairs by the fire. Martha has made hot chocolate. We'll have a nice little game of hearts."

* * * * * * *

It was chilly in the studio. The children huddled together in a circle on the floor. They hadn't dared to turn on the lights for fear of being discovered. A candle burned in an ash tray. Kit and Gay and Jamie looked at Barbara.

"We'll run away," she began, trying to make her voice sound confident in spite of the way that her heart was thumping against her ribs.

"All of us?" Gay asked, forgetting Aunt Lola and the dove-gray car in the excitement of an adventure.

"All of us," Barbara said, her eyes very wide and frightened in her pale face.

"'Chips,' too?" Jamie asked the question anxiously, the small yellow dog hugged tight against his chest.

"'Chips,' too," Barbara said almost gaily. "Why, Jamie Thorne, do you think we could ever leave 'Chips'?"

"Where are we going?" Jamie asked not caring very much since "Chips" was going too.

"We're going to 'Uncle Stephen.'" There, it was out. And it didn't sound crazy at all. It sounded like a sensible thing to do.

"Did he invite us?" Gay asked eagerly, her warm color deepening.

"No," Barbara was forced to admit. "We're just going anyway."

"But Babs," worried thoughtful Kit, "shouldn't you write to ask him? Or telegraph or something?"

"It's better if he sees us." Barbara was sure of that. Certainly "Uncle Stephen" could never resist the charms of Kit and Gay and Jamie. . . . "A crusty old bachelor!" . . . She didn't believe it. His letter sounded so nice. . . .

HER TWENTY-FOUR HOURS OF GLORY

Parisian "Lady of the Tub" Queen for a Day.

"In the gay nineties," says a bulletin of the National Geographic society, "the washerwomen or blanchisseuses in each quarter of the city of Paris elected a queen from among themselves, and the queens in their turn elected a 'Queen of Queens.' This honored lady of the tub was borne on a throne to the president of the republic, who bestowed upon her a golden bracelet. Among other presents she received $100 in gold, a dress which might serve for her wedding gown, and a crown which might later be pawned or used as a parlor decoration, depending upon the vicissitudes of the queen's later years.

"Recent celebrations have been merely processions of floats, grotesque or lovely according to the moods of their designers. The queens of queens have been beautiful—and with no background of suds. The president now presents them with wrist watches.

"Mi-Careme's queen for the day is selected from the 20 queens who represent the 20 arrondissements of Paris. In addition to these queens there are many more, including queens of students, hucksters, dressmakers, and typists.

"The number of queens has grown so great that it is now impossible for each to have a separate automobile for herself, and others for her attendants; so each queen has her car filled with her ladies in waiting. The automobiles of the queens are followed by floats which often caricature current events. There may be, for example, the ogre of high prices, the housing problem, and the vulture-faced landlord.

"The route of the procession is equivalent to a sight-seeing tour of Paris. It passes through the most interesting sections of the city: the Latin quarter, the Place de la Concorde, the Madeleine, the Opera, and Port Saint Denis. The procession stops at two places, the Elysee palace, where the president kisses the hand of the queen of queens and bestows a wrist watch upon her, and the Hotel de Ville where the city fathers' place her on a dais which is occasionally used for the entertainment of a visiting sovereign.

"Mid-lent Thursday is the only day except the French national holiday on July 14 when the Paris boulevards are closed to vehicular traffic and turned over to the crowds of pedestrians struggling to get close to the festival cars.

"Celebrations for Mi-Careme are now held in Corsica, Italy, and Spain. Nice and Cannes on the French Riviera, stand out, however, as the cities where the holiday spirit of the occasion is enjoyed with prewar zest and where the populace is not just a crowd of observers but active participants in the fun."

Hypocrite's Hard Job

Greatest weakness of hypocrisy is that it is hard to keep up.

Says Her Husband Lost 16 Pounds In 4 Weeks

"I have never found a medicine that 'peps' you up like Kruschen Salts and better still, leaves you 'pepped up.' I take it two or three times a week—not to reduce but merely to feel good and clean. My husband took it to reduce, he lost 16 pounds in 4 weeks." Mrs. E. A. Ferris, Washington, D. C. (December 29, 1932).

To lose fat and at the same time gain in physical attractiveness and feel spirited and youthful take one half teaspoonful of Kruschen in a glass of hot water before breakfast every morning.

A jar that lasts 4 weeks costs but a trifle at any drugstore in the world but be sure and get Kruschen Salts the SAFE way to reduce wide hips, prominent front and double chin and again feel the joy of living—money back if dissatisfied after the first jar.

Beg Buddha to End Wave of Suicides

Motomura, Japan.—The chanting of Buddhist priests mingled with the rumblings of Mihara volcano in the first service for the souls of suicides on this Island of Death.

The memorial service was arranged by priests of the Zojoji temple, Tokyo, to comfort the spirits of hundreds who have leaped into the fiery pit of Mihara-San. Alarmed at the increase of suicides on Oshima island, the priests appealed to Buddha to discourage men and women from taking their lives.

The priests are confident that their efforts will lessen if not end the wave of suicides which during the past year have made Oshima notorious throughout the Orient.

Unearth Remains of an Ancient Aqueduct

Tunnel Built by Sennacherib About 705 B. C.

Chicago.—News of recent discoveries of a great aqueduct, temples, and ancient records were brought home to Chicago by Dr. James Henry Breasted, who has just returned after spending several months in the Near East visiting the twelve expeditions of the Oriental institute of the University of Chicago. The trip was the first that Doctor Breasted, director of the Oriental institute, had made to the Near East in three years and a half.

One of the most important of the recent discoveries was that of a section of a 30-mile aqueduct built by Sennacherib, king of Assyria about 705 B. C. Dr. Thorkild Jacobsen, who came to the institute on a Swedish fellowship, and is now with Dr. Henri Frankfort, field director of the Iraq expedition, made the discovery.

"Doctor Jacobsen was out in the country when he noticed a native sitting on a row of blocks, some of which bore the inscription of Sennacherib," Doctor Breasted said. "On inquiry, he found that the blocks had come from nearby, and Doctor Jacobsen, following the clew, found what he reported to be a bridge over a river. We received concession to investigate, and found that the 'bridge' was a section of a great stone aqueduct. This section, 1,000 feet long, and 80 feet wide, magnificently built, carried the water over a river. It is supported on pointed arches, and their use in this fashion is the earliest known.

Earliest in Existence.

"This aqueduct is the earliest in existence, and undoubtedly influenced the Romans in their construction. Twenty-five to thirty miles long, it carried water from the Kurdish mountains to Nineveh, and among other uses watered that city's famous gardens. Each pier contains a building inscription of Sennacherib, and when translated, it was found that he called the aqueduct 'Sennacherib's channel.'

"The annals of Sennacherib give an account of this 'channel,' which hitherto had not been identified, and also give the names of a whole series of villages past which it went. In one of the villages near the route of the aqueduct, Doctor Frankfort found a purely oral tradition that these ruins had brought water for the gardens of Nineveh. The tradition has the names of the villages as Sennacherib listed them, although the names have long since changed. That tradition had been passed down by word of mouth for 2,600 years."

Another discovery to which Doctor Breasted referred as representative of the more important recent finds was that of Gordon Loud who has charge of the architectural survey of Khorsabad under Doctor Frankfort. Mr. Loud found in the palace a temple previously unknown, sacred to Nabu, who is referred to in the Old Testament as Nebo.

"One of Nabu's functions was that of god of writing," Doctor Breasted observed, "and we have hopes of finding in the temple various important records. Mr. Loud also found at Khorsabad a large clay tablet which lists 93 Assyrian kings, reaching far behind our earliest known chronology of the Assyrian line. The earliest we knew was a king Ushpia, who hung in the air, so to speak. This tablet has eight kings preceding Ushpia, and all the succession after him. It covers a period of thirteen or fourteen hundred years, from about 2200 B. C. to 730 B. C.

Important Tablets.

"The reliefs at Persepolis were tremendously impressive, exceeding my expectations. They nearly double in bulk the art of the old Persian period. Shortly after I had left Persepolis I received word from Dr. E. E. Herzfeld, field director of the Persepolis expedition, that in shifting his field railroad he had cut through a ridge and discovered hundreds of Ellamite cuneiform tablets.

"Ellamite was the pre-Persian language, and the records are very important. They apparently relate to the building of the palaces at Khorsabad, but because Doctor Herzfeld is the only member of the expedition who did not come down with malaria and had to leave, they have not been carefully examined as yet.

"At the present time we have only the Greek accounts of the great battles of Marathon and Salamis, but it is not improbable that we shall find the Persian accounts of these battles in the records at Persepolis."

Doctor Breasted flew 5,000 miles by plane in the Near East in visiting the expeditions, covering in five minutes distances that on earlier trips had required a day by camel. On this recent visit he saw for the first time the expeditions and work being carried on at Persepolis, and by the Syrian and Iraq field forces. Since his last trip, new headquarters buildings have been erected by the Institute at Luxor, Persepolis, and Tel Asmar.

Log Rolling That's Not Political

French Actress to Quit After 62 Years on Stage

Paris.—Mme. Marie Laure has decided to retire after 62 years of acting on the stage. She is France's oldest actress.

It was only a chance incident that directed her career toward the stage, she said. "I had spent most of my youth in England and came here with my mother on a visit when the city was barricaded by the Germans," she explained. "Having no money, we were in a desperate situation when I obtained the permission of the old Alcazar d'Hiver to recite stories and poetry. When peace came I continued on the stage. My greatest success, I believe, was 'Amhra,' a patriotic play which found great favor during the period of Marshal MacMahon's popularity. I have played at the Porte-Saint-Martin, the Chateau d'Eau, and the Odeon.

"After my last two years at the Odeon, I went to Russia, where I played at the Imperial theater with Guitry, the father, of course, of the present Guitry."

Mme. Laure also has been in the movies, assisting at the birth of the motion picture industry. Her roles were in the silent films in a studio in Neuilly, where Ponctal and Calmette directed.

Acting continuously since the Franco-Prussian war, France's oldest actress believes she deserves a rest now. She is seventy-one.

Find Fossil Bones of Camel in Nevada Lake

Las Vegas, Nev.—When camels were introduced into Nevada and the western states 76 years ago as pack animals, they were coming back to the home of their ancestors, evidence unearthed here has revealed.

In the old lake bed of Buffalo camp, ten miles north of here, Albert C. Silberling, fossil expert formerly associated with the Carnegie museum in New York city, and Fernley Hunter, amateur paleontologist, have found a mammoth burial place of mammals of the Pliocene age.

From the lake bed they unearthed and shipped a thousand pounds of fossilized bones to the American Museum of Natural History in New York.

Bones of camelops—or humpless camels—were found in great number. These fossils are between 20,000 and 30,000 years years old, Silberling said.

The camel, like its companion beast of burden—the horse—originated in north Africa during the tertiary period, or the modern era of geology when the mountains were made and huge reptiles of the cretaceous period had perished, and the dominant land life was mammalian.

Paris Tower Will Dwarf Empire State Building

Paris.—Plans were announced for construction of a concrete tower 2,296 feet high. It would be the world's tallest structure.

The tower would be completed for the Paris exposition of 1937. It would have a ramp which would enable automobiles to climb to a height of 1,640 feet.

The Empire State building in New York, the world's tallest building, is 1,265 feet high. The Eiffel Tower in Paris is 1,000 feet.

Sound Sea for "Lost Continent"

Vanished Lemuria Believed in Indian Ocean.

London.—To find the "lost continent" of Lemuria, British scientists are to search the bottom of the Indian ocean. The continent is supposed to have stretched from Madagascar to Sumatra and India in prehistoric times.

The expedition will be headed by Capt. J. M. MacKenzie, who commanded the Discovery on Sir Douglas Mawson's last voyage to the Antarctic. The Egyptian government has lent its research ship, Mahabiss. The scientific leader will be Col. Seymour Sewell, director of the zoological survey of India.

Altogether the expedition will be nine months at sea between Africa and India in the Mahabiss. The 105-ton steamer is being fitted with the later inventions for under-sea exploration at Alexandria, and will be ready to leave England in August.

The gadgets include a new echo sounding machine, which not only records the depths by the length of time an echo takes to turn from the sea bottom but also provides a running representation of the ocean bed on an apparatus like a stock ticker.

Steel bottles, which close automatically at a certain depth, will be let down to secure specimens of the sea life and record temperatures. Lead lines will be dropped four miles down to take samples of the ocean bottom.

Speaking of the expedition, J. O. Murray, whose father's will provided the money for the search, said:

"The main object will be to discover whether there are any traces of the continental land areas which it is supposed stretched westward from India and formed the continent of 'Lemuria.'

"A further object will be to ascertain whether there are ridges and peaks in this semi-enclosed ocean, such as the meteor expedition found in the Atlantic."

News of North Dakota

EVENTS OF THE WEEK THROUGHOUT THE STATE TOLD IN BRIEF FORM

Hope.—The American Legion auxiliary at its recent meeting voted to plant six elm trees in the cemetery in memory of their six deceased members.

Bismarck. — Jean Herigstad, Minot, was elected grand worthy advisor of the North Dakota assembly of the Order of the Rainbow for girls at the state convention held here.

Cooperstown. — Verner LeLander Johnson, outstanding graduate of the local high school, received a freshman scholarship award of $150 for 1933-34 at Northwestern university, Chicago.

Bismarck. — Thieves stole about $1,000 worth of gold from three Bismarck dental offices recently. In the loot were plate, cast and foil gold used in dental practice for fillings, trimmings and other work on teeth.

Agate. — Walter Simonson received a $350 prize for submitting an original idea in a phase of agricultural work in a contest sponsored by James F. Bell of Minneapolis at the North Dakota State college. The contest called for original ideas.

Kenmare. — Jacob Schwartz, residing eight miles southwest of Kenmare, is erecting a flour mill on his farm. The mill will be ready for operation by fall. Schwartz purchased the machinery from a concern at Rolette about a year ago.

Langdon. — More than 400 Homemakers club members, their families and friends, gathered at the Cavalier county fair grounds for the fourth annual Achievement day held here recently. The Vang-Mona club won the distinction of having the largest delegation present.

Minot. — Robert Rindt has been asked to join Milt Minkle's Texas Rangers rodeo, which just concluded a showing in the coliseum at Chicago. An expert with a rope and experienced rider of bucking bronchos, Rindt plans to spend the summer months with the rodeo.

Havana. — The Havana State bank was again the target for bandits, this being the second time in two months. Three bandits escaped with approximately $800 in cash and kidnaped the woman assistant cashier, Helen Kriesel, leaving her out of the car at the edge of town.

Park River. — H. Weberg and his daughter, Loreen, aged 17, of The Pas, Manitoba, formerly of Park River, are traveling on an Alaskan sled equipped with wheels and drawn by three huskies to the World's fair at Chicago. They expect to reach Chicago early in August.

Portland.—B. B. Grinley, city mayor, has the largest privately owned evergreen grove in the state. The grove, which has 5,000 trees in it, is located in Primrose township, Steele county. Grinley planted the seeds in his garden over 20 years ago and transplanted the trees to the farm in 1913.

Fargo.—Frank P. Clapp, 23, former student at the N. D. A. C., died in a Minneapolis hospital from toxic poisoning following extraction of a wisdom tooth. He had been with the service department of the Standard Oil company in Minneapolis for seven months.

Enderlin.—Work has started here on the new $100,000 school structure to replace the 20-room building destroyed by fire March 4. The new building, 65x168 feet, will be fireproof of reinforced concrete construction, with face brick and Indiana limestone trim.

Grand Forks.—John S. Leonard, 38, Grand Forks, drowned while swimming in the Red river just below the business district. Leonard was seized with cramps and went down 20 feet from shore. Joseph Poole, Leonard's companion, unable to swim, could not go to his aid.

Williston. — War on grasshoppers will soon be on in full swing in Williams county. The county agent has ordered a carload of bran from the state mill at Grand Forks, 10,000 pounds of arsenic from Montana, and farmers are hauling molasses from the factory at Sidney.

Fargo.—Joseph A. Pierce, who died in a St. Paul hospital from a chronic intestinal infection, hastened by the severe heat, came to Fargo in 1911, joining the Porte company, then engaged in the printing business. At the time of his death he was president of the Pierce company and Pierce Advertising agency here.

Bismarck. — Eugene Strand was killed by lightning at his home three miles northeast of Still. Strand was standing beside the radio playing a violin when the bolt struck and it is believed the lightning traveled down the aerial into the room of the house. Two brothers, Woodrow and Lynn, were knocked unconscious. The lightning stripped all strings from the violin and also broke a window in the house.

Hamar. — Roy Tisch was killed as the result of an explosion of a dynamite cap, which mutilated his face, and death being instantaneous. Suicide is suspected as the cause of the explosion.

Lisbon. — Mrs. David Keyes, commercial teacher in the Sheldon schools some twenty years ago, is the author of a book, "Personal Instruction," in the Gregg system of shorthand. Mrs. Keyes has had the edition copyrighted and has received a certificate of copyright from Washington.

DISPELS MYSTERY OF BANK BUSINESS

Country Banker Gives Simplified Picture of How a Bank Works to Help Other People's Business

A COUNTRY banker recently prepared the following simplified statement for his neighbors on just how a bank goes about helping them:

"It is the most important part of a bank's business to lend money. Of all the money deposited in a bank, the law requires that a certain percentage be kept on hand as a reserve to meet the demands of depositors. It is the business of its officers to lend the balance conservatively and safely.

"The loans of a properly managed bank are invariably made to those it believes are able to repay, and always on condition that they be repaid at a stipulated time.

"The promise of an individual to repay a loan to a bank on a certain date is as sacredly inviolable as the promise of a bank to repay its depositors on demand, or, in the case of a certificate of deposit, on the date it falls due. When it comes to be known of an individual that he 'always pays,' his credit is established and his bank is always glad to extend him needed accommodations.

"A well managed bank never capitalizes industries. That is, it does not place its loans in fixed form, but puts them where they are to be used for temporary requirements, and where they will be taken up at the time specified.

How a Bank Lends

"It is not the function of a bank to become a partner in industries, nor could it be legitimately done with the money of depositors. Its loans must be kept in 'liquid' form,—that is, repayable in cash at stated intervals.

"A bank must use the greatest discrimination in making loans. A stranger cannot expect accommodations. It is customary for the borrower to make a statement of his financial affairs, which is kept in the bank's records. It is a punishable offense to make a false statement for the purpose of borrowing funds.

"Naturally, in their dealing with the regular depositors of the bank, its officers become well acquainted with their characters and their resources and are thus in a position to determine how large a line of credit each one is entitled to. That is one of the great advantages of being a bank depositor.

"The man who knows how to get into debt wisely, that is, who borrows money with which to make more money through legitimate enterprise, is the borrower whom the bank is looking for. By the frank interchange of opinion and a free discussion of various projects, the borrower is often guided and helped by his banker.

"In order to procure a line of credit at a bank three things are important:

"1. A statement of assets showing a basis of credit in the way of invested capital, or collateral of sufficient value to cover amount of loan, or

"2. An endorser whose credit is established at the bank; and

"3. Average deposits of a sufficient amount to justify the extension of the desired accommodation."

AS WILL ROGERS SEES IT

Will Rogers recently told why the banks had got into trouble. "Don't blame it all on the bankers," he said. "When we all needed money they loaned it to us—but when they needed it we couldn't [illegible] it back."

FOR FAILURE PROOF BANKING STRUCTURE

Speaker Outlines Threefold Co-operation Between Bankers, Government Officials and the Public to Maintain Bank Standards

TWO elements beside the bankers themselves are required in order to give the nation universally the type of banking it should have, Francis H. Sisson, president of the American Bankers Association, declared in a recent address. He said that the efficiency of government officials upon whom the people rely to supervise the banks properly, and the patronage of the people themselves are factors in the kind of banks a community shall have.

"There can be no question that the people of the United States should have banks immune from failure and wholly free from bad or questionable banking," Mr. Sisson said. "It is not enough, as President Roosevelt has said, that while some bankers had been incompetent or dishonest, this was not true in the vast majority of our banks. A situation should exist in which there is not even a small minority of bankers open to question. There should be no room for dishonesty or incompetency to exercise any influence in banking anywhere.

"While bad faith and bad management enter the human factor in all types of business, their effects in banking should be surrounded by such special safeguards as to render them no longer a factor in bank failures. The responsibility for bringing this about, however, cannot rest upon the bankers alone, for the means to accomplish it are not wholly in their hands. There are other essential elements.

"One is the efficiency of government supervision. Since we rely so greatly upon supervision, it may, unless it is of the highest order in safeguarding the public interest, create a sense of false security. Supervision should render bad banking impossible, but it has failed to do so. There was supervision by presumably the highest type of bank supervisors in every one of the instances of questionable banking that has shocked the attention of the country during the past three years. Therefore a thorough strengthening of supervision is clearly called for if the people are to rely on it to the fullest extent for the protection of their interests.

The Public's Part

"Another essential factor in maintaining good banks involves the part played by the public in banking. There is certainly a responsibility on the people themselves to support that type of banker whose rigid adherence to sound principles makes a sound bank, rather than to give their patronage to the easy going banker who may be easier to do business with, but whose methods create a weak bank.

"Bank customers are charged with a great responsibility in protecting the safety of their banks in respect to their utilization of the assets of the banks as borrowers. Banks have failed because many of their loans and securities, created in good faith by bankers in cooperating with the business interests of the country, proved unsound under subsequent conditions. An unsound loan is created by the borrower as well as the banker. A bank is only as sound as its community, and this applies also to the banking structure as a whole in relation to the economic condition of the nation as a whole.

"A bank is truly a semi-public institution, but in a reciprocal sense—it has its obligations to the public, but so has the public equal obligations to the bank. No one who has not sound banking principles at heart has any business in a bank whether as a banker or as a customer.

"The banker is a semi-public servant. He is charged with the heaviest of responsibilities and obligations that occur in our economic life. But he can meet these fully only through the cooperation of good laws, good public officials who are empowered to exercise authority over his bank, and good business methods on the part of business men generally who utilize his bank. Only through such cooperation by all elements in our nation's community life can we be assured of a failure-proof banking structure.

"The Administration at Washington has taken hold of this problem with a firm grasp of essentials and is exercising splendid leadership toward the desired end. The strongest feature of the government program will be found in recognizing the joint responsibility of the public, of business and of government officials together with the bankers themselves in creating the kind of banking the nation should have."

Improved Pasture Pays

IMPROVED pastures are a cheap source of feed for stock. A farmer in New Hampshire, cooperating with his county agent top-dressed his 5 acres of pasture with 500 pounds of complete fertilizer at a cost of $75, reports the United States Department of Agriculture. After 4 weeks he turned his cows out on this pasture. Tests made during the six weeks the cows grazed there showed that his herd produced 7,000 pounds more milk than they did in the same period the previous year, although the farmer had one cow fewer and fed 800 pounds less grain. Based on current milk prices he made $139 on the extra milk and saved $16 on the grain, netting him an increase in income of $120.—U. S. Department of Agriculture.

Local Labor to Get Preference In U.S. Road Program

Labor to be employed on the state's $10,000,000 Federal fund highway program will be taken largely from the counties in which work is to be done, and will not be hired by the State Highway department, according to N. W. Elsberg, state highway commissioner.

Hundreds of persons have made applications to the Highway department for jobs in the past few days, apparently thinking that the department will be in charge of employment, Mr. Elsberg explained.

"Federal regulations governing the work say that the United States Employment Service in each state will designate agencies to prepare lists of skilled and unskilled labor for each highway project", he said.

"It is our understanding that when a contract is let in a certain county, the U. S. Employment Service will select some existing relief or employment agency in that county and have it supply a list of available workers to the contractor. The contractor will select his men from this list.

"Federal regulations contain this clause: 'The requirements for preference in employment will not permit a contractor to carry with him skilled or unskilled laborers to any project unless they are ex-service men with dependents.'

"War veterens with dependents are specifically designated as first choice for jobs. Next in preference are residents of the city or county in which work is to be done, and third in order are residents of the state not living in the county where work is located."

The regulations also provide that the State Highway department shall do one representative construction project by direct labor, in order to provide a comparison with contract work in cost and efficiency.

In general, the contractors will be required to use hand labor where it does not interfere with sound economy and public interest. Any contractors who violate the Federal regulations will be barred from further participation in the emergency road work.

First projects under the emergency program are expected to get under way in August.

The Elliott Tent Show

The Elliott Show company pulled in here on Monday morning and set up their big tent. Mr. Elliott is running one of the best and cleanest shows that are on the road today and we are recommending his company to the people of our community and elsewhere.

If you are looking for a place to spend an evening and have some fun, come in and see this show. The price of admission is only 10 and 20 cents. Laugh and be happy at the Elliott Tent Show for three more nights.

The Weather

No rains here the past week. We have had some real hot and sultry days but the crops are coming fine and every farmer is busy in the hay field.

Several people from here attended the Lutheran Assembly at Squaw Point in Thief River Falls on Sunday. A very large delegation from the northwest was there.

Why Do Cream Tests Vary?

The following are some of the principal causes for variation in the test of cream:

1. Richness of Milk Separated.
   The test of milk will change from time to time, due to fresh cows, change of feed, weather conditions, etc.
2. Changes in Temperature of Milk.
   If milk is allowed to cool below 85 degrees before being skimmed, the cream test will increase and the loss of fat in the skimmilk will increase also.

Crops and Soils Day

Community clubs and crops producers thruout the Northwest have been invited to attend the Annual Crops and Soils day meeting to be held at the Northwest Experiment Station down at Crookston, Monday, July 17. The day's program will include a picnic dinner on the campus at noon, followed by a brief business meeting of the Red River Valley Crops and Soils Association of which Herman Skyberg, Fisher, is the president; Melvin Flaskerud, Fosston, vice-president; E. R. Clark, Northwest School, secretary; and S. M. Sivertson, treasuresr. The speaker of the day will be Superintendent R. L. Donovan of the North Central School and Station, who will discuss "What Shall the Harvest Be?"

Visitors will be especially interested in the inspection of the station plots and increase fields. Professors R. S. Dunham and E. R. Clark will be assisted by Dr. L. Powers and Dr. Iver Johnson of University Farm in explaining the various trials. According to R. S. Dunham, a summary of several years' work with sweet clover as a forage and soil improvement crop will be presented during the day.

T. M. McCall, station horticulturist, will conduct visitors thru the potato plots which include increase plots of the newer potato seedlings; pure seed plots of Triumphs; depth of planting tests; soil improvement work with sweet clover; cooperative potato breeding plots; spacing tests in the tuber hill planting; and comparative plantings of growers' strains of Early Ohios with newer seedlings.

The station will provide coffee, cream, and sugar to all who bring their picnic lunch.

Many people from Holt and community took in the Annual Creamery Picnic at the Old Mill east of Argyle on Sunday. It was reported that about 7,000 people were there to spend the day and enjoy the program of sports and speeches.

A BANK REFLECTS THE LIFE ABOUT IT

Loans and Investments on Which Condition of a Bank Depends Determined by the Kind of Business Surrounding It

POLITICAL and popular misapprehensions toward banking are due to little else than failure to realize that it is what the people themselves do that the condition of banking reflects, and that banking cannot of itself reflect events and conditions other than those that actually originate from surrounding circumstances, Francis H. Sisson, President of the American Bankers Association, says in an article in Forum Magazine.

The character of an institution's notes and investments indicates whether it is in the farm regions, a manufacturing center, a mercantile neighborhood or a great financial district, he says, and furthermore, besides identifying the institution as to its locality, a study of its notes will equally clearly indicate the economic conditions surrounding it.

"If a farm district bank's note history shows that its loans rise and fall with the normal cycle of production and marketing of the products of the region, it may be taken as an index of economic good health for the locality," he says. "But if, over a period, the loan volume shows a dwindling trend it may mean a region that is losing ground,—becoming exhausted or being robbed of business by another community. Or if a large proportion of the loans are not paid at maturity but are chronically renewed, or if stocks or bonds or real estate have to be taken as additional security, these too have economic significances, reflecting perhaps crop failures, over-production or inefficient, high cost farming methods in a highly competitive national or world market, such as wheat. Inevitably all these facts are reflected in the condition of the local banks.

City Banks Too

"If the loans of a bank in a manufacturing or merchandising field show a smoothly running coordination with production and distribution they, too, mirror a healthy economic situation. Or there may be here also signs that reflect growing unfavorable conditions, such as excessive loan renewals, over-enthusiasm and therefore over-expansion of credit extended to makers or dealers in particular products, and similar circumstances. Similar conditions apply to banks engaged in financing the activities of the securities markets.

"The foregoing is merely suggestive of the infinite aspects of the life outwardly surrounding the banks which form and control their internal conditions. Although these facts seem obvious enough, the discussions and criticisms that have raged about the banks often appear to set them apart as somehow separate from the lives of our people, casting forth a malignant influence upon agriculture, industry and trade from forces generated wholly within themselves.

"The truth of the matter is that the fate of the banks is inseparably interwoven with the fate of the rest of the people and of the nation. What happened to the country happened to the banks and what happened to the banks is in no way different or detached from what happened to the people. They are all part of the same pattern, of the same continuous stream of events. No one element in that stream can be called the cause of business depression.

"If the banks caused trouble to some of our people it was because they were irresistibly forced to pass on troubles that came to them from other people. These troubles impaired the values of their securities and customers' notes—and rendered some unable, in turn, to pay back to other customers their deposits that had been properly used to create these loans and investments. Unless these truths are kept continually in mind there is no such thing as approaching an understanding of the banking problem or of properly safeguarding the very heavy stake of the public in that problem."

Notice of Annual School Meeting

The Annual School Meeting will be held in the school house at 8 o'clock p. m. July 18, 1933. Two directors to be elected and any other business that may properly come before the meeting. C. L. Sandberg's and O. H. Nohre's terms expire.

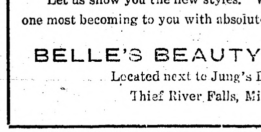
Prize Drawing

There will be another Prize Drawing held at the Holt Bandstand on Saturday evening, July 15. A short band concert will be given before the drawing, at 8.15 sharp.

The drawing will be held at 8.30 sharp so that the people who come in on Saturday night can also attend the Elliott Shows which are showing here this week.

All those who are connected with the drawing and also the public are asked to come in a little earlier so as to have a chance to take in both entertainments.



Just recently I was visiting a patient in the hospital and I asked him how he was injured.

His reply was, "I thought it was safe." That is an easy way out of most of our accidents after they have happened. He thought he had good brakes; he thought he had good lights; he thought he could make the hill; he thought the other fellow would stop; and so on.

The safest measure to follow in any event is to make sure and be positive before proceeding.

Be sure you are right and be sure it is safe—then go ahead.

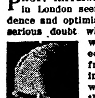
London Conference in Danger of Collapse as Moley Arrives—California and West Virginia Vote for Repeal of Prohibition.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

PROF. RAYMOND MOLEY arrived in London seemingly full of confidence and optimism, but there was a serious doubt whether he could or would save the world economic conference from collapse. Prices in the United States were jumping daily, the dollar was declining in the foreign exchange markets, capital was fleeing from Holland and Switzerland, and the countries still remaining on the gold standard were excited and angry. Their delegates in London got together and declared unanimously that immediate stabilization of currencies by international agreement was imperative, and that without that it would be useless to continue the conference.



Senator Couzens

The American delegates, despite many specific stories of dissension in their ranks, were declared by Secretary Hull and others to be in complete accord and acting entirely in conformity with the instructions and wishes of President Roosevelt. Senator James Couzens of Michigan, the lone Republican in the delegation, delivered a significant speech before the monetary subcommittee in which he urged immediate action to raise prices and lighten the debt burden as a means of helping solve the world crisis.

He said, however, that he did not believe prices could be raised sufficiently to bring about the proper equilibrium with the existing debt burden.

While prices must be raised and the debt burden lightened, Mr. Couzens said, this must not be construed as an invitation to debtors able to pay to scale down their indebtedness.

"Certainly it is not an invitation to default," he said. "It emphasizes the necessity for organizing creditors throughout the world, of establishing some form of permanent body to act in an advisory capacity between organized creditors and organized debtors to study by what means the necessary adjustments may be brought about with the minimum of delay and injustice."

Mr. Couzens declared that the United States does not believe prices can be raised by monetary means alone. Purchasing power must also be increased, he said, and America is acting on that belief by instituting the largest program of public works ever undertaken in the history of the world.

PRIME MINISTER MACDONALD was scurrying about in desperate effort to save the conference, and after the meeting and pronunciamento of the gold bloc he had a talk with Georges Bonnet of France and then called Mr. Hull and other American delegates into conference. He showed them that they would be held to blame if the parley failed, and the Americans resented what they considered to be an attempt thus to force President Roosevelt to alter his position that the dollar should not be stabilized until there has been a substantial rise in commodity prices and wages in the United States. Mr. Hull told MacDonald that the question of immediate stabilization of currencies is beyond the jurisdiction of the American delegation.

Since Mr. Hull refused to do anything about immediate currency stabilization, the monetary subcommittee decided to report favorably on Senator Key Pittman's gold resolution, which provides, among other things, for withdrawal of the yellow metal from circulation and reducing the gold coverage of central banks to 25 per cent. It inserted a statement that such monetary changes "must not be taken as an excuse for unduly building up a larger superstructure of notes and credits."

There was fear throughout Europe that the developments would compel all nations to abandon the gold standard, and this was given force by the announcement that Estonia had taken that step. Other Baltic countries, it was expected, would follow suit.

GEN. HUGH S. JOHNSON, administrator of the industrial recovery act, opened hearings on codes submitted for government control before an interested crowd in the Department of Commerce building in Washington, the first one to be taken up being that offered by the cotton-textile industry which was described in this column a week ago.

In his bluff manner General Johnson introduced his deputy, W. L. Allen, and his counsel, Donald Richberg, and the latter laid down the rules of procedure to be followed, which were rather disconcerting to many of his hearers. After explaining the manner in which codes would be received from industrial groups, Mr. Richberg said that the hearings were intended to produce facts only, and that no oral arguments upon questions of law would be permitted. If any interest felt its legal rights were being trampled, it must be content to present its plea privately in writing to the administration, according to this ruling laid down by Mr. Richberg.

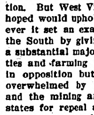
Another section of the Richberg code was even more drastic. It provided that the control of testimony to be presented at the hearings will rest entirely with the deputy administrator. The deputy will call all witnesses, question all witnesses, and no questions may be asked by any one else without the consent of the deputy.

Deputy Administrator Allen took charge of the hearing later and the textile code was discussed, with witnesses both for and against it. The tire makers, especially, objected to some of its features. The proponents of the code agreed to ban child labor. President Green of the American Federation of Labor, who is strongly opposed to the wage scale proposed by the textile group, was present part of the time, as was Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins.

ONE-THIRD of the states have now declared themselves for ratification of the prohibition repeal amendment, the score standing 16 to 0. The latest to go on record are California and West Virginia. The coast state was never in doubt and the vote there was about three to one for ratification. But West Virginia the drys had hoped would uphold prohibition. However it set an example to the rest of the South by giving the repeal cause a substantial majority. The hill counties and farming regions were strong in opposition but their votes were overwhelmed by those of the cities and the mining areas. Twenty more states for repeal are needed, and the wets have some hope that these can be secured before the close of this year.

The state conventions of Indiana, Massachusetts and New York met and carried out the mandates of the people by ratifying the repeal amendment. Al Smith was president of the New York convention and said: "This gathering will go down in history as a warning for all time that questions like prohibition should be decided by the people themselves and not by legislatures."

THERE were those who thought the acquittal of Charles Mitchell on income tax evasion charges would take the heart out of the senatorial investigation of private banking methods, but the committee resumed its inquiry, and Prosecutor Ferdinand Pecora put on the stand Otto Kahn, head of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., and distinguished patron of the fine arts. Mr. Kahn talked at length of the philosophy of private banking and of the processes for the marketing of securities, with especial reference to those of railroads. He said the good private banker does not chase after business, and he condemned competitive bidding for securities put out by corporations.



Otto Kahn

There was much discussions of the whoopee days of 1927 and 1928. In dwelling upon the mania of those days, Mr. Kahn held that so far as controlled inflation is concerned he knows of only one agency that can exercise a corrective influence whenever needed, and that is the federal reserve board.

The committee took up the matter of the Chilean bond issue of 1925, which has been in default for two years. Mr. Kahn said that Norman H. Davis, roving ambassador in Europe, received fees of $35,000 for his services in the negotiations for the floating of those bonds, but that Mr. Davis at that time was a private citizen.

Later in the inquiry Mr. Pecora questioned Mr. Kahn closely concerning his income in recent years and the tax upon it which he has paid. If he and his partners took advantage of loopholes in the income tax laws, at least there was no evidence that they had made fake stock sales to their wives.

ATTORNEY GENERAL CUMMINGS announced that before long he would make public the names of hoarders of gold who refuse to turn in their stores of the yellow metal, then if this publicity fails to bring them to terms, they will be prosecuted. Even if the government wins a criminal case against a hoarder, however, it may have to proceed civilly against him also to get the gold back unless he voluntarily yields up the precious metal, Cummings admitted. He said, however, that he believed holders convicted in criminal cases would bring in their gold as a step toward obtaining leniency.

VATICAN City police are convinced that the bomb explosion in a cloak room of St. Peter's church in Rome was the work of a Spaniard who was arrested, and was instigated by the enemies of the Catholic church in Spain. No one was injured by the blast and the property damage was small.

AMBASSADOR SUMNER WELLES' conciliation plans for Cuba ran into a snag when the Machado government suddenly made wholesale raids on the homes of the opposition leaders, arresting many prominent men. The police said they seized machine guns and other weapons and a radio transmitter recently used by the A. B. C. terrorist society. The oppositionists charged that Machado had violated the truce that had been accepted by almost everybody; and they also resented the appointment to cabinet posts of two men who are considered subservient to the dictatorship of the President. It was feared in Havana that the war of terrorism would be renewed, and Mr. Welles was much disappointed.

Col. Juan Blas Hernandez, leader of a band of rebels in Santa Clara province, agreed to call off his revolt during the period of political conciliation Mr. Welles was arranging.

EMULATING Dictator Mussolini, Chancellor Hitler is rapidly exterminating all political parties in Germany except his own National Socialists. Following the Nazi raids on the Nationalists, the suppression of their "fighting" units and the arrests of their leaders, that party dissolved itself and most of the members announced they would join the Nazis. Hitler released those arrested and promised political posts for some of the converted ones. About the same time Dr. Alfred Hugenberg, head of the National party, resigned as minister of economics and agriculture in the reich cabinet. The State party also was attacked by Hitler, its members being excluded from the Prussian diet. The Centrist party remained the only important group in opposition, and the Nazi assaults on the Catholics led to the belief that it, too, would soon be brought into line by force.

In Bavaria, the Nazi government announced that all Bavarian People's party members of the reichstag and diet were under arrest. The government defended its action by asserting that "political Catholicism is trying in every way to sabotage the government's orders."

WHEN a group of students in the University of Wisconsin appeared before a legislature committee to protest against a bill for compulsory military training, Assemblyman Joseph Higgins of Milwaukee said they expressed views that indicated belief in Communism, Atheism and Bolshevism. So at his instance the legislature has ordered an investigation into reasons for an alleged large number of Communists in the student body, with a view to reducing the number of scholarships given persons of other states.

BELATED news has come of another of those terrible disasters that periodically afflict the Chinese. A cloudburst in eastern Kweichow province destroyed the important city of Tungjen, drowning thousands of persons; and the wall of water then swept down the Mayen river valley, wiping out many villages and taking a thousand more lives.

THE disarmament conference in Geneva decided to adjourn until after the session of the League of Nations in September because the statesmen are so busy now with other more immediate problems. During the recess Chairman Arthur Henderson will negotiate with the principal governments and has high hopes for good results.

TESTIFYING before a one-man grand jury consisting of Judge H. R. Keidan, a Detroit banker, Herbert R. Wilkin, was asked why Detroit's two big banks were closed last winter. "It was a plot by Wall Street to get Henry Ford," he replied. He said that in his opinion it was decided by the New York financiers, long before the two banks closed their doors, that they must pass from the picture and be replaced by one bank. And this one, the new National bank of Detroit, is "the child of Wall Street," he added.

H. R. Wilkin

Wilkin, who became vice president of the Union Guardian Trust company at the request of Henry Ford, said that, for the second time, the Eastern bankers had been soundly whipped in their attempt to force the motor manufacturer to bow to them.

"Wall Street believed," he said, "that by tying up Ford's capital he would have to deal with them or go broke. They were sadly fooled."

In the course of his testimony Wilkin made these additional startling charges:

That huge withdrawals of "smart money" had been made just before the two banks were finally closed, and that one of those who cleared out a personal account was Mrs. James Couzens, wife of the Michigan senator.

That Detroit bankers generally, previous to the closing, had become convinced Wall Street was trying to control all the credit of the state of Michigan.

That many checks of the two institutions were cleared through the Detroit clearing house after the state bank holiday had been declared by Governor Comstock.

That federal bank examiners had co-operated with the enemies of the Guardian group, which had a chain of Michigan banks, in undervaluing assets of at least one institution so the new National bank of Detroit could buy it at a low price.

St. Paul—The first important step toward constructing the $16,000,000 Twin Cities sewage disposal system was taken when the Minnesota board of health issued an order, based on data gathered by the department of health, declaring the condition of the Mississippi river a menace to public health and a sewage system necessary. This paves the way for creation of the joint sanitation district.

St. Paul—The federal farm credit administration plan, successfully tried out in Wisconsin to open 540 closed banks, will be extended to Minnesota within the next two weeks to refinance from $25,000,000 upward of Minnesota farm mortgages through the federal land bank. F. H. Klawon, president of the St. Paul Federal Land Bank, which serves Minnesota, Wisconsin, North Dakota and Michigan, announced that a staff of 50 or more appraisers will be put to work on the refinancing program within two weeks in Minnesota.

St. Paul—Jobs will be available in practically every county in Minnesota, starting about July 15, for 12,000 to 15,000 men on federal aid highway projects to be financed by the government according to N. W. Elsberg, state highway commissioner, who received word that Minnesota had been alloted $10,565,559 from the $400,000,000 fund provided under the national recovery act. The funds will be available July 1. Jobs will continue through the 1933 season and many of them probably will extend well into next year.

Cholera Epidemic Kills Ohio Hogs

Early Vaccination Is Advocated as Only Way to Battle Disease.

By J. W. Wuichet, Extension Specialist in Animal Husbandry, Ohio State University.—WNU service.

Several outbreaks of hog cholera are reported from widely separated places in Ohio, and the disease is rapidly spreading. The prevention of cholera by vaccination of the pigs before the disease makes its appearance in a community, is advocated. The annual loss to the state from this disease approaches 200,000 pigs, and this year, reports indicate that more than the usual amount of trouble may be expected.

It is not necessary to wait until the pigs are weaned in order to vaccinate them. The proper time for vaccination is when the pigs are five or six weeks old, but they may be vaccinated safely at one week of age. Hogs that have previously been vaccinated are immune to the disease.

Hog cholera takes two forms. In the acute form the hogs quickly sicken and die, often in three days. In the chronic type the hogs may linger for several weeks.

When cholera first appears in a herd only two or three may become sick. These refuse to eat and remain in their nest, refusing to be driven out. The sick animals hunch their backs and shiver, later become gaunt and stagger. The hogs become constipated; later diarrhea sets in, and as the disease progresses, red or purple spots appear on the skin of the ears, belly, and under the flanks.

The present outbreak is gaining rapidly because fewer farmers this year cared to spend the money necessary for preventive treatment. Last year there was practically none of the disease in the state.

Farm Woodlots Return Millions to the Owners

New York state farm woodlots are second only to Wisconsin and lead North Carolina and Tennessee, according to a recent summary of the 1930 census. The 3,634,000 acres of farm woodlots in New York returned $16,269,000 and Wisconsin's 5,705,000 acres returned $16,925,000. Wisconsin has nearly 4,000,000 more acres of farm land than New York.

The principal product from the New York farm woodlands, according to J. A. Cope of the state college of agriculture, is fuelwood, followed in order by: sawlogs, fence posts, poles and piling, railroad ties, and pulpwood. Most of the state's pulpwood is cut from commercial forest areas, he says.

The typical New York state woodlot contains twenty-three acres and is one-fifth of the total acreage of the farm. The state has nearly 18,000,000 acres in its 160,000 farms. The value of woodlot products was included for the first time in the 1930 census, and for the whole United States totaled $242,000,000.

Army Worms on the Way

Army worms may be abundant this year because of the late, wet spring and the early growth of grass and weeds, according to entomologists of the United States Department of Agriculture. The little worms that hatch from eggs laid in grass and weeds grow so fast and chew so fast, that they often destroy acres of crops before farmers realize what is happening. Careful watch is necessary to spot the tiny greenish caterpillars feeding near the surface of the ground under the shelter of overhanging leaf blades. When grain shows definite signs of damage from this insect it is usually too late to do anything about it, and the army worm has become full grown and finished its season's work. Seldom, if ever, does it break out twice in the same place in one year. The best way to control the army worm, entomologists say, is to sprinkle poisoned bran bait over the infested area as soon as the minute caterpillars begin to crawl onto the stalks of the young grain.

Plans for Corncribs

For the convenience of the farmer, working plans and bills of materials for a simple and inexpensive corncrib and for a combination crib and granary have been developed by the bureau of agricultural engineering, United States Department of Agriculture. Either is available upon application to the bureau.

The cribs are of frame construction and are rat proof. They have middle driveways, removable ventilators and drying racks, and drag doors. The devices for ventilating and for rat proofing may also be used in remodeling old structures. The details of construction can be applied in building cribs of greater or smaller dimensions or of different types.

Needn't Fear to Rock the Baby

Mrs. Walter Ferguson, in the New York World-Telegram.

Skies are brightening in every direction. Even for mothers there comes a gleam. A distinguished child specialist announces that it's all right to rock the baby.

Could anything be more heartening? For more than a decade mothers have had a tough time what with all the danger signals that flared about them and the warnings of what would happen if they indulged their natural instincts.

It has always seemed to me that in a world that provides such marvelous articles as a baby and a rocking chair the two should get together. Fortunately, both are coming back into fashion.

In a good many ways we cannot blame the modern girl for staging a rebellion against maternity. Given the proper training, the state has specified thermometers, formulas, collandered carrots, long-drawn-out spinach campaigns, trying hours mastering psychology and the accumulation of mountainous fears and a well-developed inferiority complex. The rules set up by the late unlamented moderns abolished practically every conceivable compensation in raising a family.

Right now there is a sort of revival of maternity in the land. Motherhood is once again regarded as a serious if not the perfect profession. Feminism is dead, and the depression has exposed all the emptiness of social life. Cocktails are going out; cradles are coming in. And once we reach that state of mental maturity which we may name the return to common sense we shall realize that babies are a necessity for living and not a social service philanthropy.

Cuddling, rocking, kissing are the A-B-Cs in the long alphabet of motherhood. To rock your baby while the dusk comes down—there's pure happiness that is within the reach of every woman who can afford a rocking chair and a baby and courage enough to laugh at the psychologists.

Face a Sight with Painful Eruptions

Healed by Cuticura

"I was bothered with an eruption on my face that started as pimples with white centers. They were in blotches about as big as a nickel and had flaky crusts on them. They were painful and I spent some miserable nights. The skin was inflamed and my face was a terrible sight.

"I had several treatments but could get no relief, and the trouble lasted about three years before I tried Cuticura Soap and Ointment. At the end of two weeks the eruptions were growing smaller and in three weeks I was healed altogether." (Signed) L. W. Cushman, Warrenville, Conn.

The SILVER FLUTE

SYNOPSIS

On her eighteenth birthday, Barbara, motherless daughter of Christopher Thorne, artist, awakes with anticipation of the joys of the day. She receives a birthday ring from Bruce MacLain, young artist friend of the family, but more than friend to Barbara. Barbara and Bruce go picknicking on the sands at Provincetown. He tells her a story of a gypsy boy, a little gypsy girl whom he loves, and the song of a silver flute. She knows it is her own love tale. Her happiness turns to sorrow when she returns home to learn her father has been drowned. Barbara fears she and her brothers and sister will be separated. Relatives arrive and take charge of things. Having been almost a mother to the others, Barbara cannot think of Kit's sensitive nature bruised in Uncle Herbert's household by his rough-and-ready cousins, and Gay spoiled by her association with silly Aunt Lola. Bruce urges immediate marriage, but that would mean separation. Desperate, the four children plot to run away to Barbara's godfather, "Uncle Stephen" Drake, whom they have never seen.

"Four of us are quite a lot." Kit's brow wore an anxious frown. "Do you suppose he'll have enough beds?"

"Uncle Stephen is rich," Gay said with easy assurance. "He sends such lovely presents."

"I wouldn't expect him to keep us always," Barbara explained. "Four is quite a lot. But he's a lawyer and he can tell us what to do. I know he will help us. He said he would."

Kit was reassured. The frown smoothed itself out and his face slowly brightened. Barbara felt more confident. She saw "Uncle Stephen," a nice old man, telling them what to do. They needed a champion. Father would have approved. It seemed a sensible idea.

"Where does 'Uncle Stephen' live?" Gay asked, hoping it would be some enchanting far off place.

"Near Philadelphia."

"That isn't so far." Gay felt disappointed. Florida was lovely. She had been there with Aunt Lola before. But it was fun to be running away....

"It's not right in the city," Kit said. "Don't you remember? We looked it up on a map. It's far enough. Have we any money? How will we get there, Babs?"

"Hitch-hike," Jamie said promptly. "I'll bet we could, as easy as anything." His face was bright and excited.

"Or we could dress up like gypsies," Gay, always dramatic, suggested. "And dance and play on tambourines and people would give us money."

Gypsies! Barbara felt a pain in her heart. . . . "Once upon a time there was a gypsy boy who loved very dearly a little gypsy girl" . . . But she couldn't think about Bruce. She kept seeing Kit's face streaked with tears and Jamie looking at "Chips" and Gay growing up into a silly little peacock like Aunt Lola's horrid Gwen. She had to take care of the children. . . .

"I have some money," she said, swallowing hard to banish the lump in her throat. She showed it to them, a very slim roll of bills, provided by Great-aunt Josephine's check.

It looked like a fortune. The children's eyes widened. They felt like millionaires.

"When are we going?" Gay asked, her voice fluting high with excitement.

"Tomorrow morning."

That made it seem real and frightening but very thrilling, too.

"Won't we tell anybody, Babs?" Jamie wanted to know.

"No, indeed." Barbara was firm. "We'll go early in the morning before anybody it up."

"But the train doesn't leave until eight o'clock," Kit reminded her. "They'd miss us by that time, sure."

She hadn't thought of that. The pink faded out of her cheeks. Here was a problem, indeed. Her spirits dropped. The children felt it. If Babs was discouraged, there was no hope. They pressed closer together, subdued and defeated, feeling that the grown-up world was in hostile league against them.

It was Martha who solved the problem. She came into the studio with a warning about taking cold. The warning was merely an excuse. She wanted to be near them this last evening together.

"You're up to somethin'," she said.

Martha had lived with them before Mother died. She was a familiar friend. They knew that Martha loved them. They told her about it, Barbara taking the lead, the children interrupting. They drew her into the circle and talked away her objections.

"I oughtn't to listen." Martha's Yankee conscience battled against her affections. "I ought to go right in the house this minute and tell them what you're up to."

"But you won't," Barbara said confidently, her cheek against Martha's. "You won't do any such thing."

Martha surrendered herself unconditionally to the charms of the four Thornes. "There's no fool like an old fool. I won't do any such thing."

They told her about the problem of getting away in the morning. Martha considered, her forehead smocked in a frown.

"Jake Preble drives his truck to New Bedford Thursday mornings," Martha said after an interval of thought. "Early, though. He leaves around five o'clock."

Tomorrow was Thursday morning. It seemed an act of providence.

"We'll leave a note," Barbara said. "We'll tell them we've gone to Uncle Stephen. They don't know where he lives. That will give us time. But Martha," she added, a shadow slipping across her vivid face, "I'm afraid it won't be pleasant for you. They'll make a dreadful scene. They'll probably explode."

"Don't mind about that." The light of battle flamed in Martha's eyes. "I'll speak my mind and pin on my hat and leave."

They fell upon her with strangling hugs.

"You're an angel, Marthy-Ann," Barbara whispered gratefully, her arm around Martha's neck.

"I'm an idiot!" Martha pushed the children away. Her voice sounded scolding and cross. "I'll probably live to regret it. But you have a way about you. There's no fool like an old fool! I'm goin' to see Jake Preble."

Barbara lay, wide awake, in the low carved bed that Father had made. Gay, curled beside her, was fast asleep, worn out by excitement and plans. The alarm clock was set for four. Martha had "managed" Jake Preble. They were to leave at five o'clock in the morning.

Everything was arranged. The children, quaking for fear they would be discovered, had hidden their luggage in the studio. Sitting together on the sofa in the attic, a quilt around their shoulders, Kit's lantern lighted beside them, he and Barbara had marked the way they would go. By seven o'clock tomorrow night they would be at Uncle Stephen's.

For the children's sake, Barbara had suppressed her uncertainties and doubts. Lying awake in the low carved bed, with the rain falling outside and the wind in the willows singing a mournful song, the doubts and uncertainties could no longer be suppressed.

It was impolite to be running away. The relations meant to be kind, though they had never approved of Mother marrying Father and having four children and living "like a gypsy." It was appallingly impolite to leave them and run away.

The money troubled her, too. Was it stealing to use Aunt Josephine's check for the purpose of running away? Aunt Josephine would say that it was. "What can you expect?" she would say. "They've been brought up heathen!" She wouldn't blame them so much. She would blame Father's happy-go-lucky way of letting them do as they pleased. It seemed a treachery to Father. But, deep in her heart, she knew that Father would approve. He wanted the children to be happy. He had promised that they should never be "parceled out" again.

What would Uncle Stephen think? His letter had been so friendly. . . . "If a crusty old bachelor can be of assistance, please let him know at once." . . . He had called her his "little fillette." It was a caressing, intimate word. A "crusty old bachelor" wouldn't have thought of such lovely things to write. Perhaps he was lonely and wanted some children. Surely he would appreciate the charms of Kit and Jamie and Gay.

And Bruce? What would he think? It would be lovely to be with Bruce. She loved him so much, his golden brown hair, his teasing ways, his eyes that were as deeply blue as the sky on a frosty night. . . .

Thinking of Bruce, she felt warm and drowsy and not afraid any more. Darling Bruce! She told herself a story . . . "Once upon a time there was a gypsy boy. . . ." The sound of the rain was pleasant now. Doubts and uncertainties vanished. She nestled close against Gay. . . . "The flute knew only one song—'I love you, pretty gypsy girl with the roses in your hair. . . .'"

She could hear the song of the silver flute if she kept very breathless and still, showers of sprinkling silver notes, thin and high and sweet.

Barbara's lashes drooped. She sighed and was fast asleep.

CHAPTER V

Stephen Drake, in an evening shirt and well-pressed trousers braced with black and white suspenders, stood before a mirror tying with fumbling fingers a narrow black silk tie. The mirror was set in a wardrobe carved with oak leaves and acorns and opulent bunches of grapes. All of the furniture in the large high-ceilinged room was of walnut and similarly carved. It was a man's room, unmistakably, the room of a man of elderly habits and a studious turn of mind. Books, pushed together by bronze elephants, stood on the bedside table. Books, handsomely bound, filled the shelves between the windows.

There was but one unusual note in the subdued symphony of the room. Above the fireplace hung a painting all color and sunlight, red rocks, blue sea, distant rust-colored sails, a girl, slim and graceful, with the wind blowing her skirt against her bare brown legs. The painting made you wonder about the tall erect man, gray at the temples, tying a neat silk tie into a neat silk bow.

Betty and Her Barn

By DOROTHY DOUGLAS

WNU Service

WHEN the wolf prowled near enough to the door of the old Wycliff estate to cause young Betty Wycliff serious anxiety she decided that the most sensible thing to do was to sell the old home itself and take up her abode in the stable—commonly called the barn. The new owners were quite willing that she should keep the barn since they would be putting up modern garages.

Its position was in direct line of the railway approach to the glowing little suburb, which, before its tendency to sprout, was justly called Offthemap. But with a generous supply of the fertilizers—builders, estate office, butchers, etc.—the growth began and they wisely changed the name to Onthemap.

So Betty's old barn stood like a veritable lighthouse in its prominent position on High street and its three great sides gazed flatly at anyone approaching from any of three directions.

The prowling footpads of the wolf were too close for Betty to have done much except install a bathroom and kitchen and hardwood floors in her barn. She wanted very much to make good in the little village in which all her forefathers had been reared. An attractive sign down at the rustic gate leading to the barn informed the passerby that Miss Wycliff taught dancing and elocution.

Betty's pupils were not so numerous as to effect a traffic block in High street, yet she was beginning to see daylight and the permanent banishment of that wolf from her barn door.

It was between a dance and an elocution lesson that Betty watched the approach of a young man.

Betty soon learned that he was the owner of the new department store that was even then nearing completion in the heart of Onthemap's shopping district.

"Miss Wycliff," he jumped straightway into his reason for intruding, "I will pay you $500 down and another $500 when the sign's finished if you will rent out that east wall of your barn to me for advertising purposes—it's a swell site to catch the eye and it need not be too—er—advertisy—as it were. What do you say? I'll get an artist that knows his job—"

"Wait a moment," cried Betty, "until my brain regains its poise. I never see the outside of my barn—at least not on that side and—a thousand dollars a year would mean an awful lot to me. Do you think—that is—could it be done without a lot of printing?"

"If I have my artist chap consult you before beginning—will that do? And if Onthemap grows as it's bound to and takes my store along with it, you shall have double that rental in another year." And seeing consent in Betty's eyes he arose, squeezed her hand until she nearly squealed and was off to arrange with his artist.

He had not been gone an hour when the owner of the new butcher shop came up the path with the selfsame dreams of an advertisement in his head and the exact same figures in the way of rental.

"But I simply couldn't stand it to have pictures of sausages and those sides of lamb and beef rioting on my barn walls," cried Betty.

"The decorative scheme shall be left entirely to you," said the young butcher, quite overjoyed at the site he had secured.

The town baker secured the third and remaining wall and Betty knew that the old prowling wolf was gone.

She retired in a somewhat wilted state to her little kitchen to brew herself a cup of tea. Certainly having walls to one's barn was a greater asset than having a brain in one's head for the teaching of dancing and elocution.

So while Betty sipped her comforting cup of tea the owners of the department store, the butcher shop and the baker shop were one by one dickering with the only artist that Onthemap had ever known. He was but a visitor.

His efforts to secure fame and fortune in miniature painting had so far failed, and it was with extreme joy that he welcomed the orders to take up his brushes in the interest of advertising.

"But you must consult the owner of the barn," each had warned him.

"I have a scheme that will suit her," laughed the artist. "We will simply paint crowds of well-dressed people rushing toward the open doors of the shops of you three good gentlemen. It will be a subtle and attractive way of doing the trick."

And because Betty had a brain in her head she promptly started a tea and coffee room in conjunction with elocution and dancing. Young Martin Wells, swinging on his painting scaffold, thought the world a lovely place and wondered why he had ever puddled about with little dabs of paint when he could splash it in bucketfuls on the barn walls of the most lovely girl that either town or suburb had ever produced.

Betty stepped out from time to time to admire the work of the young artist and to gaze wonderingly up at anyone who could so transform the flat walls of a barn into dreams of color. She knew, too, that he would one day be a leading mural decorator and that she—but what else Betty knew was being expressed beautifully in young Wells' eyes as he gazed happily down at her.

How I Broke Into The Movies

Copyright by Hal C. Herman

By WILL ROGERS

NOW about this movie business and how I got my start. To be honest about it, I haven't yet got a real good start. And the way I figure things, a fellow has to be a success before he goes lecturing and crowing about himself.

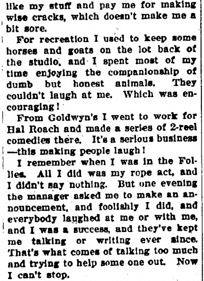
Out here in Hollywood, they say you're not a success unless you owe fifty thousand dollars to somebody, have five cars, can develop temperament without notice or reason at all, and been mixed up in four divorce cases and two breach-of-promise cases.

Well, as a success in Hollywood, I'm a rank failure, and I guess I'm too old to learn new tricks, and besides I'm pretty well off domestically speaking and ain't yearning for a change.

Now, about how I actually got started in this picture business. Mrs. Rex Beach was really the one who helped me get started, by selling the idea to Sam Goldwyn that he ought to star me in the movies. Mr. Goldwyn was connected with the Eminent Authors, Inc., of which Rex Beach was president. There were eight eminent authors in the outfit, maybe that's where they got the name, I guess.

Anyway, Sam signed me up, and I starred in a series of 6-reel comedy dramas for him during 1921 and 1922. The outstanding picture of this group was "Jubilo" based on the theme of the song of that name.

I also made "Doubling for Romeo" for this company. It was the story of a cowhand who went to sleep and dreamed he played Romeo in Shakespeare's immortal drama. I like my work in this one a lot, but they had a sales convention at the studio and showed the film to the gang. Although I thought the picture was very funny, the boys seemed to think different and refused to laugh. At the time I was nearly heartbroken, I felt that I was a flop and was about ready to quit pictures. Gosh, it was awful!



Will Rogers.

I wasn't writing much in those days, although since then the papers seem to like my stuff and pay me for making wise cracks, which doesn't make me a bit sore.

For recreation I used to keep some horses and goats on the lot back of the studio, and I spent most of my time enjoying the companionship of dumb but honest animals. They couldn't laugh at me. Which was encouraging!

From Goldwyn's I went to work for Hal Roach and made a series of 2-reel comedies there. It's a serious business—this making people laugh!

I remember when I was in the Follies. All I did was my rope act, and I didn't say nothing. But one evening the manager asked me to make an announcement, and foolishly I did, and everybody laughed at me or with me, and I was a success, and they've kept me talking or writing ever since. That's what comes of talking too much and trying to help some one out. Now I can't stop.

But wise cracks and picture work pay better than the rope-throwin' act, and that saves my feelings a lot.

Sam Rork, who produced "A Texas Steer," in which I got the big comedy part of a congressman who was a Texas cowman, says he picked me out of all the Hollywood actors because all the rest of them have morality clauses in their contracts and are afraid to act like congressmen.

But I figured it out that it's because I was in the Follies. I'm an ex-Follies graduate, and if Barrymore had my legs, he could still be on the stage.

But I'd been in the movies before I signed up for "A Texas Steer." I've been in more punkin' seed movies, and most of the job was handling the rope. But that was a smart movie, a comedy special they called it, with real actors helping me out, and all I had to do was act the big comedy part of being a congressman. That's a cinch. Any day in the week any congressman I've known can give me a big laugh acting natural.

My advice to aspiring movie-struck folk is to buy a good 12-foot rope, practice with it, and then if you don't succeed, why, you can always stretch it over a nearby tree with one end around your neck.

U. S. GOVERNMENT GREATEST BANKER

Runs Fifty-two Financing Institutions With Investment of Two Billion Dollars—Thirty-nine Agricultural

AMERICA'S biggest banker today is the Federal Government, which is now operating fifty-two financing institutions, says Professor John Hanna of Columbia University in the American Bankers Association Journal.

"Forty of these are owned entirely by the Government," he says. "In twelve more the Government has already a two-thirds interest. Thirty-seven are intended to be permanent. Twenty-five of the permanent ones and fourteen of the temporary ones are agricultural.

"The capital stock held by the United States in these banks has a par value of $1,380,000,000. The Government's total investment is nearly $2,000,000,000. Resources of these institutions exceed $3,000,000,000. In addition the Government has detailed supervision over fifty-one mortgage banks, operating under Federal charter.

"The Government also supervises 4,600 local agricultural loan associations with Federal charters. All this takes no account of the relations of the Government to the twelve Federal Reserve banks, nor of the authority recently given to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to buy preferred stock in national and state commercial banks."

The President has ordered the consolidation of the agricultural credit agencies into the new Farm Credit Administration, says Professor Hanna. He expresses the opinion that before the consolidation of the agricultural financing agencies too much machinery had been created to administer the financing institutions which the Government either owns or supervises.

"Existing institutions represent a considerable differentiation of function and any consolidations should be preceded by a careful survey of the actual activities of the various institutions," he continues. "The only consolidation the Administration has announced is that of the agricultural credit agencies in the Farm Credit Administration. As a permanent solution this arrangement is too closely bound up with politics.

"A better scheme would be to create a finance corporation under Federal charter to take over either the agricultural finance activities of the Government or all its lending agencies.

"The Government's financing and banking activities should be kept severely apart from subsidy and other schemes for raising the prices of farm products. One is business, the other is major political policy. The advantages of the corporation over bureau control for the business functions are real and significant."

Railroad Legislation

A RECENT state legislative bill provided that a track man carrying a bell by day and a lantern by night should lead all railroad trains across grade crossings; that conductors must smile when answering questions; that it would be a misdemeanor to serve eggs more than one day old on pullman cars; that trains be required to stop at any time when flagged by hitch-hikers, and that trains crossing rivers wider than twenty-five feet be equipped with lifeboats and life preservers. This one did not pass.

Very Few Votes Cast at Annual School Election

The Annual School Election was held at the school house Tuesday evening. Only 9 votes were cast in the election of the two board members that were elected. C. L. Sandberg and O. H. Nohre whose terms expired were reelected.

Now you taxpayers whom are some times in the mood to howl, don't howl as here is a tip you may save for future use. And, we are not casting any reflections on any school board member nor the reelection of the two members Tuesday evening when we say this: If, you had wanted the job then why were you not there and also brought your neighbors along and show a little interest in the institution where you expect so much returns in education for your children per tax dollar paid?

The school board here are also taxpayers and, are trying for the benefit of everyone here in the district, to hold down the high cost of education and at the same time give your children all that the tax dollar will pay for in our local institution of learning and building up of future citizens of the community.

Why Do Cream Tests Vary?

The following are some of the principal causes for variation in the test of cream:

3. Speed of Separator The test of cream will go up or down as the speed of the separator goes up or down. The speed of the separator may vary the test from 10 to 20%.

4. Rate of Inflow to Separator Bowl The inflow of milk to the separator should correspond with the capacity of the machine. If the milk is run through the separator faster or slower, the test of cream will vary accordingly.

Crowding the separator beyond its capacity increases the loss of fat in skim-milk.

Haying On In Full Blast

Teams, mowers and men are moving about wherever you may look out in the Mud Lake bottom and other hay fields out that way. The hay crop is very good this year and thousands of tons will be put up. If you have the opportunity to do so then, put up all the hay you can as it looks now like there will be a big demand for it next spring on account of so many places drying out, leaving the farmers out of feed for the stock.

But, before you start to put up hay to sell, put up enough for your own use. Let's not hear of a hay shortage at home and then, in the spring see a lot of nice hay stumpage standing uncut from the year before.

Give or sell your neighbor the meadow you can't use. Supply up now and help others do the same by having them help you for your kind help.

Mr. and Mrs. O. E. Sovde and son, Verna Johnson and Oscar Fosholm returned home Thursday evening last week from a weeks outing in the lake region.

Jim Johnson lost two big hay stacks on Tuesday when a peat fire on the north shore of Mud Lake crept out of its heat pit and run over a part of the hay meadow with a strong wind.

Mary Peterson returned to Pontiac, Michigan on Sunday evening after a two weeks visit here at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Gust Peterson and other relatives and friends.

R. A. Werner and family, C. A. Larson and family, J. Hagberg and family, and R. A. Holmgren and family were entertained at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Nelson Sunday.

Band members will meet at Holt Tuesday evening at 7.30 p. m., to leave for Middle River where they will play at the Lutheran Church Ice Cream Social.

Forest Army to Stay in Woods Through Winter

More than 12,000 men comprising the personnel of 61 civilian conservation camps in the state and national forests of Minnesota will spend the winter in their north woods quarters, Major General Johnson Hagood, fourth army and seventh corps area commander, announced recently. Plans for construction of log cabins in which the men will be housed during the winter months were made by General Hagood following a conference with E. V. Willard, acting conservation commissioner, and Grover Conzet, state forester. Similar plans call for maintaining conservation corps camps throughout the winter in the seventh corps area which includes North Dakota.

Geo. Fricker motored over to Chisholm over the week end to visit relatives and bring home his family whom have spent a month there. They returned here Sunday night.

A Letter from Svenke

We have recieved a letter from our old friend Svenke G. Svenkeson up in Sasketchewan, Canada. He states that he should have liked to take time to come to Holt and see his many old friends but, that he is too busy making a living to take the pleasure. He is now running a lumber yard at Shipman, Sask., and is also fixing up his farm place.

Well, Svenke the money crop here looks paler than a ghost on a newly plowed peat field but, we sure have plenty of time to think about what things could be had we the spondulicks.

County Commissioner Dies

Clarence E. Moen, 45 years, Marshall county commissioner representing the 4th District and member of the board of education of the Newfolden schools, succumbed to the ravages of cancer on July 8, at the Drayton Hospital, Drayton, N. Dak., where he had gone for treatment a week before.

Mr. Moen was the newest member of the board, being elected to the position by the voters of the 4th district last November. He took the oath of office at the first meeting of the county board in January, and has since been a valuable and efficient member of the county governing body.—Sheaf.

Rokke Appointed Commissioner

The Warren Sheaf states that A. S. Rokke, former member of the board of county commissioners representing the Fourth district, was elected by township and village chairmen meeting at the court house in Warren last Friday, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Clarence E. Moen.

The earliest threshing to be done in Minnesota for 33 years was started on a farm near the the Twin Cities last week when a rye crop going 30 bushels to the acre was threshed.

According to a report given us this week, some farmers in this vicinity have already started to harvest their ripe rye fields. Rye harvest started near Warren a week ago last Wednesday.

Record-Breaking Crowd Attended Prize Drawing

What we believe to be the largest crowd that so far has attended a band concert and the prize day drawing were here on Saturday night. Another sum of $40 cash money allotted monthly by the business men of Holt, was given out to local people in seventeen lucky tickets.

Mr. Elliott, manager of the big tent show that was here at the time gave a talk to the people at the band stand. He stated that he was surprised to see what we were diong in Holt, as compared to a lot of towns three to ten times larger than our village. He spoke direct to one and all in regards to what has been accomplished here and mentioned the fact that, only thru cooperative spirit could such organizations as a band, creamery or everyday business be up and coming in a small community.

Now Mr. Elliott has traveld a lot and as a stranger he showed his appreciation of what is being done by the businessmen for you by telling the people of the community so.

The Weather

What we need here now is a good big general rain. The crops and pastures are starting to show that the hot dry winds during the past week has been quite a strain on some of them.

The gardens from which a great many people expect to get a good share of their living for next winter, are drying and wilting in the heat and unless a rain comes there will be small and burned vegetables left instead of what a short time ago were the prospects for one of the best garden crops in years.

Elliott Show Co. Leaves After A Good Run Here

The Elliott Show company which arrived here a week ago last Monday, closed their show here Wednesday night after a performance of ten nights. Large crowds from this vicinity attended the show every night and had a big time watching the program which never was the same on any evening but, which made the people come back for more entertainment the next night.

The show company came here recommended as a clean and up-to-date tent show and left here the same way.

High School Graduates

Young men graduating from high school should keep in mind that trade training cannot be lost or burned or thrown away.

After high school there are three paths:

(1) Continue in an institution following higher branches of learning.

(2) Enter some vocational or training institution like a business college or a trade school.

(3) Secure employment.

There are advantages in favor of each of these paths.

The home town or the neighboring town often offers excellent opportunities for a successful and happy life.

Dunwoody Institute (Minneapolis) has given a great deal of thought in an effort to help young men at this very important point in their path through life, i. e., at the time of graduation from high school, and respectfully offers the following proposal for consideration.

Trade Try-Out Courses

Trade try-out courses in the following lines: automobile work, building construction, drafting, electrical work, machine shop, printing, and highway construction, open up on August 16 and continue until on or about September 8.

This gives an excellent opportunity for a young man to actually try out one or more of the above lines to see if he is interested in the same and if he has the ability which would best function in the selected trade.

These try-out courses are specifically scheduled before the University and other advanced institutions of learning open in the fall so that following the three-week trade try-out those who find that they are not interested or do not have the special abilities required for the training at Dunwoody may enter some other institution of learning without "getting out of step" with their former classmates.

Inquiries about the training at Dunwoody and visitors are welcome at all times.

Dunwoody Institute (Minneapolis) was a gift to the residents of the State and is conducted without profit.

Safetygrams

Motorists should be careful of workers on our highways.

Men engaged in work on the highways are working in the interest of motorists and should not be endangered by reckless driving. Warning signs have been put up on practically all of the jobs, and yet frequently motorists will drive through against these warning signs.

When you are flagged to slow down or stop, respect the workman who does it. He is there for your safety and also for the safety of his fellow-workers. Barricades that have been erected by the crew are there for their own safety and for your protection, and it is very discourteous to ignore the signs and requests.

Respect the workman on the highway, the patrolman, and others who are trying to make the roads passable and comfortable for you.

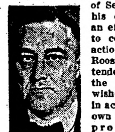
News Review of Current Events the World Over

London Economic Conference Is Saved From Immediate Dissolution by Secretary Hull—Roosevelt Pushes His Domestic Recovery Program.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT administered what looked like a knockout blow to the world conference in London, and then, at the urgent request of Secretary Hull and his colleagues, made an effort to restore it to consciousness and action. Of course Mr. Roosevelt had not intended to paralyze the parley, but he wished it to proceed in accordance with his own ideas, and those probably are the ideas of most of his fellow countrymen as well. His effort was not at first successful, for the leaders, yielding to the demand of the gold bloc, decided the conference should take a recess for an indefinite time. This accorded with the views of some of the American delegates, but Secretary of State Hull, acting under instructions from President Roosevelt, fiercely fought the plan and finally persuaded the bureau, or steering committee, to change its mind. It then declared it was firmly determined to proceed with the work of the conference and asked the various subcommittees to prepare a list of questions that could be usefully studied by the conference, monetary problems being excluded by the gold bloc. As tariff problems also are out, it may seem that the conference has lost its first rank importance in world news for the present.



President Roosevelt

What the President first did to the conference was in the form of a note, read to it by Mr. Hull, beginning:

"I would regard it as a catastrophe amounting to a world tragedy if the great conference of nations called to bring about a more real and permanent financial stability and a greater prosperity to the masses of all nations should in advance of any serious effort to consider these broader problems allow itself to be diverted by the proposal of a purely artificial and temporary experiment affecting the monetary exchange of a few nations only.

"Such action, such diversion, shows a singular lack of proportion and failure to remember the larger purposes for which the economic conference originally was called together."

Delegates of the gold bloc nations, led by France, were angered both by the President's attitude on stabilization and by what they considered his dictatorial manner, and Prime Minister MacDonald was grievously disappointed. The conference leaders met and after a lot of exceedingly plain speaking adopted a resolution to adjourn, which was what the gold bloc insisted upon. Secretary Hull alone, still hopeful and clinging to the internationalist doctrines which the President had abandoned, argued for continuance of the conference and finally persuaded the other leaders to withhold the adjournment resolution until further word had been received from Mr. Roosevelt.

The President's second communication was more conciliatory in tone but showed no disposition to retreat from the position he had taken. He asserted that the raising and stabilization of commodity prices was the major objective and the exchange value of the dollar in terms of foreign currencies a minor consideration.

Delegates of France, Holland, Belgium, Italy, Poland and Switzerland—the chief gold standard nations—met informally and formed a monetary pool which pins all their currencies one to another. They also decided in principle to form an economic union.

THE wheat committee of the economic conference alone accomplished something. It announced that the United States, Canada, Australia and Argentina, the great wheat producing countries, had accepted the American plan for restriction of acreage and production.

The agreement is subject to the assent of importing countries to some provisions for abolition of certain regulations concerning milling and quotas. The purpose of the plan is that wheat should be raised in natural growing countries and that European efforts to foster artificial production be abandoned.

SPEAKER HENRY T. RAINEY expressed the general thought of Americans when he said that the selfishness of foreign nations which demand that the United States continue to give them trade advantages is the real cause of the difficulties at the London conference. He declared the whole country was backing the President in his stand on currency matters.

Speaking at the Independence day dinner of the American chamber of commerce in Paris, Ambassador Straus vigorously defended the American economic policy. "When we read in the daily press," he declared, "of some nations, whose friendship we desire and who should be our friends, that we are grasping, that we are selfish and that we are pursuing a course unfavorable to world peace and the solution of world problems, I think it time for us to argue the unfairness of such pronouncements."

President Le Brun was one of those at the dinner.

The European press in most instances criticized the President's stand harshly. But in Berlin the Nazi organ, Der Angriff, hit the nail on the head with the statement that President Roosevelt takes the same stand as the Nazi government, namely, that a healthy domestic economic system is more important than the relation of home currency to foreign.

IMPOSITION of the processing tax of 30 cents a bushel on wheat went into effect, and Secretary of Agriculture Wallace let the public know that he intended to exercise his powers to prevent "unreasonable" increases of retail prices in its wake. The Iowa Bakers' association had proposed to increase bread prices from 5 to 8 cents per pound loaf, and Mr. Wallace warned them, calling attention to his authority. The President of the Iowa association communicated with national headquarters of the American Bakers' association and announced that the projected price advance would be withheld until further notice. However, bread prices in certain cases were advanced in Minneapolis and St. Paul, in western Pennsylvania and also in some other localities.

The internal revenue bureau assumed the task of collecting the processing tax. Forms for its enforcement were sent out, requiring returns from approximately 35,000 bakers, 450,000 retailers and 4,000 millers. The tax applies not only to wheat entering mills to be ground into flour, but also to stocks of products processed from wheat held by millers and bakers. Its purpose, it may be recalled, is to finance wheat acreage reduction.

To finance application of the farm act to corn and swine the farm administration is planning to put into effect by October 1 a processing tax on hogs from which it is expected $150,000,000 will be realized. Secretary Wallace has suggested that representatives of the corn and hog producers get together in the near future and discuss this matter.

A maximum processing tax on cotton, probably 4 cents, is to become effective on August 1, if the acreage reduction campaign now under way in the cotton belt succeeds, and a processing tax of about 6 cents a pound is to be levied on cigar leaf type tobaccos by October 1.

RETURNING from his vacation cruise to Campobello island, the President received members of his cabinet on board the cruiser Indianapolis, and then landed, went to the White House and plunged into the task of getting his domestic recovery program into full operation. His attention was given first to the public works and industrial recovery plans. In the case of the former he decided that priority should be given to the projects that provide the most labor, and he carefully studied a list that was prepared by Secretary of the Interior Ickes.

Sec'y Ickes

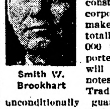
Next came the trade codes that are being submitted rapidly to Administrator Hugh S. Johnson and that require the President's approval before being given the force of law. The first of these was the cotton textile code, which officials, industry and labor were inclined to look upon as the model for other trades to follow.

General Johnson and his assistants received the code proposed by the woman's apparel industry, affecting about 500,000 workers; and the oil industry code also was ready for consideration. Others on the way were the codes of the iron and steel, anthracite coal, automobile, lumber, wool and retail dry goods industries. Administrator Johnson let it be known that a single code was desired for the whole bituminous coal industry. Indiana mines had already submitted a separate code.

MOBILIZATION of the reforestation army, otherwise the civilian conservation corps, it was announced in Washington was virtually completed, and the concentration of man power exceeds even the mobilization of American troops during the World war in a like period—three months. Director Robert Fechner reported that 250,000 men were living and working in the forest camps; another 24,000 were in the conditioning camps, and 25,000 more were being recruited from the ranks of the idle. These men receive a dollar a day and their keep from the federal government, and are engaged in constructive labor, whereas a few weeks ago they were idle. As Mr. Fechner says:

"They have been given a chance. Overnight they have become contributors to the family needs, to the extent of at least twenty-five dollars monthly, with direct benefit to their relatives and to local relief agencies."

EFFORTS to renew trade relations between the United States and Soviet Russia, earnestly promoted by Smith Wildman Brookhart, are bearing fruit. The first result is a deal by which Russia acquires 60,000 to 80,000 bales of American cotton. It is to be financed by the Reconstruction Finance corporation which will make a series of loans totaling about $4,000,000 to American exporters. These loans will be secured by notes of the Amtorg Trading company and unconditionally guaranteed by the Soviet state bank. Amtorg is owned by the U. S. S. R. and was organized by the new Russia to carry on its business in a country where it had no official standing. The loans will be for one year and, like the $50,000,000 advanced to China by the Reconstruction corporation for the purchase of wheat and cotton, will bear 5 per cent interest.



Smith W. Brookhart

There was much discussion as to whether this transaction foreboded diplomatic recognition of the Soviet government by the United States—another of Brookhart's hobbies. Assistant Secretary of State Moley had an intimate talk in London with Maxim Litvinov, astute commissar of Russia. Riga dispatches say that Moscow expects this recognition by July 31.

LITVINOV greatly strengthened the Russian government's world position by bringing to a successful conclusion negotiations for a pact of non-aggression with seven of its neighbors. The states signing this convention, besides Russia, are Estonia, Latvia, Poland, Rumania, Turkey, Persia and Afghanistan. Litvinov said in London:

"The convention constitutes a new link in the chain of the Soviet government's measures systematically directed towards reinforcement of peaceful relations with its neighbors. The Soviet Union is ready to sign similar conventions with any other states irrespective of their geographical position and existing relations with itself."

Several days later it was announced that Lithuania and Russia had signed a pact along the same lines.

CHANCELLOR HITLER has realized his ambition to control Germany politically, for the Catholic Centrists, the last surviving non-Nazi party, has dissolved, as has the Bavarian People's party, which before the elections of March 3 was the sixth in importance of the groups in the reichstag.

Semiofficially it was announced negotiations between the Centrists under Former Chancellor Bruening and the Nazis had been closed, with the Centrists' reichstag members becoming "guests" or "hospitants" of the Hitlerites.

Bruening himself, one source said, would not become a Nazi, but Count Eugen Quadt-Isny, who was empowered to act for the Bavarian populists, applied for admission to the Nazi party as a hospitant and advised his colleagues to do the same.

All other opposition parties having quit or merged with the Nazis, the Hitler government is now free to go ahead unhampered with its "national revolution," which is being extended to industrial, religious, educational and agricultural life.

HIGHLY successful aviation meets were held in both Los Angeles and Chicago. The only unfortunate incident in connection with the California affair was the death of Russell Boardman, noted transoceanic aviator, whose plane crashed at Indianapolis as he was racing across the continent.

AMONG recent deaths were those of Albert R. Erskine, former head of the Studebaker automobile corporation, who committed suicide; and Hipolito Yrigoyen, one of the most powerful figures in Argentina and twice President of that republic.

THOSE who are interested in the doings of the movie folk—and their number is legion—are avidly reading about the break up of what had been regarded as the ideal family among the cinema actors. Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks, it appears, have reached the marital divide, as the Los Angeles correspondents phrase it, and are about to separate. Whether they will be divorced remains to be seen, but they probably will be. The news came out when it was announced that "Pickfair," their home in Beverly Hills, was for sale. On behalf of Mary this statement was made:

Mary Pickford

"It is true that Pickfair is for sale. It is true that separation between Douglas Fairbanks and Miss Pickford is contemplated. If there should be a divorce, the grounds will be incompatibility. Beyond that there is nothing to say."

Early in the year there were rumors of a separation of these screen favorites, and Miss Pickford joined Fairbanks in London in an effort to end them. But soon after they returned to California Douglas left hurriedly for England. They were married 13 years ago, the second marriage for each. Both of them are millionaires, and under agreements negotiated during recent years they have waived claims on each other's properties.

News of Minnesota
Events of the week throughout the "State of Ten Thousand Lakes" told in brief form

Hampton—Three bandits held up the State Bank of Hampton and escaped with $5,500.

Marshall—1,200 persons attended the annual three-day convention of the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

Battle Lake—The per capita debt of Battle Lake village is $1.74, the smallest amount of any village or city in this section.

Duluth — Federal beer revenue stamps valued at $2,135 and $11 in currency were taken from the safe of the People's brewery in West Duluth.

St. Paul—All men working on the seasonal maintenance crews of the Minnesota State Highway department have been put on a 30-hour week basis.

White Bear—Five masked bandits raided Wildwood park, on White Bear lake and escaped with $3,500 in cash—the amusement park's weekend receipts.

Red Wing—The plant of the former Red Wing Brewing Company, used in recent years for making vinegar, will be reopened soon by a group of Twin City men as a brewery.

Buaffio—George Anderson, 32-year-old farmer, killed his mother and father with an axe while they were sleeping, then committed suicide. There had been insanity in the family.

Parkers Prairie—S. V. Sigfrid, pilot for one of the large air transportation companies between Para and Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, arrived by plane to visit his boyhood home and his parents here.

Deerwood—Vern Johnson of Minneapolis had an added thrill while fishing at Bordan lake, 20 miles south of here. Casting for bass, he hooked one and on the reel-in another bass struck. Both were landed.

Red Wing—The erosion army, located here, started its work on the first project along Hay creek just west of Red Wing, where much valuable land has been washed away. There are 170 youths in the camp here.

Minneapolis—U. G. Pursell, meteorologist was ordered to discontinue four of the 18 substations operated by the Minneapolis weather bureau in various parts of Minnesota. The order was issued under the government economy program.

St. Cloud—Machine gunning of a St. Cloud night club in which one man was critically wounded led to the arrest of Fred Bukowski, Sauk Rapids, and discovery of an armored automobile containing a small arsenal of arms and $4,000 in bonds.

Duluth—Nearly 3,000 young men from scattered sections of the United States are in the woods of northern Minnesota as members of the civilian conservation corps. Five camps already have been established in the Superior national forest.

Bemidji—Nearly 3,000 persons viewed the first formal presentation of the Minnesota diamond jubilee pageant at Itasca state park under the auspices of the Minnesota conservation commission and the Northwestern Minnesota Historical Association.

Excelsior—Five hundred baby chicks and 200 baby turkeys were burned to death in a fire that destroyed two fowl breeders, a garage and an automobile at the farm home of Mr. and Mrs. Adolph Honus at Tonkawood, about seven miles east of here.

Ivanhoe—Don Roberts was credited with saving the North Western railway trestle west of Ivanhoe from destruction by fire He found a brisk fire burning one of the center posts. He extinguished the flames before the trestle was seriously damaged.

Austin—Even a storm that totally destroyed crops and caused loss conservatively estimated at over $1,000,000 could not dampen optimism and persistence of many farmers in Mower, Olmsted, Fillmore and Dodge counties who are back in the fields with tractors and horse drawn plows getting the ground ready to sow corn to give feed for the winter.

St. Paul—Payless vacations have been abandoned by state departments and instead several thousand state officials and employees took a cut averaging from 10 to 12 per cent. By the salary reductions, state departments are reducing their expenditures 20 per cent as ordered by the legislature. Use of unexpended balances and various economies are serving to hold the average reduction below 12 per cent.

Le Sueur—Although bonds are not due until 1935, the school board here will retire $7,000 on the new school building this year. Ten thousand dollars was paid on the bond account last year.

Hastings—The St. Croix river road between this city and Taylors Falls is expected to be among the first to receive improvement under state-wide plans now being mapped by the state highway department. The route through Stillwater along the river was designated as a state highway by the recent legislature.

THE FABLE OF KEEPING IT UNDER COVER

By GEORGE ADE

© Bell Syndicate.—WNU Service.

THIS is a Fable of how Futures may be doped out, the Currents of Destiny switched into new Directions and a whole Burg turned upside down without anybody really saying a Darn Word. At least, Nothing which might be pinned down. Nothing that would be recognized as an Explicit Statement or admitted in a Court of Law as Evidence.

No doubt the intelligent and refined Reader will at once ask "How come?" Those who go in for good Literature illustrated by high priced Artists or Books which are titled in Gold have been bunked into the happy Belief that when a Young Feller gets ready to put the Tall Proposition up to Sweetie, he delivers a combination Spiel, Ballyhoo, Oration and double-leaded Editorial.

Now as a matter of cold Turkey and as nearly as we can find out what happens when only two are present, it seldom happens that he says to her, as Ko-Ko says to Katisha. "For years I have loved you with a white-hot Passion, that is slowly but surely consuming my very vitals."

Neither does he get off any of that 18-karat Guff, such as, "Do you remember that First Day when I met you coming out of the Casino at Monaco? You were all in Pink and I said to Lord Marchmont, 'By Jove' &c &c."

Heartwork Instead of Headwork.

It happens that the Writer, several years ago, made an Appeal to all Married People to come clean and fess up and tell exactly what Language was used when one or the other Interested Parties made what is vulgarly known as a Proposal of Marriage. All the Readers of a Newspaper having a wide and respectable Circulation were invited to privately send in the actual Facts surrounding their Life Romances.

The Investigator wanted to find out if the every-day, plain, burden-bearing, strap-hanging, lawn-mowing American Citizen really arose to a Sentimental Height at the Supreme Moment or continued to be a tongue-tied Dub with Eyes like a Trout and a Vocabulary of about 8 words.

Well, the Responses came pouring in, mostly from Women Folks, but a great many from the He-Victims. They were Awful Poor Reading.

You might think that when a sincere, handsome, red-blooded Young American asked the sweetest and dearest Girl in all the World to be his Mate throughout Eternity that the Episode could not be pulled off without the spilling of Divine Essence all over the Premises.

It would, to an Outsider, seem difficult to declare a surging Passion in the Tones and Terms usually employed by a Young Couple when they argue as to which Drug Store keeps the best Sundaes.

The most disappointing Revelation in connection with the Survey was that very few of the Interested Parties remembered distinctly just what happened when they committed themselves and held up their Hands for the Cuffs to be locked on.

Evidently when two Persons get themselves into such a jelly-like State of yearning Adoration that Each wants to lean against the Other for all Time to come, they are operating entirely on the Emotions and the Intellect is missing on all Cylinders. After they have separated and cooled off and got through looking at themselves in Mirrors while laughing in a maniacal Manner, they know that the Arrangement has been clinched, but they do not recall any of the Words or Phrases used while both were under the Gas. They are punk Witnesses. They can't even remember whether or not it was raining at the Time.

The reports which came in to us in the Newspaper Office suggested that the usual Procedure involved the following Battle of Words:

"Huh?"

"Yeh."

"Ooh!"

Time Out for Love Stuff.

The story started in the First Paragraph, and which will still be told, unless all of the Space is wasted on Introduction, involved Gertie Mills and Fred Sargent, both residing in the not-so-large Town of Curtis Crick, which will be remembered as the Stop at which the Station Agent has the Name of the Town worked out in white-washed Dornicks.

They had been to the Aerdome and witnessed a seven-reel Feature entitled, "Why Women Mistrust Men, and Vice Versa." Evidently it had been directed by Zbysko or Strangler Lewis or some other well-known Wrestler as it consisted entirely of Clinches, Half-Nelsons and Neck Holds. It was the kind of Drama at which Young People could get a Liberal Education in One Evening.

Fred and Gertie had been sitting on the Front Steps for about an Hour, hand-holding and watching the Trolleys zipp by and certainly having a Great Time. Finally he said to her: "Gert, that Fortune-Teller—you know—the one at Luna Park—Madam Ziska, with the Ear-Rings—you know, Gert—the One out at Luna Park—she told me all about you—Color of your Eyes—everything. She said it would be this Month."

Then Gertie, coy but not altogether asleep on the Job, said "I'll betcha didn't believe her."

To which Fred, ever dauntless and outspoken, replied, "Yeah—I did."

By this time the Conversationalists were so exhausted that they had to take a Five Minutes' Recess during which naught could be heard except a Variety of Sounds which were unnoticed by Romeo and Juliet.

The next important Remark, as shown by the Notes, came from Gertrude, who said, "I s'pose you'll go out tomorrow and blat the News all over Town."

Fred protested that he would keep hidden and holy their precious Secret, using the folowing Language: "Aw, no I won't, neither. You're the one that'll spill the Beans."

To which she replied: "Well, for the—well, did you ever—I will NOT!"

"Honest?"

"Honest!"

Spreading the Glad Tidings.

So that was That. The whole Thing was sealed up tighter than Salmon. There was no Chance of anyone getting wise to the prodigious News because the only two Parties that were Hep had taken the Vow of Silence.

They kept their Words. Of course, about 9:30 the next morning when Fred met Homer Gladden at the Filling Station, he did say: "Boy, I'm sittin' pretty Today! Don't ask me."

At 10:15 Homer Gladden said to Elmore Francis, the Realtor, "Well, I been expectin' to hear that about ole Fred and Gert."

At 10:20 Homer said to his sister Ella. "That Thing betwen Gert and Fred's been comin' on all Summer."

Shortly before Noon it happened that Mr. Francis, the Realtor, met Nellie Skimmerhorn who is Trimmer at the Bon Ton Hat Shop. He said to her: "I'm glad it's fixed up between Frederick and Gertrude. They are worthy Young People."

Saying that to Miss Skimmerhorn was just the same as making Arrangements to have the Broadcasting done by WEAF, WOR and KDKA.

Also, while Mr. Francis was having a quarter-pound of Oolong wrapped up by Oscar Wesley, of the Cash and Carry Grocerteria, he said, "Before Fred Sargent is married, we ought to get him into the Building and Loan."

During the Afternoon it happened that Spud Hanley, Myrtle Wilgus, Mrs. Curt Jimison and some two or three hundred other Customers dropped into the Grocerteria and to each of them Oscar remarked, in off-hand way, that he had known how Things stood between Fred and Gert since about the Middle of June. What he started made a Prairie Fire look pale, flickering and stationary.

Mutual Blame.

In the meantime Gertie had the Fingers crossed and was maintaining a high Resolve to keep still her fluttering Heart. Of course, along in the morning, when she met Lou Daniels and Geneve Lowell at the Greek Candy Store, she did ask them, in such a Way as not to arouse Suspicion, how many of Each a Girl ought to carry when going to Atlantic City on that kind of a Trip so as to maintain her Self-Respect.

They let the Thing drop right there except that, while getting a Lettuce Sandwich at the Woman's Exchange, Miss Daniels asked Eva McClintock and Will Glitz why in the World a Boy like Fred Sargent, who had a dandy Job with the Electric Light and Ice Company, would want to throw himself away on a Nitwit like Gert Mills.

They could not tell her, so they had to go out and ask Carrie Fisher, Lizzie Pettibone, Grover Cleveland Hicks, Eddie Putnam, Dick Benjamin, John Jenks and Mrs. Ray Rice.

The Street Cars had quite a Time that Day, trying to avoid hitting well-known People who were running back and forth across the Streets.

Geneve Lowell, who had been present during the Conversation at the Greek Candy Store, was more Circumspect. She didn't mention the Matter to any one at all, except the Girls at Central.

When the two Love-birds met that Evening, each gave the other a cold, hard Look, expressive of Chagrin and Disappointment.

"I knew you'd tell."

"I never let on. It was you!"

"It was not!"

"It was!"

"It was not!"

"It was!"

And so it went on, between the two Innocent Parties for over an Hour.

MORAL: The only safe Plan for keeping it a Secret is not to let it Happen at all.

India's Hoarded Gold Computed in Billions

What the aggregate wealth of India in precious metals and jewels may be it is impossible to compute exactly, but many competent economists claim that in gold alone it is richer than either the federal reserve banks of this country or the Bank of France.

Reporting to the United States bureau of foreign commerce in 1927, Don C. Bliss said: "Vast treasures have been accumulated—estimated as amounting to more than $4,000,000,000. But they have been jealously hoarded in the form of unproductive precious metals. Put to productive uses, or loaned out in the world's money markets, they would suffice to make India one of the powerful nations of the world.

"The traditional wealth of the Indies is there, but it yields nothing to its possessors."—Garnault Agassiz in the North American Review.

Muscle and Brain in Close Accord

"Gymnastics" as Important for One as the Other.

"Following the leader" is characteristic of sheep; they would follow their leader over a cliff if he chose to take that route. They apparently do not possess as much as a speck of thinking power, of initiative. Indeed, though the comparison may seem crude, there are altogether too many boys who walk down the road of life jumping when a leader jumps, glad of a chance, it would seem, to allow another to furnish the brains.

The development of mental power, Alfred E. Parker in the second chapter of "Training for Athletics and Health" maintains, is one of the three sides to every life. Physical strength is another essential to health and happiness. No one gives a better example of what physical training can do to keep the body nimble and well developed than does Douglas Fairbanks of film fame. He realized that even in maturity to keep his body well he could not lose the spirit of play.

Character is the third side of every life, and in athletics every youth finds a definite challenge. If he can train to play a game fairly, win or lose, he wins for himself a moral victory. A clear-thinking brain is also manifest in playing the game skillfully. Alfred E. Parker says in Hygeia Magazine:

"Overemphasis, though, on the exercising and enlarging of your muscles will not bring complete health or ideal manhood. The health of the muscles is so closely related to the health of the brain that the two cannot be separated. A clear-thinking brain helps to guide the muscles in their exercise, helps to keep the body from becoming a slave to habits that are enemies of health. Surprising as it may seem, the brain must have exercise just the same as the muscles. Mental gymnastics are as important as physical gymnastics.

"In the early days of American football, coaches sought players who had plenty of 'beef' and knew how to use it. Today a coach is more often on the lookout for brains than he is for brawn. Football has developed into a game of strategy and individual wits, requiring as clear thinking as was ever exhibited in a classroom. Football, though, is not the only game in which brain are needed. To play any game expertly requires brains."

Bright Woman Lost 20 Pounds

Feels Much Better

"June 28th, 1932, I started taking Kruschen Salts. Have lost 20 pounds from June 28th to Jan. 10th. Feel better than have felt for four years. Was under doctor's care for several months. He said I had gall stones and should have operation. Kruschen did all and more than I expected." Mrs. Lute Bright, Walker, Minn. (Jan. 10, 1933).

To lose fat and at the same time gain in physical attractiveness and feel spirited and youthful take one half teaspoonful of Kruschen in a glass of hot water before breakfast every morning. A jar that lasts 4 weeks costs but a trifle at any drugstore in the world but be sure and get Kruschen Salts the SAFE way to reduce wide hips, prominent front and double chin and again feel the joy of living—money back if dissatisfied after the first jar.

PETERMAN'S ANT FOOD

Makes His Living on Ten-Acre Farm

Profits Greater Than From Tenants on 65-Acre Adjoining.

By Tom Broom, County Agent, Union County, North Carolina.—WNU Service.

R. V. Lockhart, Monroe, Route 1, Union county, North Carolina, owns a medium-sized farm of which he cultivates ten acres himself and has two tenants who cultivate an additional 65 acres.

On the ten acres which Mr. Lockhart farms himself, he grows corn, hay, wheat, and oats. One acre is in a garden and orchard. He keeps five Jersey cows and 400 White Leghorn hens. All the forage for the cows and all the grain for the cows and the chickens, except the laying mash, is produced on this ten acres. The two tenants grow about 30 bales of cotton annually, but are required to produce the food and feed needed. They grow their own bacon; have their own poultry and eggs and keep cows to produce milk and butter. However, Mr. Lockhart says the profits from his ten acres exceed his share of the profits from the two tenants.

Three years ago when the banks in Union county closed, Mr. Lockhart lost his ready cash and had to borrow some money to finance himself that year. By August, he had over $700 in another bank and all his debts paid. He made money all the time during the depression. He sells the products from his cows as sweet milk, buttermilk and butter. His 400 hens produce about 200 crates of eggs annually, and he is enriching his soil with lespedeza and vetch.

There is running water in his home, electrical refrigeration, lights and other conveniences. All of these were installed since the depression started and the bank account continues to grow.

Filling Station Saves Time for Apple Growers

A filling station for the apple orchard is a time saving development introduced recently by a few Massachusetts apple growers. Spraying the fruit trees to control pests is the most important summer time job of the fruit grower and, according to pomologists of the Massachusetts State college, most growers must spend more than half of their time driving to and from the water supply. By building a large concrete supply tank in the orchard, several growers have been able to eliminate much of the extra driving and lost time, and have been able to cover their orchards with protective sprays in about half the time required before. Massachusetts State college men are advocating the use of these "filling stations" as a means of cutting the cost of growing fruit.

Wisconsin Leads in Silos

Wisconsin uses over twice as much corn for silage as any other state, about half of the state's production being used for this purpose annually. Last year Wisconsin used 1,054,000 acres of corn for silage and produced an estimated total of 7,905,000 tons. The next ranking state in silage production was New York with 3,558,000 tons, followed by Minnesota with 3,168,000 tons. According to the crop reporting service of the Wisconsin and United States Departments of Agriculture, Wisconsin has an estimated number of 118,000 silos, which is far more than are found in any other state. This large number of silos constitutes basic equipment for the huge dairy industry in Wisconsin and makes possible the growing of corn in counties where the growing season ordinarily is too short to ripen it for grain.

Look Over Herd Now

There is no use in evading the fact that there are thousands of poor producers in the dairy herds of the country. If all such cows were removed in one great campaign, the markets would feel the effects and prices would advance. But first there is needed a campaign of cow testing to discover just which are profitable and which are not. It is poor business to have cows in a herd that are not capable of meeting all cash costs, paying the farm for farm grown feed and something over for labor and other charges. Get rid of these just as a matter of common sense.

Larger Pigs Stronger

Pigs weighing two and one-half pounds at birth have a far better chance to survive than those weighing less, says J. E. Nordby, associate animal husbandman with the University of Idaho agricultural experiment station. Experiments have shown that the largest pigs at birth are generally the strongest. Birth weight depends on two important factors: good inheritance, and proper feeding of the sow.

Potatoes Are Trucked

One type of farming is moving in closer to the urban centers. Economists of the Department of Agriculture have noted a tendency in the last few years for potato growers to concentrate their efforts in areas within trucking distance of the ultimate consumer. The time-honored system of shipping potatoes by carload lot from areas far back in the agricultural centers of Maine and other potato-growing states has given way to the modern method of shipping by auto truck.

The SILVER FLUTE

SYNOPSIS

On her eighteenth birthday, Barbara, motherless daughter of Christopher Thorne, artist, awakes with anticipation of the joys of the day. She receives a birthday ring from Bruce MacLain, young artist friend of the family, but more than friend to Barbara. Barbara and Bruce go picknicking on the sands at Provincetown. He tells her a story of a gypsy boy, a little gypsy girl whom he loves, and the song of a silver flute. She knows it is her own love tale. Her happiness turns to sorrow when she returns home to learn her father has been drowned. Relatives arrive and take charge of things. Having been almost a mother to the others, Barbara cannot think of their separation, Kit's sensitive nature bruised in Uncle Herbert's household by his rough-and-ready cousins, and Gay spoiled by her association with silly Aunt Lola. Bruce urges immediate marriage, but that would mean separation. Desperate, the four children plot to run away to Barbara's godfather, "Uncle Stephen" Drake, whom they have never seen.

Henry stood beside Stephen, holding his dinner coat with the sleeves arranged just so. Mister Stephen was taking great pains with the tie, he thought, doing it over and over, which wasn't his usual way. You'd think he was going courting. Perhaps Sarah was right. Perhaps Mister Stephen was going to marry that pale Miss Emily Trent. Looked like it, inviting her and her father for dinner tonight and tying his tie five times. Well, he wished them joy. . . .

"How does it look?" Stephen asked, patting the neat silk bow.

"Splendid, sir." No hint of what he was thinking appeared in Henry's parchment face.

"I'll take your word for it, Henry." Stephen smiled and slipped his arms into the coat.

"Have you everything, sir?" Henry felt responsible. Mister Stephen wasn't himself tonight. When a man was thinking of marriage, he was apt to be absent-minded.

"Everything's ship-shape."

"Then I'll be getting downstairs." Henry, spare and neat and elderly, moved with measured tread toward the door.

Alone in the room, Stephen was conscious of irritation. Was he in love with Emily Trent? He considered the question gravely. He admired her very much, enjoyed being with her. There was, in Emily, a quality of serenity as rare as it was charming. He saw her moving through his house, always serene and gracious, her head, with its braids of light brown hair, lifted in the gently dignified way he admired. The picture pleased him.

But he wasn't in love with her, not love as the poets described it, a sweet insanity, a madness of the senses. It was not youthful ardor which had caused his difficulty with the tie. Nor was it the fear of being refused. He was confident that Emily would accept his offer of marriage. Why not? She was well over thirty. And living alone with her father was certainly not too pleasant. Professor Trent, a former instructor at the university, was an eccentric old chap who devoted his time to translating the more obscure Greek and Latin poets.

Her path through life had not been strewn with roses. She and her father lived a pinched sort of existence in a small apartment on the outer fringe of Rittenhouse square. He could do a great deal for Emily. And he knew that she admired him, even loved him perhaps, in her gentle dignified way. Emily would accept him. He was quite certain of that.

No, it was not youthful ardor or fear of being refused which caused his present uneasiness. It was, he admitted it reluctantly, a fantastic dread of changes. His life was well-ordered and satisfying. He enjoyed his work in the law firm of Van Wyck, Penrose and Drake, an old established firm in which his grandfather had been the original Drake. Aunt Edith, his father's widowed sister, capably managed his house. He had his books, his friendships, an occasional concert or play, golf or riding when he felt the need of exercising out of doors. He was content with things as they were.

But would he continue to be content? He was getting on—forty his last birthday. An elderly bachelor, he had observed, was a pathetic sort of figure. Aunt Edith was sixty-eight. His sister Natalie, twelve years younger than he, was married. He didn't want to be left alone in the house which had sheltered three generations of Drakes. Nor did he want things changed. Emily was the one woman of his acquaintance who, he felt, would make no attempt to reorganize his life.

Did this dread of change mean he was getting old? Stephen crossed to the wardrobe mirror and gravely inspected himself. He was not unattractive, he decided. It was strange that he had never known a real romance. He had a greater capacity for it than even his most intimate friends suspected. But only once in his life had he had a glimpse of romance. His eyes turned to the painting above the fireplace. She had never known how ardently he loved her. "A Drake is always a gentleman" and her husband had been his friend. She, perhaps, was the true reason why he had never known a real romance. He had looked for her, and never found her, in the women he had known.

Stephen walked to the fireplace and, resting his arms on the mantel, looked up at the girl with the wind blowing her skirt against her bare brown legs. How lovely she had been. That was a long time since. Almost eighteen years. He had not seen her since. He knew that she was dead. He had never forgotten her vivid face, her soft brown hair, the dimple that woke when she smiled. . . .

A knock at the door brought him back from the past.

"Come in," he called.

The intruder was Aunt Edith. She was a large, handsome woman who had been known in her youth as "beautiful Edith Drake." But that, too, was a long time ago. Aunt Edith, now, was comfortably stout with waved white hair, the handsome Drake nose and a fair smooth complexion. She was a Drake by birth and a Van Wyck by marriage. That fortunate combination assured her of a prominent place on patroness lists and the boards of charitable organizations.

Her customary manner of assurance was somewhat shaken tonight.

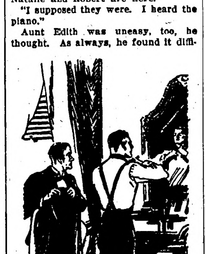
"You aren't ill, are you, Stephen?" she asked when she had closed the door.

"Of course not. Why?" Stephen, again, was conscious of irritation.

"You were so long coming down. Natalie and Robert are here."

"I supposed they were. I heard the piano."

Aunt Edith was uneasy, too, he thought. As always, he found it difficult to discuss intimate matters with Aunt Edith. The Drakes were not demonstrative. They lived within themselves.



Perhaps Mister Stephen Was Going to Marry That Pale Miss Emily Trent.

"Are you going to marry Emily Trent?" she asked after a moment of silence.

"I haven't asked her."

"But you mean to."

"Before dinner tonight." Stephen knew a moment of panic. He wished that he might recall the words. Too late. He had committed himself.

"Emily is a sweet unselfish girl. She will make you a suitable wife."

"It needn't change things," he said, wanting to reassure her, wanting desperately to reassure himself. "This will always be your home."

"Thank you, my dear." Aunt Edith drew his head down to the level of her lips and lightly kissed his brow. "I hope you will be happy."

The kiss embarrassed them both. They heard, with mutual relief, the sound of a car in the drive.

"There's Thomas." Aunt Edith turned toward the door. "We must go down at once."

Stephen followed her slowly. The feeling of panic returned. That was absurd, he told himself. He hadn't been forced into this situation. It was something he wanted to do. But the panic persisted in spite of clear-thinking reason. He felt like a sailor embarking upon a strange uncharted sea.

• • • • • • •

"This is a charming room," Emily said in her gentle voice.

"A bit old-fashioned, I'm afraid." Stephen felt the panic recede. He was soothed by Emily's serenity. She was almost pretty tonight, he thought, in the cream-colored lace he particularly admired, her only ornament a coral rose on a slender golden chain.

"It's perfect," Emily continued. "I should hate you"—she smiled to let him know that she could never, under any circumstances, hate him—"if you should change it in any way."

"A perfect setting for you," Stephen said softly. That, at least, was true. The drawing room with its paneled walls, its rosewood and silver-green brocade, was a perfect setting for Emily. But he wouldn't ask her to marry him here. He would take her into the conservatory. That would please her, he thought, smiling with masculine tolerance for a woman's romantic whims. The orange trees were in bloom. That would be an excuse.

"Thank you, Stephen." A faint flush crept into her cheeks. "You say nice things so nicely."

Did he mean anything by that? she wondered, frantic with hope and fear. If Stephen asked her to marry him it would make up for everything; the girlhood she had missed, the pinching and contriving, being patient with Father when she wanted to scream and fly into millions of pieces. But she must be calm. She knew that her tranquility was her greatest charm for Stephen. She spoke of the concert they were to attend this evening after dinner.

LIFE'S LITTLE JESTS

Grandpa's Static

Grandpa was having his afternoon sleep in the armchair and emitting sounds that might easily have come from a cross-cut saw. As father entered the room he saw little Jackie twisting one of grandpa's waistcoat buttons.

"What are you doing?" he whispered, "you mustn't disturb grandpa."

"I'm not, daddy," said Jackie, "I was just trying to tune him in on something different."

Exception

A little boy came home from school very much annoyed with his teacher.

Little Boy—I hate her!

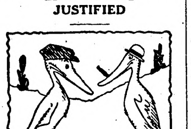
His Mother—Oh, you mustn't say that. The Bible tells us to love everybody.

Little Boy—I know, but she wasn't alive when the Bible was written.—Chelsea Record.

Not to Be Used

Little Jane had been asked to show the week-end guest to her room. Pausing on the way, she pointed out the bathroom, and touching one of the pretty embroidered towels, said: "Of course you know that these are not to be used."—Indianapolis News.

JUSTIFIED



"Why did they expel Mr. Crow from the Country club?"

"Oh, for caws."

Misunderstanding

"Were you never tempted to become a linguist?"

"What's the use?" rejoined Senator Sorghum. "Even the people who speak the same language are no longer able to come to an understanding."—Washington Star.

Determined

"It is not the time to ask me for a job. My goods are being seized tomorrow."

"Do you know if they want anybody to help seize them?"—Lausanne L'Illustre.

New Models

Dick's father is an automobile salesman. Recently his sister came home displaying pennies she had earned. The lad looked them over and said:

"I'd sure like to have them, they are the new models."

No Tips

Old Gentleman—There's been no change here for ages—has there?

Waiter—Not under the plates.—London Humorist.

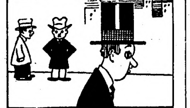
No Duck!

"Mamma, there's a man here at the door to see you."

"Does he have a bill?"

"No, mamma. Just a plain nose!"

HIS ERROR



"Jones is a self-made man."

"I know. He surely made a mistake in not consulting an expert."

Forbidden

"My wife has been forbidden to cook."

"Is she ill?"

"No, I am."—Madrid Buen Humor.

A Little Premature

First Little Girl—What's your last name, Marie?

Second Little Girl—I don't know yet; I ain't married!

FOLLOWING "COPY"

The amateur band practice was being held, but something had gone wrong in the piece which had just been tried. Somebody had spoiled the effect.

The conductor of the band glared at the cornet player. "Why on earth," he yelled, "did you leave off playing just as we got to the chorus?"

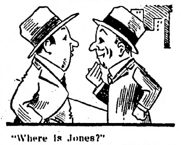
"Well," said the cornet player (a raw recruit), "on my music it said, 'Refrain'—so I did!"

Find a Synonym

"Jack Newlyrich seems to have quite a lot of common sense."

"Don't let his mother hear you say that; she hates anything common."—London Tit-Bits.

TRACING HIM



"Where is Jones?"

"Cruising around somewhere in the business section."

"I'd like to see him. Are you acquainted with any of his coaling stations?"

Too Much Competition

"Excuse me, sir, but have you finished your soup?"

"Yes. Why do you ask?"

"Now we can begin the concert."—Olten Woche im Bild.

A Problem

"So you like your two lovers equally?"

"Yes, dad I simply don't know which to marry first."—Venice Gazzettino Illustrato.

Followed Instructions

"Did you do as I told you, Mary, and ask whether the chicken was young or old before you bought it?"

"Yes, ma'am; it is old."—Dublin Opinion.

Rare Meat

Landlady—Do you like your beef this rare, Miss Phim?

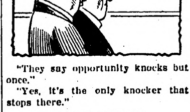
Boarder—Since you ask me; it is too rare—I would like it a little oftener.

Singing

Wife (at bathroom door)—Dinner's on the table, John. Hurry and finish your bath.

Husband—Coming, dear! Just one stanza and I'm through.

UNIQUE



"They say opportunity knocks but once."

"Yes, it's the only knocker that stops there."

Saving Dad Trouble

Irate Parent—When that young cub who's paying you attention comes again I'll sit on him.

Daughter—Oh, let me do it, father.

Rare Sight

Blinks—The papers say there are a lot of counterfeit twenty-dollar bills in circulation.

Jinks—Huh! There are so few genuine ones in circulation, any twenty-dollar bill I got would convince me it was counterfeit.

His Humble Opinion

Motorist (inquiring his way)—Boy, am I all right for the zoo?

Bright Lad—As far as I know you are, Mister, but I'm not running the zoo.—Montreal Gazette.

Social Question

Mrs. Newrich—What is that?

Mr. Newrich—Just a common gray squirrel.

"Should I notice it?"—London Tit-Bits.

Weekly Reminder

Friend—You will soon forget her and be happy again.

Jilted Suitor—Oh, no, I shan't! I've bought too much for her on the installment system!—London Answers.

How All the People Played a Part In Building Nation's Credit Structure

Banker Describes the Way Loans and Securities of Banks Are Based on the Hopes and Plans of All Classes—Values Dependent on Public's Ability to Meet Obligations

By FRANCIS H. SISSON,
President American Bankers Association in The Forum

F. H. SISSON

CREDIT may be informally described as future hopes, plans and good intentions converted into present purchasing power. The farmer, the manufacturer, the merchant, the home buyer, the purchaser of household goods, the investor and the speculator all borrow at times. They plan to repay with the earnings of their crops, proceeds of the sales of their goods, incomes from their wages and salaries or profits from the resales of their securities at enhanced market values, each as the case may be.

The greater part of these various forms of credit is obtained by the borrowers directly or indirectly through the expansion of the loans and investments of the banks. It is this which creates the notes, securities and mortgages in the portfolios of the banks. The banks are able to extend these loans because a great many people deposit money with them.

Even under the best conditions the plans of a small percentage of borrowers go wrong through mistakes, hard luck or dishonesty, and the judgment of the banker in such cases is proved by the after event to have been at fault. The losses caused under such conditions are ordinarily fully met by funds set aside out of the earnings of the banks for just this purpose and do not affect the money of the depositors, who seldom hear anything about such losses.

In the vast majority of cases and in the overwhelming volume of business involved the confidence of the bankers in their customers and the confidence of the customers in their own ability to carry out their plans and obligations to successful conclusions are wholly justified. This is the normal economic situation and it constitutes the conditions under which the use of credit adds to public welfare and progress.

The Faith of the Banks

Such was the structure of hopes, good intentions and common confidence in one another that existed among all classes of the nation's community life when the series of economic shocks began to shake the nation's social fabric in 1929. The people had deposited billions of dollars with the banks because they had confidence in them. The banks had loaned large volumes of these deposits on farm and home mortgages and on notes of manufacturers, business men and finance concerns, and had invested in the standard securities of the nation's corporations, state and local governmental units and the national government itself, because they had confidence in the citizenship and business condition of the nation.

Their mortgage and other loans to owners of farms aggregated $6,500,000,000. Loans on urban real estate were $4,000,000,000. Loans to individuals secured by U. S. Government, municipal and corporate securities totalled $11,000,000,000. Loans to industrial and commercial enterprises in connection with the production and distribution of the nation's infinite varieties of goods amounted to almost $19,500,000,000. Investments in Federal, State and municipal bonds were almost $6,000,000,000, and in various kinds of railroad and corporate securities $11,000,000,000. These made total loans and investments of $58,000,000,000.

This great credit structure was built while the country was at peace, while the farms and factories were productive, while the nation and the world provided great active markets for their outputs, while the earnings of all kinds of enterprise were large, while the working people of the nation were fully employed, while wages and salaries were steady and generous, while prices of commodities were strong and while the minds of the people were dominated by faith in the future and confidence in one another.

Great Changes Came to the Nation

Then suddenly, almost as if the sun itself had lost part of its vitality, everything changed. Foreign markets failed and disappeared. Industry slackened. A rapid drop in all kinds of commodity values set in. The earnings of business fell. Unemployment developed. Wages and salaries went down. Domestic markets shrank. Fear became general. The securities markets became panic-ridden as the prices of stocks and bonds withered to fractions of their former values. It was the greatest disintegration of human plans, economic conditions and worldly values that history had ever witnessed.

These destructive changes cut right through the qualities and values of the loans and investments, the notes and securities in the banks. Business men and manufacturers could not repay their notes to the banks as due. Many governmental units and corporations defaulted the payments on their bonds. Property underlying real estate mortgages became worth less than the face of the mortgages. The market values of standard securities became less than the banks had paid for them as investments or accepted them at as collateral for customers' loans.

This meant, in fine, that the ability of borrowers to carry out the future hopes, plans and good intentions that I have defined above as the basis of credit, had become impaired to a far greater extent than had ever before occurred in the nation's history. The resulting losses could not be absorbed by the banks alone out of the normally ample funds that had been set aside against the expectancy of a certain inevitable percentage of human plans gone wrong.

Banks Showed All Reasonable Care

It was in loans and investments, whose values thus became so unforeseeably impaired, that the banks, in all confidence, in all good faith, in all humanly reasonable care and good judgment had entrusted the billions of dollars of deposits which their customers had entrusted to them.

Those loans and investments were, under all normal conditions, as good as gold itself. Indeed, if the banks instead had filled their vaults with gold bars, and then some unknown cosmic ray had transmuted them into lead, the results would have been scarcely more startling than the depreciation that was caused in the assets of the banks by the unforeseeable economic forces which permeated and debased them.

The inevitable result was that, when the banks urgently needed the money they had entrusted to those assets, so that they could meet the unreasoning demands of their depositors, they could not get it back.

It was not that our banking system and methods were of themselves weak or reprehensible, apart from the rest of the life of the nation, as has so much been made to appear.

It was not that our banks were permeated with incompetency or dishonesty or with lower standards of business ethics than were the other forms of human activity with which their own fate and activities were inextricably interwoven, as, it almost seemed at times, there was a concerted national conspiracy to lead our people to believe.

The great fact of American banking is that it shared fully in the plans and hopes and hazards of the American people,—and when those plans went wrong, the banks carried their share of the burden and suffered their share of the misfortune.

FARM ACCOUNTING CONTEST LAUNCHED

Bankers Evolve Plan for Stimulating Important Aid to Farm Success

THE Cache county, Utah, bankers recently added a stimulus to banker-farmer cooperative work by launching a farm accounting contest. At a meeting of the Clearing House Association the project was put before the bankers, and methods and plans formulated.

Each bank in the county agreed to enroll a minimum of five farmers in the farm accounting project. The names of the farmers when enrolled will be sent to the Secretary of the Clearing House, and also to the Extension Division of the Utah State Agricultural College. The bankers agree to cooperate and keep in close touch with each farmer they enroll so as to insure the completion of a maximum number. The bank which succeeds at the conclusion of the contest in enrolling the largest number of farmers completing the project will be given a special recognition at the annual meeting.

The banks of Cache county have agreed to subscribe to an award fund, which will be presented to five winners as follows: first prize, $35.00; second prize, $25.00; third prize, $20.00; fourth prize, $12.50; fifth prize, $7.50.

Recognition for Good Farming

In addition to the cash prizes, every farmer customer enrolled, who scores sixty per cent or more, will be awarded a special certificate issued by the Clearing House Association and the Extension Service jointly in cooperation with the Agricultural Committee of the Utah Bankers Association.

The scoring will be done on the following basis:

Farm and home account records (accurate and complete) 50%
Success of year's operations as brought out in the summary of the year's business 25%
General appearance of farm and improvements and condition of livestock and poultry, (judging to be done during the summer months) 25%

The contest will end December 31, 1933. The judges will be the County Agent, the County Key Banker, a representative of the Clearing House Association, and two representatives selected by the Extension Division of the College.

Death of August Nass

August Nass, 65 year old pioneer of this community, passed away at his farm home here on Sunday afternoon after being sick only three hours. He suffered from a stroke which had burst a blood vain in his hip.

Mr. Nass came here 40 years ago and took a homestead in the northwest corner of Holt township and, where he has since lived and built up a nice farm and home for his family.

Funeral services were conducted yesterday afternoon at one o'clock from the home and at two o'clock from the Free Mission church here. Rev. Myhrer officiated. The Carlson Merc. Co., had charge of the funeral. Interment was made in Ridge cemetery near the Andrew Hanson farm northwest of here.

Hans Larson and family from Oslo spent Sunday here visiting around with friends.

G. Sanoden and family and H. O. Hanson and family visited at the Hjalmer Johnson home on Monday evening.

Martin Olson of Crookston was here Tuesday to look after his farm in Mud Lake and, which is now one big peat fire.

A number of friends and relatives of Mr. and Mrs. Oscar L. Johnson gave them a kitchen shower Sunday afternoon.

Elsberg Stands Pat

N. W. Elsberg, state highway commissioner, is "standing pat" on his plan to distribute Minnesota's $10,000,000 of Federal highway funds in all parts of the state.

Faced with demands from St. Paul, Minneapolis and Duluth for more than a third of all the Federal money, Commissioner Elsberg told them plainly that he will allot them $1,500,000 for immediate work and will give them more assistance next year, but that he will not take money allotted to the smaller communities and rural districts and turn it over to the three big cities.

This statement brought a threat that the cities would hold up the entire state program if possible in order to get a guarantee that they will be given at least 35 per cent of Minnesota's total allotment. Protest were immediately made to Washington officials, and to Gov. Olson, demanding that this amount of money, approximately $3,700,000, be set aside for the three big cities. This would mean $2,200,000 less for the remainder of the state than would be received under Elsberg's plan.

Aroused by this action, the State Association of County Commissioners and the Minnesota Good Roads Association sent a telegram to Washington, calling the attention of H. C. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture to the matter.

Hay Goes to Drouth Area

According to a news dispatch from St. Paul, thousands of tons of hay will be cut on tax-delinquent and state-owned land in northern Minnesota and sold at prices far below market price to drouth-stricken farmers, G. Lund of the department of agriculture, dairy and food, said Saturday.

Surveys already made show that 1,000 tons will be cut in Roseau county, while approximately 3,000 tons are expected to be cut in Mahnomen county, Lund said. Surveys are under way in Marshall, Aitkin and St. Louis counties.

Lund, who handled feed loans to farmers in the drouht-stricken areas last spring, when $70,000 was made available for relief of farmers, said that $7,000 unexpended money from that appropriation, plus $7,000 repaid by farmers already is available to cut the hay. The state executive council last spring appropriated $35.000 as an emergency measure while the legislature added $35,000 for feed relied.

The hay will be distributed chiefly to farmers in 15 counties of west central and southwestern Minnesota.

Why Do Cream Tests Vary?

The following are some of the principal causes for variation in the test of cream:

5. Amount of Skim-Milk or Water Used in Flushing the Separator Bowl.—When skim-milk or water is used in flushing, it should be poured into the supply tank and run into machine gradually. If skim-milk or water is poured directly into the bowl, more of it will run into the cream, thus lowering the test of same.

6. An Unclean Separator. Clean after each separation, as an unclean separator will not skim clean—causing loss of fat.

Peat Fires Burn Mud Lake Hay

We mentioned in our last issue that peat fires in the vicinity of Mud Lake had gone on a rampage and burned several stacks of hay. Since then the peat fires have got right up out of their hot beds where, in some places they have been smoldering along slowly for the past three years and, started out to burn hay stacks in wholesale lots and cleaned up unmowed meadows by quarter sections.

We know that there is no real sport in renting a nice piece of hay land, hire help to put up the hay, your own hard work and wear and tear on the machinery, and when you turn around to see what it all amounts to in the number of big hay stacks, you also see a sneaking fire over which you have no control, coming thru the grass and take several of your stacks away.

This has happened as C. A. Davis and O. J. Backlund have lost many stacks in the peat fires the past week. They tried to save the stacks but the wind was blowing strong and filled the air with burning hay which made it hard to be around.

The entire meadow of a 160 acres on the Martin T. Olson farm has been burned black. He had it all rented out and is now refunding the money to the unlucky parties who lost their hay crop.

Several other quarters have been cleaned the same way by the big peat fire on the north shore of Mud Lake. Unless we get a rain soon something will have to be done to protect what hay is left out there.

We saw this same peat fire at the time it started and, when ten men could have put it out easy and saved hundreds of acres of nice farm land and growing green spruce timber which has since been made into a great area of burnouts and is at the present time of no value to anybody.

The present peat fire has now spread over a section of land that was good hay land and, had never had the peat burned off before but, is burning to a depth of from one to four feet now.

Two New Business Places

Jesse Sorum has rented the building formerly occupied by R. Nyhus for a shoe shop next to the bank and, have this week had John Hagberg install new booths and Hartley Peterson has done all painting making it all ready for a coffee shop and refreshment room. He opens up for business today.

Mr. Sanoden opened up for business on Wednesday.

If I were asked to pick the 7 deadly sins of traffic and list them in the order of their importance, I believe I would put them down as follows:

1. Inattention.
2. Excessive speed.
3. Violation of traffic regulations.
4. Intoxication.
5. Road hogging.
6. Driving when physically unfit.
7. Failure to keep car in safe condition.

Inattention comes first. Too many people are driving while day dreaming or night dreaming. They pay no attention to the road and traffic conditions.

Johnson Hurrying Industrial Groups Into Federal Control; President Forms an Executive Council; London Economic Conference Nears Recess.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

SPURRED on by President Roosevelt—though the stimulus was scarcely necessary—Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, industrial recovery administrator, let it be known that he intended to get the principal industrial groups under federal control as speedily as possible. He and the President desire that the industries come in voluntarily, but if they do not, the general is ready to hold arbitrary hearings and then fix the wage rates and working hours for the recalcitrant trades. These enforced regulations will apply until the industries present their own codes.

Hugh S. Johnson

If it is necessary to adopt arbitrary codes, these will be based on data gathered by the administration's statistical expert, Dr. Alexander Sachs, who has already prepared a setup codifying various leading industries according to a number of conditions. They have been rated according to wage scales existing in various years, chiefly the boom year of 1929, and charts have been prepared showing how far cuts in working hours must be made to restore a mass of employment equal to predepression days.

With these data Doctor Sachs has shown conclusions as to how much each industry ought to pay in minimum wages, how many employees it ought to absorb from the army of idle, and how many hours those employees ought to work every week.

Two important codes received were those for the lumber and steel industries. The former pegged wages so low and working hours so long that General Johnson said: "They are wholly unacceptable and will, in no case, be approved." A public hearing on this code was set for July 20. In submitting the code, John D. Tennant, representing the lumber men, declared it would result in "a substantial increase" in the number of employees, and that it would increase pay rolls by more than $10,000,000 in the month of August alone.

The most extraordinary thing about the lumber code is that it would set up "an emergency national committee," to be appointed by the 27 associations applying for the code, which would have the strongest of autocratic power, to the point of exerting absolute control over the entire industry.

The cotton textile code was approved by the President and went into effect.

FOR the purpose of co-ordinating the many new functions and new bureaus created since March 4, the President has created a super-cabinet, called the "executive council," similar to the supreme war council of World war days. Besides the President and his cabinet, the members are: The director of the budget, Lewis W. Douglas; the federal relief administrator, Harry L. Hopkins; the chairman of the Reconstruction Finance corporation, J. H. Jones; the governor of the farm credit administration, Henry Morgenthau, Jr.; the chairman of the board of the Home Owners' Farm corporation, William F. Stevenson; the administrator of the industrial recovery act, Gen. Hugh S. Johnson; the administrator of agricultural adjustment, George Peek; the chairman of the board of the Tennessee valley authority, Arthur E. Morgan; the federal railroad co-ordinator, Joseph B. Eastman, and the director of the civilian conservation corps, Robert Fechner.

Frank C. Walker, treasurer of the National Democratic committee, was appointed secretary of the council. During the summer and perhaps longer the regular Tuesday cabinet meeting is to be superseded by a meeting of the council.

SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR ICKES, in his capacity as public works administrator, and his assistants are mighty busy these days, for government departments, states and municipalities are scrambling for shares of the $3,300,000,000 which is to be spent under the public works program of the administration. The proposed federal projects were given first consideration, and a long list of them was approved by Mr. Ickes and submitted to the President. Application from states and municipalities came next, many of them having previously been approved by the Reconstruction Finance corporation and passed on to Mr. Ickes.

An additional $26,276,400 of the $400,000,000 allocated for public road gifts to the states was approved when the allotments for Ohio, Massachusetts, and Utah received the final indorsements of Secretary Ickes and Secretary of Agriculture Wallace. With the $22,330,101 already assigned to New York state, this action means a total of $48,606,501 already donated as an outright grant from the federal treasury for road building. Under the allotments Massachusetts gets $6,597,100, Ohio $15,484,592, and Utah $4,194,708.

ILLINOIS and Iowa, by their delegates in state conventions, ratified the repeal of the Eighteenth amendment, the votes being unanimous in both cases. They were the tenth and eleventh states to take this action to wipe out prohibition.

Citizens of Oklahoma went to the polls and enthusiastically voted for the legalization of 3.2 beer by a majority of about 2 to 1. In Oklahoma City the people made a rush for sixty carloads of beer that were waiting in the railroad yards for distribution, but Gov. "Alfalfa Bill" Murray called out the National Guard and kept the cars closed until next day, after which Oklahoma, dry for 26 years, slaked its thirst.

RACKETEERING is to be wiped out if the federal government can do it and its agencies throughout the country are uniting in a drive to bring about this end. Such was the statement made by Senator Copeland of New York, chairman of the senate committee on crime, after he had called on President Roosevelt and Attorney General Cummings. The first phase of the campaign, he added, will be research and the mapping of lines of co-operation. For the present the work centers in three leading cities, New York, Chicago and Detroit, where it is directed, respectively, by Senators Copeland, Murphy of Iowa and Vandenberg of Michigan.

Manufacture and transportation of guns will be one of the first tasks tackled by the committee, it was indicated. Copeland urged a program which would require all manufacturers of guns to be licensed, all guns numbered, all dealers licensed, and all purchasers examined for permits.

INDICATIONS in London were that the economic conference might continue until the end of July and then recess until September or October. The steering committee favored this course. It also decided that one monetary subcommission should discuss international commercial indebtedness (war debts excluded), and that another should deal with the questions of central banking and silver. Nearly all the work is being done by subcommittees. Restricting the conference program was a complete victory for the gold bloc nations.

Neville Chamberlain

In addressing the house of commons on the government's policy, Neville Chamberlain, chancellor of the exchequer, said: "There is no doubt that the avowed policies of this country and the United States are closely parallel to one another," whereupon the house cheered enthusiastically. Mr. Chamberlain continued:

"It is the declared intention of the government to pursue by all means in their power any measures which they think will tend toward raising price levels, which we believe to be the first essential step toward recovery.

"I also agree that this country should not depend wholly upon what is done in conjunction with other countries, but that we should do what we can to help ourselves. That is what we have been doing and we have met with a considerable measure of success, sterling figures of commodities having risen from the first of the year no less than 8 per cent.

"We have really at last begun to see signs that show unmistakably that improvement is not a fleeting one, that it has a solid foundation and may be expected to continue."

CHICAGOANS, especially those of Italian birth or descent, were eagerly awaiting the arrival at A Century of Progress of Gen. Italo Balbo and his fleet of 24 Italian royal force seaplanes. The air armada was delayed several days at Reykjavik, Iceland, by unfavorable weather conditions, and then, despite continuing calm that made it difficult to get the huge planes in the air, it took off for Cartwright, Labrador, this being the fourth and probably most perilous stage of the 7,100 mile flight to Chicago. The route thence as laid out in advance was, to Shediac, New Brunswick, 800 miles; Montreal, Quebec, 870 miles, and Chicago, 1,000 miles.

Gen. Balbo

Preparations were made by the exposition officials in Chicago and the city authorities to give the Italian flyers a great reception and to entertain them lavishly during their stay. A landing place for the planes was arranged near the municipal pier, and another on Lake Geneva in case the lake was too rough.

FINDING of Jimmy Mattern, American aviator, alive but injured in Siberia, was cause for rejoicing. For sixteen days after he crashed in the northern wilds he was barely able to keep alive, and then he was picked up by Eskimos and taken to the village of Anadyr. The Soviet government was active in the efforts to rescue the flyer, and reports from Khabarovsk said a Russian aviator expected to take him from Anadyr to Nome.

THAT Col. Charles A. Lindbergh is still one of the country's most popular figures is made evident by the general interest taken in the route-mapping flight he is making over the northern air course to Europe. Mrs. Lindbergh, her husband's rival in popularity, is with him not as a passenger but as radio operator and assistant pilot of their big monoplane. Their plans were to fly across Labrador, Greenland and Iceland, and perhaps on to Denmark. They had no fixed route or stopping places and did not know when they would return.

Col. Lindbergh

The Lindberghs' trip started from New York and the first stop was near Rockland, Me., where they were forced down by fog. When the air cleared they went on to Halifax, and after an overnight stop, proceeded northward on the way to Greenland, stopping en route at St. Johns, New Brunswick. The plane was provided with new pontoons and instruments and the motor had been speeded up considerably.

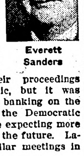
SECRETARY SWANSON is determined to build the navy up to treaty limits, and his department has been allotted $238,000,000 of the public works money. The navy's construction program, it is estimated, will create more than 2,430,000 "man weeks" of work, and will result in the modernization of the fleet. Bids on seventeen of the authorized vessels will be opened in a few days. The remaining fifteen vessels will be constructed speedily in government navy yards.

DURING the fiscal year 1933, ending July 1, the people of the United States paid an additional $62,000,000 in federal taxes, this being because the new levies more than offset the decline in wealth due to the depression. Internal revenue collections for the year were about $1,616,000,000. The yield increased in 31 states and dropped in the other 19.

Most of the drop in income taxes had been in corporation returns which showed a decline of 35 per cent last year. Corporations' income yielded only $395,000,000 of federal taxes last year, compared with $630,000,000 the year before. Returns from individuals, where the rate increases were heaviest, dropped from $427,000,000 a year ago to $351,000,000 last year.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT has granted a full pardon to Francis H. Shoemaker, congressman from Minnesota, who served a year in Leavenworth penitentiary before his election to congress. He was convicted in 1930 of sending libelous and defamatory matter through the mails, to a political enemy. The President also pardoned Owen Lamb, whom Shoemaker met in prison and took to Washington as his secretary. Lamb was convicted of abstracting money from a national bank.

LEADERS of the Republican party, determined that the G. O. P. shall not die or even sleep, are actively planning for the elections of 1934 and profess the belief that they can regain much of the ground lost in 1932. Under the personal direction of Everett Sanders, chairman of the national committee, a series of regional meetings is being held, the latest being in Chicago where national committeemen and a few others from eight central states gathered. Their proceedings were not made public, but it was learned that they are banking on the "mistakes" made by the Democratic administration and are expecting more of them to be made in the future. Later there will be similar meetings in western cities.



Everett Sanders

Mr. Sanders said in Chicago that three conferences in the East had given assurance of better times ahead for the party, provided enough hard work was done. He said the attitude of national headquarters is one of looking forward and not backward. Nonpartisan observers are inclined to think that at present no headway can be made on the basis of opposition to the Roosevelt policies—at least not before they have been given a fair chance to succeed or fail.

ONE THOUSAND veterans of the Rainbow division celebrated the fifteenth anniversary of the battle of Champagne-sur-Mer with a three-days reunion in Chicago including a fete at A Century of Progress exposition. In the list of those who addressed the former officers were Maj. Gen. Douglas McArthur, chief of staff of the United States army; Gen. Charles P. Summerall, former chief of staff; Maj. Gen. George E. Leach, former mayor of Minneapolis; Col. William P. Screws of Alabama; Maj Gen. Matthew A. Tinley of Iowa, and Col. William J. Donovan of New York.

ANGKOR-A Mystery

A Cambodian Temple Dancer.

Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

FAR up in the jungles of French Indo-China, some 300 miles from the doorstep of the world as measured in distance, a thousand years in the past as measured in time, and aeons back in the unknown as measured in history, is Angkor, one of the most puzzling works ever contrived by the hand of man.

Temple and town and network of dim and forgotten shrines, it represents a culture that must have been far in advance of anything coeval with it and a power that must have been virtually irresistible even in Asia, where men at arms were plentiful and warfare was a favored business.

But the culture died and the men who had built it disappeared, and for hundreds of years the forests of banyan and bamboo hid from the eyes and memory of the world what had been a metropolis of a million inhabitants.

Two generations ago a French naturalist broke through the wall of jungle in a search for specimens of tropical life and came upon a spectacle such as the slaves of the lamp might have contrived for Aladdin. Before him, in the quivering silence, rose the five towers of a vast step pyramid, a stone tapestry representative of an art and architecture like nothing else within the ken of man.

A moated wall surrounded it and a cloistered gate opened upon a causeway that led to its rocketing staircases; and, for all that jungle growths were close about its lower stage and odd clumps of verdure grew from its arched roofs, it seemed that life had been in its shadowy galleries only a moment ago. The temple was virtually intact.

Still an Unsolved Puzzle.

It is now more than seventy years since the stunned eyes of Mouhot, the naturalist, looked upon the magnificent heights of Angkor—more than seventy years since the greatest detective story in the history of the world was laid out with its million stony clews to puzzle the savants. Today, with its principal remains classified and ticketed, its inscriptions translated, and its monuments lifted out of the jungle, Angkor is still the vast and silent mystery that it was in the beginning.

But the monuments are there and no mere shutting of the eyes will dispose of them: Angkor Thom, a walled city within whose metropolitan area at one time must have lived more people than were to be found in the Rome of Augustus or the Carthage of Hannibal; and Angkor Vat, supreme architectural effort of this strange culture, not only the most grandiose temple of the group, but one of the most stupendous undertakings begun by man since the cornerstone was laid for the Tower of Babel.

About Angkor Thom are scattering remains of earlier edifices, and far in the jungle are capital cities built and abandoned with that prodigality which seems always to have been characteristic of oriental monarchs. Traces of this lost civilization have been found wherever a lean tributary of the Mekong river branches out toward the north.

Once a Splendid Metropolis.

Here at Angkor was the finest metropolis in Asia—a town whose swaggering splendor is permanently embossed in temple wall and tower and terrace. It was the perfect expression of a race of conquerors and must have been as wealthy as Babylon under Nebuchadnezzar. And yet, for some cause which an archeologist can only guess, the populace walked out of it and never came back. The jungle moved in and engulfed it for five centuries.

There begins and there ends the mystery of Angkor.

Little enough is known about the origins of the race that evolved the culture which centered in Angkor Thom. The people were called the Khmers and were either of Hindu extraction or the diligent pupils of Hindu teachers. That about sums up the available information concerning them.

There is mention in Chinese records of a kingdom under Hindu direction if not domination, in Indo-China as early as the year 238 of our era, and there is evidence that the Khmers were still flourishing in the Thirteenth and possibly in the early Fourteenth centuries; but, strangely enough, their civilization, wonderful as it was, made little impress on the neighboring nations.

It seems impossible that a culture such as that which built the pyramid of Angkor Vat could have perished without a word of its demise reaching the civilizations with which it must have been in constant touch. But such appears to have been the case.

Two generations ago the modern world had never heard of Angkor. A dense forest spread across Indo-China. French trade was confined to the coast, and there was no commercial traffic on the Mekong river north of Pnompenh for the reason that Cambodia's resources, the same resources that had given this region a possible identity as the Golden Chersonese of legend, were as deeply carpeted with useless verdure as the hidden cities of the north.

Pnompenh, the capital of the Kingdom of Cambodia (western portion of the Indo-Chinese peninsula), was a village of nipa thatch and bamboo, a comic-opera metropolis, where a despot ruled in fear of his life over a semi-savage, if not completely savage, people.

Early Stories Not Believed.

Saigon, the present capital of French enterprise in the East, was just rising from the marshes south of Annam. What might lie hidden in the masses of foliage to the north no one knew. The world had heard, but had forgotten, the tales of Portuguese missionaries of the Seventeenth century, that marvelous cities with leaping towers stood dead among the trees of the Tonle Sap. Wherever there is unexplored territory one is certain to hear of such cities, and the world had grown too wise and too skeptical to pay attention to such nonsense.

True, there had been a Chinese traveler, Tcheou-Ta-Quan by name, who had written what purported to be a chronicle of his service as ambassador to some kingdom in the Mekong valley. It was conceded that the writer might actually have had some such service, but it was obvious that in his description of the marvels he had found in his dubious kingdom he was merely a pleasant liar.

What the Ruins Are Like.

The name Angkor has been somewhat loosely applied to the ruins. There are two principal groups: Angkor Vat, the temple and Angkor Thom, the town. The word Angkor is believed to be a native corruption of the Sanskrit Nagara, meaning capital. Thom is a local word, meaning great or grand. Vat is an appellation designating a temple and is generally associated with Buddhism.

Angkor Vat was the last important work of the Khmers and remains today the finest expression of their peculiar art. Built as a shrine to Hindu gods and apparently devoted to Vishnu, Siva, and Buddha in turn, it has departed a long distance from the parent architecture of the Hindus. It is a step pyramid which rises through three cloistered stages to a group of five miterlike towers, of which the one in the center is dominant.

The temple area is about a quarter of a mile square and is surrounded by a moat and a high wall. A causeway crosses the moat and strikes through a gate pierced in the middle of the western wall, whence it leads to the portico of the first stage. The lower galleries measure nearly 250 feet on a side. The facade is five times as wide as that of Notre Dame of Paris.

About two-thirds of a mile to the north of the temple one comes to the wall of Angkor Thom, where the seven-headed Naga, legendary deity of the Khmers, is upheld in the arms of stone giants to form a balustrade for the entering causeway. Access to the old capital is through a tower, from each of the faces of which a head of Siva the Destroyer leers down upon the world.

It is one of the most pretentious capitals of antiquity. Its walls, most of which are intact today, measure nearly two miles on a side, and it contained a temple, the Bayon, which was almost as large as Angkor Vat.

Scotsman Grows Crops Immune From Disease

A Scotsman has spent $150,000 and 20 years of his life to prove a theory.

He is John Hepburn, seventy-four, a farmer, Manningtree, Essex, England, and he has spent the money to prove that crops can be kept immune from disease.

Judging from the results on farms where experiments have been conducted the Scotsman has proved his theory.

He contended that plant poisonings, such as blight, bunt, black and green fly, were not induced from exterior influences during the above-surface growth of the plant. These diseases, according to Hepburn, were contracted during the gestation of an impure earth which could have been made pure by proper tilling.

He observed conditions under which growth occurred; he studied variations of land culture and their effects; as a natural untrained scientific genius he canceled down a mass of vague considerations to definite conclusions and principles.

The job he made was so successful, Hepburn was able to produce perfect crops and rear cattle that were never afflicted with the usual kind of animal diseases.

An official of the British ministry of agriculture commenting on Hepburn's claim said:

"Some years ago we investigated Mr. Hepburn's claim to grow beans which were resistant to the ravages of the black fly. He certainly did show that he could grow beans that were more resistant to the blight than plants left to themselves. We know he is a very successful farmer who has certainly succeeded in growing healthy crops."

Total Loss

The man who loses his opportunity loses himself.

HOW SHE LOST 18 POUNDS OF FAT

For Less Than $1.00

"Will say in regards to Kruschen: I took it to reduce. I lost 18 pounds after using one bottle and feel fine. Just bought one more bottle today and expect to lose 18 more pounds. I now weigh 148 and feel fine." Mrs. Harry Robinson, Akron, Ohio (Jan. 6, 1933).

Once a day take Kruschen Salts—one half teaspoonful in a glass of hot water first thing every morning. Besides losing ugly fat SAFELY you'll gain in health and physical attractiveness—constipation, gas and acidity will cease to bother—you'll feel younger—more active—full of ambition—clear skin—sparkling eyes.

A jar that lasts 4 weeks costs but a trifle at any drugstore in the world—but demand and get Kruschen and if one bottle doesn't joyfully please you—money back.

The SILVER FLUTE

By Lida Larrimore

WNU Service.

SYNOPSIS

On her eighteenth birthday, Barbara, motherless daughter of Christopher Thorne, artist, awakes with anticipation of the joys of the day. She receives a birthday ring from Bruce MacLain, young artist friend of the family, but more than friend to Barbara. Barbara and Bruce go picknicking on the sands at Provincetown. He tells her a story of a gypsy boy, a little gypsy girl whom he loves, and the song of a silver flute. She knows it is her own love tale. Her happiness turns to sorrow when she returns home to learn her father has been drowned. Relatives arrive and take charge of things. Having been almost a mother to the others, Barbara cannot think of their separation, Kit's sensitive nature bruised in Uncle Herbert's household by his rough-and-ready cousins, and Gay spoiled by her association with silly Aunt Lola. Bruce urges immediate marriage, but that would mean separation. Desperate, the four children plot to run away to Barbara's godfather, "Uncle Stephen" Drake, whom they have never seen. Stephen Drake, bachelor, forty years old, still has vivid recollections of the beautiful young matron, Barbara's mother, whom he had loved eighteen years before. He had made up his mind to propose that night to Emily Trent, so that his well-ordered household might have a permanent head.

Natalie played the piano softly at the other end of the rom. Robert King, her husband, big and blond and handsome, lounged against the piano, humming the tune she played, looking over her sleek dark head at Emily and Stephen.

"Nat," he asked, "is Stephen going to marry her?"

"Aunt Edith thinks so."

"Don't you think we should interfere?" Bob continued, his blue eyes crinkling at the corners. "He's slipping fast. Any minute may be too late. Let's yell 'Fire!'"

"Goose!" Her eyes loved him, his shoulders, his eyes, his crisp blond hair. She and Bob were so happy. Bob! She felt his love pouring over her, blotting out every thought not centered in themselves.

"Darling!" she whispered, through light rippling chords.

"Darling!" he answered, bending to touch her hair.

Henry arrived with the cocktails. Emily sipped hers slowly, taking a very long time. Stephen fumed with impatience and then, when she had finished, he was uneasy and urged her to have another.

She shook her head. He saw that her hands were trembling. Dear Emily. Tenderness stirred in his heart. Aunt Edith was showing Professor Trent the curios in the crystal and rosewood cabinet. Natalie and Bob were looking through a pile of music, entirely absorbed in themselves. It was an opportune moment to slip away. Stephen turned to Emily.

"Aunt Edith's orange trees actually bloomed," he said, trying to make his voice sound casual. "Would you like to see them?"

"Very much," Emily said faintly.

He was taking her to the conservatory! Did that mean anything? It meant so much to her. She wanted to be married, to be cared for and secure. She wanted to marry Stephen.

The orange trees stood in painted tubs, small dwarfed trees with glossy green leaves and clusters of wax-like blossoms.

"Lovely!" Emily breathed, hiding her hot face among the moist leaves, smelling the fragrance of the blossoms. Orange blossoms! Surely that was significant.

"Lovely!" she breathed to the carnations, to the small potted rose tree covered with pink-tipped buds. If she might stay here always! Her eyes filled with tears.

"You're crying."

"I'm a goose." She fumbled for her handkerchief, hating herself for crying, wondering what he thought.

"Let's use mine."

He wiped away her tears with a square of fine linen which had a pleasant smell. Everything about him was so exactly right. She wondered how it would feel to have him kiss her, and the color swept into her cheeks.

Stephen saw the bright pink flush. Perhaps, for Emily, he was a real romance. The thought surprised him. It had not occurred to him before. Dear Emily! She looked young and appealing in the dim light of the conservatory. She would make him a charming wife.

"Emily . . ." He drew her to him, felt her trembling in his arms. It seemed absurd to him now that he had ever felt uneasy about asking her to marry him. "Emily, dear . . ."

There was a sound of footsteps, a discreet warning cough. Emily slipped away from his arms. Henry, spare and elderly and tactful, walked toward them.

"I beg your pardon, Mister Stephen," he said, coughing discreetly again. "But there's someone to see you, sir."

"Callers?" Stephen asked, annoyed at the interruption.

"Four children. They asked especially for you."

"I can't imagine—" Stephen's brow was creased in a puzzled frown. "All right, Henry. I'll come."

Henry took himself off.

"Wait for me here," Stephen said to Emily. "I'll return as soon as I can"—he lifted her hand to his lips and added gently—"dear."

He was gone so long! Emily broke off a cluster of orange blossoms. The petals spilled from her fingers, drifted down to the floor.

* * * * * * *

They stood huddled together in the hall, a weary, worn-looking little group, surrounded by shabby luggage.

Who were they? Stephen wondered as he came from the shadows into the light of the hall chandeliers. He was sure he had not seen them before. And yet the older girl looked familiar.

She detached herself from the group and walked to meet him, a weary but gallant figure, in a velveteen jacket and a pleated skirt.

"Are you Uncle Stephen?" she asked, extending politely a small, very grubby hand.

Uncle Stephen! The name pronounced in a voice husky with weariness caused Stephen's heart to stir strangely. The puzzled frown left his brow.

"Yes," he said, taking the small hand which felt cold and very frightened.

"You couldn't be expected to recognize me." She lifted a pale face set with dark anxious eyes. "You haven't seen me since I was a baby being christened."

"Of course I recognize you," Stephen said gently. "I would have known you anywhere. You are my little fillette."

There was a sudden bewildering change in the small heart-shaped face. The weariness vanished, the lines of anxiety smoothed themselves out. The wide dark eyes shone like misty stars. The red lips smiled, a gay smile that woke a sleeping dimple.

"You called me that," she said. "That's why we ran away."

CHAPTER VI

Aunt Edith came into the library as the clock chimed eleven.

"Well, Stephen?" she said.

The "Well" demanded an explanation. Stephen rose from a chair beside the fire.

"Did you enjoy the concert?" he asked, hoping to turn Aunt Edith's mind from the disturbing events of the evening. He was in no mood for explanations.

He Wiped Away Her Tears With a Square of Fine Linen Which Had a Pleasant Smell.

"I can't say that I did. I may be a conceited old woman, but I don't flatter myself to the extent of believing that I was an acceptable substitute for you."

"I'm sorry," Stephen said briefly. He seemed preoccupied.

"It was rude, Stephen," she said. "Emily felt it, I'm sure."

"I'm sorry," he said again. This time the words sounded more sincere. Emily! He had forgotten her entirely. She had no part in the thoughts which had occupied his mind since his unexpected guests had been fed and put to bed. "I think she will understand," he said.

"You're optimistic." Stephen, Aunt Edith thought, had much to learn about women. "Who are these children?" she asked.

"Their name is Thorne. Barbara is my godchild."

"Barbara? The older girl?"

"Yes."

"How old is she?"

"Eighteen."

"Indeed!" Aunt Edith seemed surprised. "You have never mentioned a godchild," she continued, after a pause.

"There has been no occasion."

"There is an occasion now. I try not to pry into your affairs. But, four children! Or rather three children and a young girl. Well, I am only human, Stephen."

"Of course." Stephen smiled. "You are entitled to an explanation."

Very briefly he told her the story of Barbara's christening.

"Odd sort of people," Aunt Edith observed—"asking a stranger to be godfather for their child."

"They were charming," Stephen said gently. "Both of them were artists."

"Oh!" Aunt Edith said, as though that explained the odd request. "One doesn't think of artists having children. Not in quantities," she added.

"They do, I suppose." Stephen spoke of the interval he had spent with them in a village in southern France. Of Barbara's mother he said little. It was no concern of Aunt Edith's if he had loved a slender dark-eyed girl whose name was Barbara Thorne. He could not speak of it lightly. It was a story he never had told.

Roadside Stands Sell Many Foods

Customers Are Attracted by Quality of Articles and Prices.

By Prof. W. C. Hopper, New York State College of Agriculture.—WNU Service.

Almost any sort of farm produce which is used for food can be sold at the wayside market. Fruit is well adapted to roadside selling; vegetables come next; while fruit juices, honey, eggs, poultry, baked goods, flowers, jams, and jellies have all been sold successfully.

City residents like to buy directly from the farmer, which is one reason for the increase in the number of roadside markets. Another reason is that wholesale prices to farmers have been so much lower than retail prices that farmers have made money from direct selling. However, the best way to discourage buyers is to charge unreasonable prices. It is unwise to charge as much as the city retail price, but farmers must receive more than the wholesale price to afford to operate a stand.

Prices should also vary with the grade. It is always desirable to separate produce into different grades, for there are buyers for each quality. Prices may be set according to the prices in the nearest city, with due allowance for distance buyers must come, the grade of produce, and the size of the container. The most profitable roadside market business comes from repeat customers, who also are willing to recommend the stand, the produce, and the proprietor to their friends and neighbors.

Tree Windbreak Saves Soil Blowing Damage

Severe damage to farm lands by strong winds that sweep great quantities of valuable top soil from fields may be materially reduced by planting windbreaks of trees, or by early spring or fall listing.

Planting cross windbreaks of one or two rows of trees at quarter-mile intervals at right angles to prevailing winds is suggested by Fred R. Johnson, regional forest inspector of the forest service in Denver, and State Forester W. J. Morrill at the Colorado agricultural college.

Such windbreaks would be in addition to shelterbelts around farm buildings. Cross windbreaks at quarter-mile intervals would furnish protection against soil blowing for a distance of about ten times the height of the trees on the windward side and about 15 to 20 times on the leeward side, investigations have shown. As the trees grow taller they would provide protection for gradually increasing areas.

Buckwheat Mids for Pigs

In studies looking for a good protein supplement for pigs, Longwell of the West Virginia station found that buckwheat middlings have proved equal to or slightly better than linseed meal and cottonseed meal. Protein supplement mixtures consisting of two parts tankage, one part linseed meal, and one part alfalfa meal; the same proportions of tankage, cottonseed meal, and alfalfa meal; and tankage, buckwheat middlings, and alfalfa meal, have all given excellent results when fed as supplements to corn. Equally good results followed the replacing of tankage with fishmeal. But those mixtures containing buckwheat middlings resulted in more rapid gains and required less feed to produce gains.

Dutch Hog Control

An example of an attempt to control production by law is reported from Holland. An emergency hog act was passed last July. Its purpose is to maintain domestic hog prices at a level that will represent at least the cost of production. The act is now in effect. A tax is levied on practically all hogs slaughtered in the Netherlands, to support a stabilization fund. Hogs killed for consumption by the owner may likewise be taxed.

An import duty is imposed on all hogs and hog products brought into the country. An organization engaged in the hog industry has exclusive monopoly on hog exports, which include one-third or more of the total production of pork.—Indiana Farmers' Guide.

Post Timber

Many farmers in the Ohio valley, looking for supplies of fence posts at less cost, are asking the state agricultural colleges about the best species of tres to plant, according to the United States forest service. Farmers are showing unusual interest in preserving and developing farm woodlands to maintain supplies of lumber, fuel, and posts for farm use, and in this way keeping down the cash outlay for these materials. Among the species recommended for planting for post timber are black locust, mulberry, Osage orange, and red cedar.

News of North Dakota

EVENTS OF THE WEEK THROUGHOUT THE STATE TOLD IN BRIEF FORM

Harvey.—Aloys Volk has taken over the interests of Jos. Lesmeister in the Lesmeister & Volk Electric Radio shop and is now sole owner.

Mayville.—Rural mail carriers from the several postoffices of the county with their families enjoyed their annual picnic in the Mayville park.

Williston.—North Dakota will have a four days' open season for deer hunting, Chief State Game Warden Fred J. Argast announced in Williston.

Rolla.—In one of the best natural dairying communities in North Dakota, the Turtle Mountain Dairy Herd Improvement association has been organized.

Kenmare.—Nels E. Naas, of this city has been awarded a contract to transport U. S. mail between Minot and Portal, according to notice received from Washington.

Cogswell.—The Dickey County Wool Growers association consigned 35,000 pounds of wool to the national pool at Boston. The wool will be unloaded and graded at Hankinson.

Bismarck.—Under a new law, the weights and measures department has been transferred from the regulatory department to the state railroad commission. Commissioner Ben C. Larkin will be in charge.

Minot.—A federal grand jury will determine prosecution of Lee Dillage and Omar Loveland, Lignite community residents, charged with smuggling wool into the United States from Canada.

Fargo.—H. H. Perry, Ellendale, Democratic appointee as internal revenue collector for the Fargo district, assumed office, succeeding Gunder Olson, who retires after 12 years service.

Hillsboro.—Believed to have started from lightning, Our Savior's Lutheran church was badly damaged by smoke and water in an attempt to extinguish a fire which was discovered in the roof.

Leal.—During a severe electrical storm Monday evening, the large three-story barn on the farm belonging to Mrs. Agnes Jones, west of Leal, was struck by lightning and burned.

Tower City.—The elevator owned by the Gross Grain company of Oakes, for the past 35 years and managed for the past 21 years by F. C. Bairey of Tower City, was totally destroyed by fire of unknown origin.

Sheldon.—Work of tearing down the Farmers elevator, the biggest of Heaton's four elevators, began this week. The lumber will be hauled overland to Embden, where the elevator will be rebuilt.

Minto.—A neat and natty deer paid a short visit to this city Monday forenoon. The little lady came from the north, jumped the ditch of 81 highway at the turn of Second street, meandered south about a block or so, then turned eastward.

Finley.—Beaver Lake was the unanimous choice of names for Steele county's newly proposed lake to be formed by means of a dam, 8 miles northeast of Finley, at the meeting of lake committees, held in the Fire hall at Finley.

Cando.—Governor William Langer and Judge A. M. Burr of the North Dakota supreme court were the principal United States speakers at the fourth International Peace Garden, 13 miles north of Dunseith, on Wednesday, July 19.

Mayville.—Hit with a baseball thrown from deep left field, as he played around home plate at the local diamond Monday evening, Duane Lura, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ingvold Lura, is a patient in a Grand Forks hospital suffering from a broken cheek bone.

Carrington.—The rebuilding of six miles of state highway No. 7 running east from Carrington at a cost of $42,000, has been allotted to Foster county as its share of the 3 million dollars worth of road work given to North Dakota this year by the federal government.

Wahpeton.—Jack Keenan, bookbinder at the Globe-Gazette Printing company, suffered concussion of the brain and other injuries when his car hit a soft shoulder on the highway near Kent, Minn., went into the ditch and overturned. Keenan is in serious condition in a Breckenridge hospital.

Grand Forks.—If North Dakota hits hard and fast, puts its case clearly, comprehensively and energetically and with evidence of a real and united desire to see the work done, it will get the $45,000,000 Missouri river diversion project built entirely with federal funds under the $3,500,000,000 public works bill, in the opinion of F. W. McLean, Grand Forks, who recently spent some time in Washington supporting the plan.

Harvey.—Mrs. Carl Frech, 63, living southeast of Harvey, was found dead late Tuesday, hanging by a rope from a tree near her home.

Minot.—Arthur Zimmerman, Minot, serving a 20-year sentence in the state penitentiary as a result of his conviction by a jury on a charge of participation in the "torture robbery" of a father and son near Karlsruhe in October, 1929, is innocent of the crime for which he was convicted, if a confession given by Terry Jerome, former Minoter, to McHenry county authorities is true.

Current Wit and Humor

A MEATIER MEAL

He was a thin, ragged urchin and he had crawled in under the circus tent. The manager nabbed him. "Do you know what we do with boys like you?" he thundered. "We make meat of them for the lions. Here, Carl, throw him into the lions' cage."

The youngster looked up at him and said, "Oh, mister, let me see the show for nothing and I'll have the fattest boys in the place crawling under the tent tomorrow."—Boston Evening Transcript.

Right and Wrong

"Now Arthur," said the primary teacher, "if I put 11 plums in your hand and you eat four, how many will you have?"

"Eleven," said Arthur.

"But can that be true if you've eaten four? Think again."

"I'd have 11," said the boy, "four inside and seven outside."

Equal to Emergency

Captain—Now, suppose you are on duty one dark night. Suddenly a person appears from behind and wraps two arms round you so that you can't use your rifle. What would you say?

Cadet—Let go, honey.—Edmonton Bulletin.

Bid Below Value

Young Man—Tommy, tell me what your sister thinks of me and I'll give you a nickel.

Tommy—Aint a good laugh worth more than that?—Brooklyn Daily Eagle.

Thanks

"An author's life must be a thankless task."

"Not at all. Every time I send a manuscript to a publisher he sends it back with many thanks."

PROOF

The lecturer was getting warmed up to his subject.

"And, friends," he said impressively, "I tell you once again, medicine never did anyone any good."

"That's not true," came a voice from the back of the hall.

"Not true?" echoed the lecturer. "What do you mean?"

"Medicine did my family a lot of good," went on the heckler.

"But, my friend," said the lecturer, "you have no way of proving that statement."

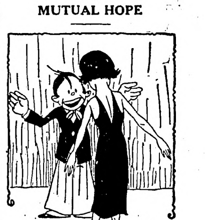
"Oh, yes, I have," replied the heckler, "my father owns a drug store."

Practically Minded

"Daughter," said her mother, "has that young man you are going with ever mentioned the subject of marriage?"

"Oh, yes!" yawned daughter, "but I told him dad was so hard up he even couldn't afford tires for the car, let alone a husband for me."

MUTUAL HOPE



Jill—I trust, Jack, that our marriage will not be against your father's will.

Jack—I hope not, too. It would be mighty hard for us if he should change it.

Those Americans

"How long has America been discovered?"

"About 400 years."

"There you are, and yet I read in a paper about 1,000-year-old giant trees of America—you can't believe anything these Americans say."—Leipzig Der Lustige Sachse.

No Danger

Back-seat Driver—John, be careful. There's a car behind you.

John (patiently)—But, my dear, I've never hit anything behind me yet.

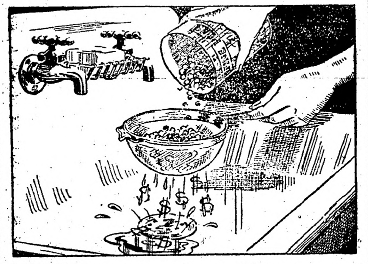
Don't Throw Away Food



THIS is no time to throw away good food, and yet a few people unfortunately continue to do so through ignorance. We refer to the people who pour the liquid off canned vegetables. On this subject E. V. McCollum, Ph.D., Sc.D., of Johns Hopkins University, wrote in an article in McCall's Magazine:

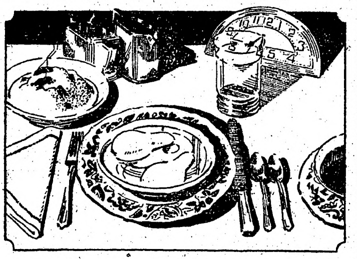
"Vegetables are canned in a liquor which is largely water but which contains considerable amounts of vitamins and mineral salts extracted from the food. If this is thrown away, considerable food value will be lost. Avoid these losses by emptying the contents of the can into a large saucepan and cooking until the desired amount of liquid has evaporated."

Save the Liquid

Or, as an alternative, it can be saved to use in soups, as pointed out in a chapter on "The Comparative Values of Important Foods or Food Groups" in the book entitled "Your Weight and How to Control It", edited by Dr. Morris Fishbein of the American Medical Association. This chapter, written by Flora Rose, New York State College of Home Economies, Cornell University, and Mary Henry, Professor of Nutrition, in the same institution, states:

"When vegetables are cooked, there is a loss of ash and vitamins in any unused cooking water. This fact emphasizes the desirability of saving for soup water in which vegetables are cooked. Also heat and oxidation both tend to destroy at least vitamin C in the cooking process. If oxygen is excluded, as in cold packed canned vegetables, the loss of vitamin C is reduced."

The same care should be taken to keep food left in an open can cool and covered as if it had been transferred to a dish.*



Better Breakfasts

LAZY days are over. Long days on the beaches speculating on sea-gulls and sea-nymphs; long days at the steering wheel watching the road and the "roll" fly away. September means the beginning of busy days. And who cares?

If you are all tuned up to perfect condition to meet these busy days, stay that way. Plan plenty of healthful outdoor exercise and a diet which provides so much energy that you prefer to be busy. May we suggest a better breakfast to begin a better day and keep things rolling toward better times?

Here is a menu which is different and delicious and at the same time provides energy. Canned pears may be used, if you prefer.

Baked Fresh Pears
Cream of Wheat with Dates
Baked Beans with Frizzled Ham
Toast Coffee

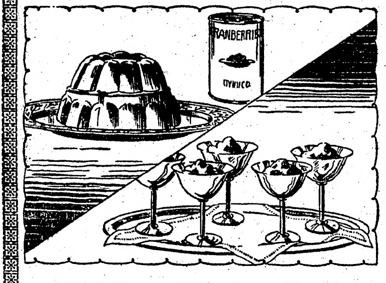
Cream of Wheat with Dates: Cook cream of wheat (or other cereal if you prefer) in a double boiler until it is tender and fluffy. Chop canned dates into fairly small pieces and place a spoonful on top of each serving of the hot cereal before adding cream and sugar.

Baked Beans with Frizzled Ham: Turn baked beans (preferably without tomato sauce) from a No. 2 can into a baking dish, and pour over the chili sauce. Heat in a hot oven. Meanwhile frizzle six thin slices of cold boiled ham in a hot skillet; then lay on top of the beans and serve at once.*



Give Cranberries Room

WHY crowd all your cranberries into your Christmas and Thanksgiving dinners? They are put up in cans and can be purchased just as easily at any other season of the year. The product is tasty and has sufficient tartness to add a lot of zest to any meal. So make more room for cranberries on your menu. Here is a tempting recipe to help you along:

Cranberry Jelly Salad: Heat the contents of one can of cranberry jelly with one-half cup of orange juice and two tablespoons of lemon juice. Soak four teaspoons of gelatin in two tablespoons cold water, and then dissolve it in the hot, melted cranberry. Strain and cool. Add one-fourth cup of diced celery and one-fourth cup of chopped nuts when beginning to stiffen. Pour into molds wet with cold water, and chill. Turn onto lettuce leaves and serve with celery hearts stuffed with cream cheese. This recipe is sufficient for eight.

Frozen Cranberries Are Fine

To prepare them, boil one-fourth cup sugar and one-fourth cup water to a syrup, and dissolve in it one-half tablespoon gelatin which has been soaked in two tablespoons of cold water. Add two tablespoons lemon juice, one-half cup orange juice, and the contents of a No. 2 can of cranberry sauce, well mashed or pressed through a sieve. When cool, freeze to a mush, add one well-beaten egg white, and continue freezing. Pack when done for several hours in ice and salt. Serves eight.*

August Wilhelm Nass

Funeral services were conducted here last Thusday afternoon for August Nass, one of the early pioneers of this community.

August Wilhelm Nass was born at Skipvedt, Norway, in 1868. At the age of 16 he came to America, working for 5 years in Ottertail county. At the age of 21 years he moved to Marshall county where he took a homestead on which he lived until the time of his death on Sunday, July 23, 1933.

Mr. Nass took an active part in affairs of the community. He was treasurer of the Holt Mission church for many years and clerk of school district 61 for 25 years besides being a member of the local telephone board.

On June 24, 1898 he was married to Annette Berg and to this union ten children were born.

After being taken suddenly ill on Sunday at 11:30, Mr. Nass realized the end was near and said, "this is the last", to his children, and called to the Lord for help. He was a friendly neighbor and had made many friends who will miss his departure as well as his immediate family whom feel the loss very heavily.

Those left to mourn his loss are: his wife and ten children. Mrs. Victor Magnuson of Spruce Valley, John Ness of Newfolden, Mabel and Alice of Sioux Falls, S. Dak., Edwin and Bertil of East Valley, Clarence, Reuben, Dora and Harold at home and, three grandchildren, Dorothy Magnuson and, Earl and Harold Ness.

Out of town friends and relatives whom attended the funeral were: Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Olson, Willie Thorstad and Myrtle Ness of Battle Lake, Minn., Mrs. Martin Glende and Mr. Maskers of Sioux Falls, S. D.

Canning Demonstration Held

The canning demonstration given by Eleanor Larson and Gertrude Voth last Saturday afternoon in the church basement was attended by a small but interested audience.

The subject of the demonstration was vegetable canning. Mr. Harrison, the county club leader, was present and told something about what people are doing in club work. He also awarded certificates of leadership to Mrs. J. P. Augustine, Mr. John Benitt, and Mr. Geo. Fricker.

After the program lunch was served by the girls in the bread and cake baking projects.

The girls went to Crookston on Wednesday to give this demonstration. This is the district contest and they represent Marshall county.

Why Do Cream Tests Vary?

The following are some of the principal causes for variation in the test of cream:

7. Skimming Sour Milk. Don't permit milk to get sour, but skim while fresh.

8. Separator That Vibrates, or Is Out of Balance. Keep the separator level and properly balanced. A good foundation will help keep the separator in good running order.

Skim cream testing close to thirty-five per cent, take good care of it and deliver it regularly to the creamery. This will help to increase the size of your cream check.

Wheat Acreage Adjustment Gets Under Way in County

Plans for bringing Marshall county wheat growers into the national program for wheat acreage adjustment took a swift step forward this week with the appointment of an organization committee of seven of the county's leading citizens, including four of its principal wheat growers. This committee will begin work at once in cooperation with the Emergency Agriculturtl Assistant, Jay H. Seymour, to explain the allotment plan to local farmers thruout the county and to effect a permanent county wheat production control association thru which growers will sign contracts with the federal Agricultural Adjustment Administration, agreeing to reduce acreage and receiving benefit payments made under the allotment plan.

Following are the names of the organization committee members, who have been appointed by Dean W. C. Coffey of the University Department of Agriculture, and acting director of the Minnesota agricultural extension service:

Green, F. A.	Stephen
Pagnac, J. J.	Stephen
Knapp, Bert	Warren
Johnson, Carl O.	Warren
Bergmon, Ole	Warren
Gratzke, John	Strandquist
Loeslie, Charles	Radium

One of the first duties of the new committee will be to make an intensive study of the government's new wheat adjustment program, especially as it relates to the wheat growers of this county. The committee will meet within the next few days and elect a chairman.

The temporary campaign committee will have completed its work when every township has been organized and when each has elected one of its growers to the board of directors of the county wheat production control association. This board of directors will then carry on the work up to the time when the actual contract signers reorganize on a permanent basis.

Butter Quality Showing Hot Weather Defects

During the past month the most common defect has been acidy and heated cream flavors. The extremely hot weather no doubt resulted in much of the cream arriving at the creameries in heated condition. A can of cream exposed to the hot sun on a day when the prevailing temperature is hovering around the 100 degree mark will not require long before the metal can will become extremely hot. The cream coming in contact with this hot metal will produce a film of melted butterfat on the inside of the can. Even though the cream in the center of the can may remain fairly cool, the heated cream next the outside of the can will develop a flat, greasy, heated taste. A can of heated cream when added to the vat will have the effect of producing heated, greasy, or oily flavors in the finished butter. When a considerable amount of such cream is added to a vat of sweet cream it will produce such a marked heated greasy flavor in the finished butter that it will entirely cover up the sweet cream flavor and lower the score.

Patrons should be advised regarding the necessity for covering cream cans with wet gunny sacks or blankets while taking the cream to the creamery. The evaporation of the water from the wet blankets or gunny sacks will keep the cream cool. This method is used very generally in certain sections where milk and cream is trucked and with very good results, the milk and cream arriving at the creamery even on the hottest days of the summer in satisfactory condition.

G. N. Cuts Passanger Rates

Rail travel at two cents a mile became a reality over the entire Great Northern system on Aug. 1, according to word received by Clarence Larson, depot agent here. The new rate applies in coaches and sleeping cars.

The former rate was 3.6 cents per mile.

Great cuts in the freight-rates on certain classes of goods were also made. In certain cases, the rate was cut almost in half.

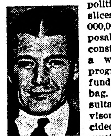
Budget Director Douglas Passing on Public Works Projects; Industrial Codes, More Jobs and Higher Wages; Prohibition Repeal Wins Again.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR ICKES, in his capacity as public works administrator, has been so beset by the demands of bureaus and politicians for big slices of the $3,300,000,000 at his disposal that he was constrained to issue a warning that the program with its huge fund was not a grab bag. Then, after consultation with his advisory board, he decided that all projects must be sent to the budget bureau for radical paring down. Thus Lewis W. Douglas, director of the budget, emerged as the man relied on to cut out the unwise, unessential and graft-tainted schemes and to submit for board action only the worthy projects. Politicians had been slipping into the lists proposals for construction of post offices, but Secretary Ickes had forbidden their inclusion and in this was supported by President Roosevelt. Ickes insists that each project provide a maximum of work, that it perform a necessary social service, and that it not be a recurring item belonging properly in an annual appropriation bill.



Lewis W. Douglas

FIVE MILLION business men of the United States are asked by President Roosevelt to accept voluntarily what is called the "President's Reemployment Agreement" which is designed to restore employment and raise purchasing power through increased wages. Every business and trade and every conceivable type of worker are included in this pact, which is the master code that Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, national recovery administrator, and his aids worked out.

The employers are asked to adopt for five months, beginning August 1, minimum wage and maximum hour scales for their workers, to agree not to levy "profiteering prices," to abolish child labor, and to obey various other regulations.

The hours of work fixed are 40 per week for the so-called white collar employees and 35 hours for industrial workers.

The wages proposed are 40 cents an hour for industrial workers, or $14 per week, except in cases where employees in the same class of work were paid less than that rate on July 15, 1929, and then the 1929 rate is to be applied, but in no case shall it be less than 30 cents an hour.

For the white collar workers, the wage scales are fixed according to populations of the cities in which they work. In cities of more than 500,000 population, the minimum rate is set at $15 per week; in cities between 250,000 and 500,000, the rate is $14.50; between 2,500 and 250,000 at $14. In towns of less than 2,500 population, all wages shall be increased by 20 per cent, except that the maximum required shall not be more than $12 per week.

If regular industry codes are signed before or during the five month period, they will supersede the emergency ones. Employers are given until September 1 to come under the plan, and if they have not signed at that date, the President made known that he will exert the powers he possesses under the national industrial recovery act and compel industries to accept codes which he will lay down arbitrarily.

ADMINISTRATOR JOHNSON, according to Washington correspondents, is constructing a big propaganda agency on behalf of the industrial control administration. He has called on such veterans in the game as Charles Michelson, publicity man for the Democratic national committee; Frank R. Wilson, Charles F. Horner and others who were leaders in the Liberty loan drives; Bruce McNamee, William V. Lawson, Heber Blankenhorn, and various other skilled publicity men. Primarily, it was indicated, the new organization is intended to win favor for the proposed "master" code mentioned above.

DEPARTMENT of Labor surveys, reported by Secretary Frances Perkins, show that during June 400,000 workers returned to jobs in factories of the United States, and 100,000 others found work in nonmanufacturing industries and in agriculture. Railroads and other industries not included in the surveys, said Secretary Perkins, showed a "significant increase" in employment.

Gains of 7 per cent in factory employment and 10.8 per cent in factory pay rolls made June the third consecutive month in which both employment and earnings have increased.

Secretary Perkins accompanied the report, however, with a warning against overoptimism and speculative production. A gain in a month normally marked by a seasonal decline was "heartening," she declared, but she pointed to the long climb still ahead before the country can regain the 1926 level taken as the base by the bureau in figuring its employment and pay roll indices.

SENSATIONAL breaks in the prices of all grains, accompanied by similar swift declines in the prices of stocks, led to action by the big grain exchanges. The Chicago Board of Trade stopped future trading for at least a day and issued this rule:

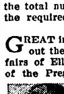
"Effective until further notice, there shall be no trading during any day at prices more than 8 cents above or below the average closing price of the preceding business day in wheat or rye, or 5 cents in corn, or 4 cents in oats."

Like action was taken by other boards of trade, all of them curbing trading in privileges.

TWO states, in the past regarded as being dry as the proverbial bone, and the first in the "solid south" to vote on the question of ratifying the prohibition repeal amendment, were won quite easily by the wets. Alabama went on record as favoring repeal by a vote of nearly two to one, and Arkansas voted about three to one for repeal. Then came Tennessee, and though returns from the mountain regions were slow, the repealists were assured of another victory. Oregon followed, and her vote, in support of repeal, meant that twenty states were in that column, with none yet opposing.

Postmaster General Farley, who was interesting himself especially in the votes in southern states, said he was convinced that the Eighteenth amendment would be out of the Constitution before Christmas, and from the way things are going he may well be right. Although only thirty-five states have either voted or arranged to vote on repeal by November 7, action is pending in several others which may bring the total number voting to more than the required thirty-six.

GREAT interest was shown throughout the country in the marital affairs of Elliott Roosevelt, second son of the President. The young man's wife, Mrs. Elizabeth Donner Roosevelt, obtained a divorce from him at Minden, Nev., on a cross bill charging mental cruelty which was uncontested, and he immediately took an airplane to Chicago where he met Miss Ruth Googins of Fort Worth, Texas, and her mother. Rumors that Elliott and Ruth were soon to be married were only halfheartedly denied. To the Chicago reporters Mr. Roosevelt said he was there to meet his sister, Mrs. Curtis Dall, and to visit the Century of Progress exposition.



Elliott Roosevelt

"I'm not going to spend any time answering anything personal," he warned. "If I'm asked, 'Is it so?' I'll say nothing until I get ready to announce it. I'll certainly let all of you know if I ever decide to marry again."

Miss Googins first met the President's son at Fort Worth in March while he was a guest of the Southwestern exposition.

GEN. ITALO BALBO and his 95 companions on the mass flight from Italy to Chicago left the World's fair city after several days of continuous entertainment that was limited only by the endurance of the aviators. They flew directly to New York and after a rest were conveyed in army planes to Washington to pay their respects to President Roosevelt. Balbo's plans called for return to Italy by way of Newfoundland, going to either Ireland or the Azores, depending on the weather.

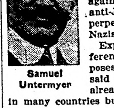
Italy and Premier Mussolini may well be proud of this exploit of their flyers, and all must be highly gratified by the honors heaped on Balbo.

THERE was mourning in America and Lithuania when it was learned that Capt. Stephen Darius and Stanley Girenas of Chicago had crashed and perished in eastern Germany on their flight to Kaunas, the Lithuanian capital. The bodies were found in a forest and were taken to Kaunas, where the government gave them a state burial.

AS THE rather futile world economic conference in London drew toward its close it was announced that a subcommittee had adopted part of Senator Key Pittman's resolution for the rehabilitation of silver, agreeing upon increased use of the metal in subsidiary coinage. The questions of regulating the world output of silver and of its use as a part of the Central bank's metal coverage were postponed. Senator Pittman said he was quite satisfied.

"What it means," he said, "is this: All governments agree to cease debasement or melting of silver coins, except India and Spain, and they agree to limit the amount they will sell. We shall get back to where silver was before the World war."

REPRESENTATIVES of about thirty of the principal countries met in Amsterdam, Holland, at the call of Samuel Untermyer, New York attorney, for the purpose of extending the boycott against German goods and of appealing to the League of Nations against the alleged anti-Jewish atrocities perpetrated by the Nazis in Germany.



Samuel Untermyer

Explaining the conference and its purposes, Mr. Untermyer said that a boycott already was started in many countries but that its effects had been cushioned by a decision to use up German stocks already on hand. With exhaustion of these stocks, he said, German manufacturers will begin to feel the full force of worldwide sentiment against repression of the Jews.

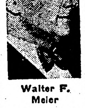
The appeal to the League of Nations probably will be based on two counts—violation of the labor clauses of the treaty of Versailles in excluding Jews from German labor unions and persecution of the Jews as a minority people.

Untermyer said he was working in close collaboration with the British Jewish committee headed by Lord Melchett.

CHANCELLOR HITLER in his efforts to speed up industrial recovery in Germany has created an organization known as the general council for industry, which is to assist the government with its advice and practical experience in solving the unemployment problem. Among the industrial leaders who consented to serve on this council are: Dr. Otto Fischer, president of the Central Association of German Bankers; Dr. Albert Voegler, director general of the United Steel Trust; Dr. Fritz Thyssen, Rhineland coal and iron producer; Karl Friedrich von Siemens, head of the electrical company which bears his name; Baron Kurt von Schroeder, president of the German Chamber of Commerce and a noted banker of Cologne; Vincent Krogmann, mayor of Hamburg and one of the German delegates to the economic conference at London; Dr. Krupp von Bohlen und Halbach, head of the Krupp firm, and Dr. Robert Ley.

The problem for the Germans is acute, for the unemployed there number about five million men, and German exports for the first six months of the year showed an alarming decrease. The government is promulgating new laws designed to help business men who give increased employment. Citizens who give contracts for repairs and improvements to their buildings will be entitled to a 10 per cent reduction in their income and corporation taxes if the increased bill for wages equals the cost of the materials. Newly-formed business undertakings will go tax-free if they deal in new manufacturing processes or bring to the market original products, provided that no competition is given to existing firms.

MEMBERS of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, meeting in convention in Milwaukee, received a message of good will from President Roosevelt, and elected Walter F. Meier of Seattle their grand exalted ruler. Mr. Meier is a graduate of the University of Nebraska, a former corporation counsel of Seattle, and is the author of a book called "The Heart of Elkdom." Gov. David Scholtz of Florida put him in nomination, and was himself elected grand esteemed leading knight. Judge James Fitzgerald of Omaha was chosen grand esteemed loyal knight; Leland O'Callaghan of Louisville, grand tiler, and E. L. Safford of Santa Fe, grand inner guard.



Walter F. Meier

As the last act of his regime, before yielding place to the new grand exalted ruler, Floyd E. Thompson of Moline, Ill., named Circuit Judge Clayton F. Van Pelt of Fond du Lac, Wis., to a five year term in the grand forum of the national lodge, the supreme court of the order.

GILBERT N. HAUGEN, who represented Iowa in congress continuously for 34 years and was retired by the Democratic landslide last fall, died at his home in Northwood after an illness of several months. He was born of Norwegian parentage in Wisconsin 74 years ago. Always prominent as an advocate of the farmer, Mr. Haugen in late years was chairman of the house committee on agriculture and had much to do with formulating all farm legislation up to the advent of the Roosevelt administration.

IF THE orders of the Third Internationale are obeyed there will be a lot of "red" disturbance on August 1, which Moscow will celebrate as anti-war day. Communist agitators recently arrested in Riga, Tallin and Helsingfors possessed copies of a general letter of instructions addressed to Communist parties abroad from the executive committee of the comintern. The letter ordered a one day strike, street demonstrations and general disorders on the day named. Large numbers of Reds serving time in Baltic prisons have been ordered to go on a hunger strike on August 1 and to present demands for prison reforms, one of which is for permission to have radios enabling them to listen to Moscow programs.

G. Bainbridge declared in support of his proposal to the park board that it take immediate steps to get the project approved as part of the national public works program.

Minneapolis—The third annual Twin City Parish Jersey show and breeders' picnic was held at Mission farm, the picturesque etsablishment of the Union City mission at Medicine lake, with 200 breeders of Jersey cattle and operators of Jersey herds on hand from all parts of Minnesota. Many of them brought their families from distances of 200 miles or more for the festival, which takes its name from the gatherings of cattlemen on the Isle of Jersey.

Ulen—Harvesting of rye has begun here. Although there is a light crop the farmers are going after it because of the favorable market. Other crops look fine. Corn and potatoes have bright prospects.

Montevideo—Fifty thousand farms and homes were saved from foreclosures through enactment of Minnesota's mortgage relief and tax moratorium laws by the last state legislature, Attorney General Harry H. Peterson told farmers of Chippewa, Lac qui Parle and Yellow Medicine counties here.

Part Played by Chance in Life

"It is well known that as nothing succeeds like success, so nothing fails like failure," said Mr. Cato Ninetails; "and it seems highly probable that both ability and circumstances have a strong effect on either result. Ernest F. Henderson, in his 'Short History of Germany,' records that Napoleon, speaking of General Mack, who surrendered the Austrian army October 17, 1805, said: 'He is certainly one of the most incapable men in existence; and moreover he has bad luck.'

"Napoleon himself was, of course, capable—and had good luck. That is, such conditions prevailed for about twenty years. Then they changed. It might have been from a loss of capability or a failure of good luck—or both. At any rate, he took no further part in the successful activities of the world. There have been other men who were capable and lucky, which qualities form an irresistible combination. There have been men who were capable, and men who were lucky. Neither kind got quite so far.

"As such an irresistible combination is seldom, if ever, lifelong, the question arises as to whether such a capable man would be so successful if he were not lucky, or such a lucky man would be so successful if he were not capable; and, indeed, a further question as to whether a good deal of what passes for capability isn't mostly or wholly luck. On the other hand, what is enviously called luck may really be capability. The two are such complementary attributes that it is almost impossible to determine which is dominant.

"There are those, of course, who say that there is no such thing as luck—that is, chance good fortune—but certainly there is some inexplicable and uncontrollable force that has a powerful, even a decisive, effect on the affairs of men, and it would seem that luck is as good a name for it as any, whether it concerns the cast of fortune or of the dice; nor is there any doubt that it favors some people more than it does others—such as General Mack. It is our own feeling that when it favors us we are capable, and when it does not we are unlucky. This satisfies our self-esteem, and does no particular harm, but it can hardly be regarded as a disinterested analysis. Undoubtedly a great many of our misfortunes that are blamed on chance are the effect of bungling, and much of our good fortune that is credited to capability is quite as undoubtedly the result of luck.

"Perhaps it is just as well. If we could not pat ourselves on the back without dislocating an arm, life could be a sorry affair. We feel a fine glow of generosity when we pat other people on the back, even when we think that they may be worthy of it, but it is not nearly so satisfying as when we pat ourselves on the back, for then we have no doubt whatever that the commendation is deserved. After all, all of us have some capability and all of us have some luck, but most of us experience great difficulty in keeping them working together."—Indianapolis News.

TRUE TO DUTY'S CALL

White-bearded Father Goutray recently left France to be the first bishop of French Guiana, which includes the dreaded Devil's Island, the penal settlement. The bishop's flock includes about 4,000 murderers and habitual criminals serving long sentences. Only one cargo boat a month stops at Cayenne. Father Goutray, who has spent 25 years as a missionary, says he will live the same hard life as his flock, and he plans to know each man individually.

Shape Growing Normal

"Why am I taking Kruschen Salts? Because I was getting so broad across the hips I was ashamed of myself. I've been taking Kruschen about 2 months and they certainly are bringing my shape down to a normal condition and what is nice about them (to my way of thinking) is they haven't taken flesh from my cheeks but to my surprise my double chin is vanishing for which anyone should be glad." Mrs. P. E. Gardner, Worcester, Mass. (Jan. 3, 1933).

To lose fat and at the same time gain in physical attractiveness and feel spirited and youthful take one half teaspoonful of Kruschen in a glass of hot water before breakfast every morning. A jar that lasts 4 weeks costs but a trifle at any drugstore in the world but be sure and get Kruschen Salts the SAFE way to reduce wide hips, prominent front and double chin and again feel the joy of living—money back if dissatisfied after the first jar.

SYNOPSIS

On her eighteenth birthday, Barbara, motherless daughter of Christopher Thorne, artist, awakes with anticipation of the joys of the day. She receives a birthday ring from Bruce MacLain, young artist friend of the family, but more than friend to Barbara. Barbara and Bruce go picknicking on the sands at Provincetown. He tells her a story of a gypsy boy, a little gypsy girl whom he loves, and the song of a silver flute. She knows it is her own love tale. Her happiness turns to sorrow when she returns home to learn her father has been drowned. Relatives arrive and take charge of things. Having been almost a mother to the others, Barbara cannot think of their separation, Kit's sensitive nature bruised in Uncle Herbert's household by his rough-and-ready cousins, and Gay spoiled by her association with silly Aunt Lola. Bruce urges immediate marriage, but that would mean separation. Desperate, the four children plot to run away to Barbara's godfather, "Uncle Stephen" Drake, whom they have never seen. Stephen Drake, bachelor, forty years old, still has vivid recollections of the beautiful young matron, Barbara's mother, whom he had loved eighteen years before. He had made up his mind to propose that night to Emily Trent, so that his well-ordered household might have a permanent head. But the children arrive and the proposal is interrupted.

—10—

"Have they no relatives?" she asked when he had concluded the sketch with the death of Christopher Thorne.

"Too many relatives," Stephen answered. "That seems to be the trouble. The children don't want to be separated. They were, for a time. —after the mother died. That's why they ran away. The relatives are in Provincetown. The children ran away from them in a truck."

"I never heard of such a thing!" Aunt Edith bristled with indignation. "They must be distracted. Have you wired them? What sort of people are they?"

"Highly respectable, I should say." Again Stephen smiled. "Barbara spoke of an Uncle Herbert. A relative named Uncle Herbert must be a respectable person."

Aunt Edith looked distressed.

"I can't see that it's a matter for making jokes," she said.

"It isn't." The smile vanished. Stephen's expression was grave and troubled again. "I wish I could help them. They're nice youngsters. But what in the world can I do?"

"You can send them back to their relatives," Aund Edith said firmly. "Tomorrow."

"Not tomorrow, Aunt Edith. They're completely exhausted." Stephen remembered Kit's white face, the circles of weariness chalked under Barbara's eyes. "They'll have to rest for a day or two."

A word of protest rose to Aunt Edith's lips. She was having a luncheon tomorrow. Four children would be hard to explain. But then, this was Stephen's house. The protest dissolved slowly and became a sigh.

"You aren't thinking of keeping them?" she asked.

"Of course not!" Stephen's expression was so startled that Aunt Edith was reassured. "What would I do with four children on my hands?"

"I wondered." Aunt Edith collected her wrap and her scarf, her gloves and her jet beaded bag. "You've had a disturbing evening," she said as she rose from the chair. "You'd better go to bed and think no more about them. And in the morning," she added, pausing at door, "you'd better call Emily and apologize. There are some things a woman finds it difficult to be understanding about."

Stephen raked the coals in the grate and returned to the deep soft chair. He had been rude. He hadn't, he remembered now, returned to the conservatory and the love-birds and the blossoming orange trees. He had had dinner with the children in the old schoolroom upstairs. But he thought Emily would understand.

He would send her flowers in the morning. No, he would take them himself, her favorite white lilacs, and he would tell her the things he had meant to say this evening before the children arrived. What had he told her? How far had he gone? It embarrassed him to realize that he couldn't remember distinctly.

The second part of Aunt Edith's advice he found himself entirely unable to follow. They were amusing youngsters. Tired as they were, a little awed by their surroundings, he had enjoyed them tonight.

Barbara. That was her mother's name. The daughter was very like the Barbara he had loved, the same heart-shaped face, the soft brown hair, the dimple that woke when she smiled. Younger, of course, more slightly built, not so vivid, perhaps. But sufficiently like her to arouse disturbing memories of the adventure in southern France.

That, he thought, his eyes on the glowing coals, was the only real adventure he had ever known. He had been restless, for a time, when he returned home. He had planned vacation adventures, a voyage on a tramp schooner, a walking trip through Nova Scotia, a winter jaunt through Italy and Spain. He had accomplished none of them. He had never recaptured the glamor of that spring in southern France.

Even the war had failed him. He had, through no fault of his own, spent the time in Washington behind a quartermaster's desk. Gradually the restlessness had disappeared. He was, on the whole, content with his orderly life. It was years since he had experienced the restlessness which troubled him tonight.

The children were responsible, he thought; Barbara with her soft brown hair and the dimple at the left corner of her mouth. When he had returned them to their relatives, life would go on the usual way.

Barbara, in a rose-colored kimono, her hair tumbled about her face, stood, hesitating, just inside the room.

"Why aren't you asleep?" Stephen asked. "It's after midnight, young lady."

"I know." She pushed back the tumbling hair. "There are so many clocks. I heard them striking all over the house."

"Haven't you slept at all?"

"Not a single wink. I came down to see if you were here. I want to talk, Uncle Stephen."

"But Barbara—"

"Couldn't you call me Babble?" she asked. She was standing beside him now. She lifted her face and he saw a wistful expression in her wide dark eyes. "Father always did." Father and Bruce, she thought. She did not mention Bruce.

"Babble—" He smiled. "Is that better?"

Her face brightened.

"Much better," she said. "Especially the smile."

"What shall we talk about?" he asked when she had curled herself into the chair beside the fire.

"I want to explain." She looked at him gravely. "I haven't very well. I'm not sure that I can."

"Don't try tonight." She looked so young, Stephen thought, curled in the deep soft chair, younger than she had seemed earlier in the evening. It was the kimono, perhaps, and the tumbled soft brown hair.

"I'd rather." Her eyes were troubled, chalked underneath with circles of fatigue. "I couldn't sleep. I wondered what you were thinking."

"I've been thinking," Stephen said gravely, "that it was wrong to run away."

"I suppose it was," she said with a soft little sigh. "But I didn't know what else to do. You see"—the wide dark eyes asked him to understand—"it was because of Kit. He cried so, Uncle Stephen. I'd never seen Kit cry like that."

She told him of Uncle Herbert and the boys who were too healthy and active for Kit.

"Kit isn't very strong. The doctors say he will never entirely outgrow the limp. And he's so brave about it." Her voice was warm with love for Kit. "Kit's so—so splendid, Uncle Stephen."

"I'm sure he is," Stephen said. "I knew at once that Kit was a splendid chap."

Barbara's face lighted sweetly with pleasure. Uncle Stephen seemed to understand. It was easier, now, to tell him about the relatives. She talked eagerly, a torrent of words.

Stephen watched the changing expressions in the small pale face framed in curly soft brown hair. He found himself resenting the mature expression which had settled into her eyes. She had known too much responsibility, too much sadness, he thought. It occurred to him that charming Christopher Thorne might not have been an entirely reliable parent.

"Why did you come to me?" he asked when she had finished and sat looking into the fire. He wished that she wasn't so small and forlorn and appealing.

"Your letter was friendly. I carried it in my blouse," she confessed, suddenly shy.

"You did?" He was touched by her confidence, a little provoked, as well. They were nice youngsters, all of them. But what in the world could he do?

She nodded. A flush that matched the kimono crept into her cheeks.

"You didn't sound like a 'crusty old bachelor,'" she said, her lashes dropping again. "Besides, there was no one else. Father had no close relations. There was only Mother's family. And they just think we're a duty. They don't approve of us at all."

"What did you think I could do?" Stephen had left his chair and was pacing across the hearth.

"I thought, maybe, if you'd write to them about it, they'd let me keep the children in Provincetown." Her voice was eager. Hope had lighted the dark stars in her eyes. "You're a lawyer, aren't you, Uncle Stephen?"

"Yes," he answered, wondering what lay behind the question.

"They have a great respect for lawyers," she said. "Of course they thought it was crazy when I asked them, because they think I'm no older than Gay. But, maybe, if you thought it was a sensible plan—"

"I don't." Stephen was surprised at the vehemence in his voice. "You're too young to assume the responsibility for three children. You're no more than a child yourself."

"I'm not!" The rose flush deepened. The dark eyes flashed. "I'm eighteen. And older than that inside. I've taken care of the children always. At least," she added with a little sob in her voice, "ever since Mother died. Father was a darling. But he didn't know about sore throats and upset stomachs and tantrums and temperatures. I do, Uncle Stephen. I could take care of them. I—" She had meant to say that she was old enough to be engaged to Bruce. But perhaps Uncle Stephen would think that was crazy, too.

Wit and Humor

OBEDIENT

The doctor smilingly entered the room where his female patient was reclining in a chair.

"Ah," he murmured, "I see you are looking very much better today."

"Yes, doctor," the patient said, "I have very carefully followed the instructions on that bottle of medicine you gave me."

"Let me see, now," said the doctor thoughtfully. 'What were they?'

"Keep the bottle well corked," came the reply.—Somerset (Eng.) Standard.

BLOWOUTS are caused by frictional heat generated in the fibers of the cotton cords in a tire. Firestone is the only tire built with every cotton fiber saturated and coated with pure rubber—to prevent destructive heat. This is one of the reasons why Firestone Tires have been on the winning cars in the 500 mile Indianapolis Race for 14 consecutive years—the world's most severe blowout test.

Rubber has gone up 242%, cotton 115%—substantial tire price increases must follow. The Firestone Service Dealer or Service Store in your community will give you an attractive allowance for your old tires on new Firestone High Speed Tires.

OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF THE COUNTY BOARD, MARSHALL COUNTY, MINNESOTA

Annual meeting held July 10th, 1933.

Meeting called to order by the chairman at 10:00 o'clock A. M.

Members present: Lodoen, Bergman, Pagnac, Johnson.

Commissioner A. N. Lodoen offered the following resolution and moved its adoption:

Be it resolved that more than forty per cent of the real estate taxes in this county for the year 1931 were delinquent and unpaid on the date said taxes became delinquent in January, 1933; now, therefore, pursuant to chapter 325 laws 1933, it is determined that it is for the best interests of said county that 60 per cent of the moneys appropriated to this county pursuant to the provisions of Section 5, article 9 of the constitution and chapter 283 laws 1929 for the year 1933 shall be used to pay the interest and principal on bonds or warrants heretofore issued by the county for road and bridge purposes, and it is hereby ordered that the same be so used.

Commissioner O. J. Johnson seconded the resolution and the same being put received an affirmative vote of all members of the county board and was duly carried, and was by the chairman then presiding so declared.

Commissioner O. J. Johnson offered the following resolution in writing and moved its adoption:

That all licenses issued by the county of Marshall to sell at retail non-intoxicating malt liquors, for consumption on the premises, commonly known as "on sale licenses" shall expire on the second Monday in July in each and every year.

Resolved further that the sale of non-intoxicating malt liquors under such license shall not be made between the hours of 12 P. M. and 5 A. M. on week days.

Resolved further that the sale of non-intoxicating malt liquors under such licenses shall not be made on a Sunday.

Resolved further that a copy of this resolution be attached to and made a part of each license so issued.

Resolved, further, that all licenses issued by the county of Marshall to sell at retail non-intoxicating malt liquors, under what is commonly called an "off sale license" shall expire on the second Monday in July in each and every year.

Resolved further that the sale of such non-intoxicating malt liquors under such licenses shall not be made between the hours of 12 P. M. and 5 A. M. on week days.

Resolved, further, that the sale of non-intoxicating malt liquors under such licenses shall not be made on Sunday.

Resolved, further, that a copy of this resolution be attached to and made a part of each license so issued.

Commissioner Lodoen seconded the motion and the same being put was duly carried.

Commissioner A. N. Lodoen introduced the following resolution and moved its adoption:

RESOLUTION

Whereas, the County Auditor has called the attention of this Board to the fact that taxes on more than twenty-five (25) per cent of the lands on the tax lists of the County have been delinquent for three years or more and the County has certain bonds and interest thereon which it will not be possible for the County to meet as the same now matures and the County has certain outstanding warrants and interest thereon which should be retired in an orderly manner in order to place the Revenue Fund on a cash basis.

Now, Therefore, Be it RESOLVED by the County Board of Marshall County, Minnesota, that it is advisable, expedient and necessary to issue and there are hereby authorized and directed to be issued and sold the negotiable coupon bonds of the County for the purpose of funding and refunding the bonds of said County issued on account of Judicial Ditches Nos. 14, 20, 29 and 10, and County Ditches Nos. 25 and 33, the Bridge Bonds dated August 1, 1917, and warrants outstanding against the Revenue Fund. That the County Auditor be and he hereby is authorized and directed to prepare forthwith and keep on file in his office a complete itemized list of all bonds and warrants so to be funded and refunded, specifying the dates, names of payees and holders, if known, purposes, amounts, maturities, rates of interest and dates from which interest remains unpaid, of each item thereof, with other information as to the total indebtedness of the County, classifying said items according to the purposes for which tax levies may be made and indebtedness incurred. Such list shall at all times be open to public inspection, and copies thereof shall be furnished on request, certified if desired, on payment of a fee not exceeding five cents per folio.

Adopted by the County Board July 18th, 1933.

J. J. Pagnac, Chairman.

Attest: Levi G. Johnson,
County Auditor.

Commissioner Ole Bergman seconded the motion to adopt said resolution and upon roll call it was adopted by the following votes: Ayes: 5. Nays: none.

Commissioner A. L. Lodoen introduced the following resolution and moved its adoption:

RESOLUTION

Whereas, this Board did by resolution determine to fund and refund a part of the indebtedness of this County and did direct the Auditor to prepare a complete itemized list of such indebtednes so to be funded or refunded and the Auditor has prepared such itemized list,

Now, Therefore, Be it RESOLVED by the County Board of Marshall County, Minnesota that the list as prepared by the County Auditor and filed in his office be approved and this Board hereby finds and determines that each of the items of indebtedness as set forth in said list to be funded and refunded hereby constitutes a valid and legally binding obligation of said County and that such items and each of them and the interest thereon are such as to be properly funded and refunded by the bonds hereby authorized and are now outstanding and unpaid.

That pursuant to and under the authority conferred by Chapter 351, Laws, Minnesota 1929, as amended, this Board does hereby determine and find that it is advisable, expedient and necessary to issue pursuant to said Chapter 351, Laws, 1929, as amended, the funding and refunding bonds of said County in the aggregate amount of $260,000.00 for the purpose of funding and refunding a part of the indebtedness of said County as set forth in the itemized list prepared and now kept on file in the Auditor's office.

That said bonds shall be 260 in number, numbered from 1 to 260, both inclusive, of the denomination of $1,000 each, to be dated August 1, 1933, to bear interest at the rate of four and one-half per cent per annum, payable semi-annually on the first days of February and August in each year, both principal and interest to be payable at the First National Bank, St. Paul, Minnesota, and shall mature in the order of their numbers, lowest numbers first, as follows:

$5,000.00 August 1, 1936.

$15,000.00 August 1, 1956.
$15,000.00 August 1, 1957.

The County reserving the right to prepay all or any part of said bonds on any interest payment date by giving thirty days' written notice of intention to prepay such bonds or any part thereof to the bank at which such bonds are payable prior to the interest payment date on which such bonds are to be called for payment. The amounts and maturities of outstanding bonds not yet due and not to be refunded by these proceedings has been taken into consideration in determining the maturities of the bonds issued hereunder.

That this Board will meet on the 7th day of August, 1933 at 10 o'clock A. M. at the Commissioners Room in the Court House in the City of Warren, Minnesota to receive and consider bids for the sale of said bonds and may permit the holder of outstanding bonds or other indebtedness herein contemplated to use and apply the same and any interest or other items legally accrued thereon in payment in whole or in part for bonds herein authorized purchased by him, and the County Auditor is hereby authorized and directed to publish a notice thereof once in each week for two successive weeks in the official newspaper of the County.

That this resolution shall be published once in the official newspaper of said County and this Board hereby directs that said bonds be issued, negotiated and sold as by Chapter 351, Laws, 1929, as amended, and this resolution is provided.

Adopted by the County Board July 18th, 1933.

J. J. Pagnac, Chairman.

Attest: Levi G. Johnson,
County Auditor.

Commissioner Ole Bergman seconded the motion to adopt said resolution and upon roll call it was adopted by the following vote: Ayes: 5. Nays: None.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN That the County Board of Marshall County, Minnesota will meet on the 7th day of August, 1933, at 10 o'clock A. M. at the Commissioners Room in the Court House in the City of Warren, Minnesota, to receive and consider bids for the sale of $260,000.00 Funding and Refunding Bonds. Said Bonds to be dated August 1, 1933, are to be in denomination of $1,000 each, are to bear interest at the rate of 4½% per annum, payable semi-annually, are to be payable as to both principal and interest at the First National Bank, St. Paul, Minnesota, and are to mature serially from three to twenty-four years from date, the County reserving the right to prepay any or all of said bonds on any interest payment date. The holder of outstanding bonds or other indebtedness to be funded or refunded hereby will be permitted to use and apply the same and any interest or other items legally accrued thereon in payment in whole or in part for bonds hereby authorized purchased by him.

The right is reserved to reject any or all bids.

Commissioner A. N. Lodoen offered the following resolution and moved its adoption:

Be it resolved that the word "taxes" as used in this resolution shall be held not to include ditch liens or interest upon such ditch liens.

Be it resolved, further, that the provisions of Mason's Minnesota statutes 1927, section 2139, as amended by chapter 115 laws 1929, and chapter 129, laws 1929, as amended by chapter 414 laws 1933, be and the same hereby is modified so as to fix the minimum amount of such taxes, penalties, costs, interest, ditch liens and interest thereon, to be paid, sold or assigned, under said chapter 414, to be as follows, to-wit:

1. That the minimum amount of all ditch liens upon any and all lands in this county to be paid, sold or assigned, shall be not less than the amount of the installment of such ditch liens, plus interest on such ditch liens, as the same appears upon the tax books of said county, plus interest upon the same from the due date thereof to the date the same is paid at the rate of six per cent per annum for all tax years of 1931 and prior years, and for the tax years of 1932 and 1933 it shall be not less than the amount of the installment of such ditch liens, plus interest on such ditch liens, as the same appears on the tax books of said county, plus interest upon the same from the date thereof to the date the same becomes delinquent at the rate of six per cent per annum, and from the date the same becomes delinuent until the date the same is paid, sold or assigned, at the rate of ten per cent per annum.

2. That the minimum amount of all taxes upon any and all parcels of land in this county to be paid, sold or assigned, in the event that there are delinquent taxes or ditch liens upon any such parcel of land for the tax year of 1925 or prior years shall be the rates provided for in said chapter 414, upon each such parcel of land, subject to the provisions of paragraph 1 hereof, and also subject to the following, to-wit: The 1932 tax shall be paid in full with interest, costs and penalties as provided by law in effect immediately prior to the enactment of said chapter 414.

3. In the event that there are no delinquent taxes upon any such parcel of land in this county for the year 1925 or prior years, then the minimum amount for which delinquent taxes for the years 1926, 1927, 1928, 1929, 1930, 1931, 1932 and 1933 may be paid or sold or assigned, shall be as follows, to-wit:

The 1926 tax at 50 per cent of the tax as originally assessed.

The 1927 tax at 60 per cent of the tax as originally assessed.

The 1928 tax at 70 per cent of the tax as originally assessed.

The 1929 tax at 80 per cent of the tax as originally assessed.

The 1930 tax at 90 per cent of the tax as originally assessed.

The 1931 tax at 100 per cent of the tax as originally assessed.

The 1932 and 1933 taxes at 100 per cent of the tax as originally assessed, plus all penalties, costs and interest provided for by law as it existed immediately prior to the enactment of said chapter 414.

Provided, further that the foregoing rates shall be absolute and the provisions of section 3 of said chapter 414 shall not apply.

Commissioner O. J. Johnson seconded the resolution and the same being put received the affirmative vote of all members of the county board, and was duly carried, and was by the chairman then presiding, so declared.

Dated June 29th, 1933.

J. J. PAGNAC,
Chairman.

Attest: Levi G. Johnson,
County Auditor.

Pennsylvania Spud Growers To Make Tour of Minnesota

Starting in the Twin Cities and ending in the Red River Valley potato district, a big potato tour will be conducted in Minnesota, Wednesday and Thursday, August 16 and 17, to show a large group of Pennsylvania potato men what Gopher state growers are doing in the way of commercial potato production. A. G. Tolaas, in charge of potato seed certification work, and R. C. Rose, extension plant pathologist, University Farm, St. Paul, are assisting the Northern Pacific railroad in making the arrangements. All Minnesota growers, dealers and others interested are invited to attend the tour at any of its stops.

The party of Pennsylvania growers is expected to number from 150 to 200 and will be headed by E. L. Nixon, plant pathologist of the Pennsylvania State College extension service. Every other year these growers visit some leading potato section outside their own state. This year they are especially interested in Minnesota's peat land potato district and the famous Red River Valley.

Accordingly, the tour will start in the Twin Cities on Wednesday noon, August 16, headed for Elk River and Princeton, and visiting sand and peat land potato fields in Sherburne and Mille Lacs counties. That evening the tour will head for East Grand Forks, spending Thursday visiting potato fields in western Polk and Clay counties.

Gunder Shei Injured

Gunder Shei was hurt quite seriously late Saturday night when his car turned over into the ditch a mile and a half west of town as he was going home. Johnny and Evelyn Tobiason who were riding with him escaped with only a few bruises and cuts as they were thrown clear off the wreck.

Mr. Shei, who is 65 years old, was less fortunate. He was pinned under the overturned car which crushed several of his ribs and punctured a lung. Being unable to move, he had to lie under the wreck for about half an hour before help came.

Theo. and Olaf Ness had been out to their brothers place came by and helped him out and took him at once to a hospital down at Thief River Falls. His car, an old Ford coupe, was turned inside outside, topside downside, rightside leftside, and folded up in the middle and reduced itself into a nude and forlorn old tireless heap of nothingness.

THE TAX ON FLOUR

A brief explanation in regard to the application of the Federal Processing Tax on Flour may not be amiss here.

On July 8 all flour mills and wholesalers of flour were instructed by the Federal Government to apply a tax on the basis of 30c per bushel of wheat or $1.48 per barrel of flour.

However, all flour delivered or in transit prior to July 8 to dealers for retail purposes should be non-taxable.

The local creamery has been handling flour for their patrons, but on July 8 they did not have a large supply on hand, so consequently the flour purchased during the period from July 8 to August 7, the processing tax had to be added to the price of flour. That accounts for a higher price to wholesalers than to the retail trade. On August 8 the Processing Tax was added to all Flour sold, whether wholesale or retail.

Rev. M. B. Ordahl Will Preach Here on Sunday

Rev. and Mrs. M. B. Ordahl and family of Binford, No. Dak. will arrive here tomorrow and spend a few days here visiting with many of their old friends.

Rev. Ordahl, former pastor of the Nazareth Lutheran church here for eighteen years, will have services here on Sunday morning at 11 o'clock. This will mark the 25th year since Rev. Ordahl first came to Holt to take charge of this call.

When he first came here he had to make his calls on foot or by team and times and conditions were not the very best as, many of the old timers will remember what the community looked like twenty-five years ago.

Rev. Ordahl took an active part in organizing congregations the building of the church here and many other projects that have been outstanding in the upbuilding of Holt and the community in which he served as pastor for eighteen years, before going to Binford, N. Dak., to serve a call about seven years ago.

The congregations here are invited to come to church here on Sunday morning and to take along their dinner and enough to treat an extra friend and, spend the day with Rev. Ordahl and his family in celebrating the twenty-fifth anniversary since he first came here.

Old Capitol in St. Paul Closed Doors Recently

The superintendent of the state capital the other day turned the key in the Wabasha street door of the Old State Capitol in St. Paul, and thus quietly a historic landmark in Minnesota was removed from the hurly-burly of living things. Its going was marked by no ceremony, and one of these days the wrecking crew will move around to that old corner where Minnesota legislators back in the eighties made laws for the North Star State, and these wreckers will tear down the venerable old structure, that has grown obsolete.

Closing of the building will save the state about $800.00 a month. The new State Office building is adequate to take care of all departments, and the recent legislature reduced the budget for maintenance of both old and new state capitols, the Minnesota Taxpayers Association reports. Six men, acting as janitors and workmen, no longer are needed, the superintendent of the capitol states.

The Territorial capitol, built in 1853, was destroyed by fire in 1881, and the Old State Capitol was then erected at a cost of $300,000, which while modest, was considerably above the architect's estimates. Citizens of St. Paul advanced $40,000 to the building fund when the state appropriation had been used up.

Recovery Assists Thousands

More than 120,000 employes in Minnesota, North Dakota and South Dakota already have felt the benefits of the president's national recovery program, E. M. Zwickel, manager of the Minneapolis district office of the department of commence, estimated Sunday.

This estimate was based on the returns from more than 20,000 employers who enlisted under the N. R. A. banner the first week of the drive. It does not include those who have been giving work as the result of the shortening of hours, and increasing of payrolls.

How many new jobs have been created Mr. Zwickel would not say, but it was estimated that the figure ran into the thousands. The old employees affected by the signing of the agreements of their employers included those of firms hiring only one person as well as those hiring hundreds.

STOP!

Stop! Yes, thats what you will have to do now when you come driving to enter the highway here off of any of the streets in town. The state highway department have this week put up new "Stop Signs" in town, a half mile north of town and at the Newfolden road up north and the Warren road at Steiner.

These signs are not put up to help protect "thru" traffic on the main highway but, to protect those who enter the high- at main intesections or the main feeder roads. You have a better chance to see whats coming if you make a "full stop". Let us have these rules obeyed here.

More Attend Public Schools

There were 4,197 students enrolled in Marshall county's public school and each student on an average attended school 139 days during the past school season, according to a report made public recently by Nels M. Engen, county superintendent. Attendance in the Marshall county schools during the past year showed a slight increse as a year ago the total students attendance was 4,135 while the past season there were 4,197 students attending school, said Mr. Engen.

Safetygrams
BY FRED W. BRAUN
©
The Safety Man

According to accident records, Tuesday is the safest day of any week to travel on our highways.

More persons are killed on Sunday than on any other day and Saturday follows with the next largest number of deaths. Drivers hurrying home after a long ride, other drivers holding up traffic and thus causing impatient operators to cut in and out, drivers sightseeing and paying no attention to handling the car—all of these add to the dangers of Sunday driving.

More cars are crowding our highways on week-ends of course, but because of this added congestion we should pay more attention to our driving habits. It can be done by careful handling of the car and paying strict attention to road conditions and watching the road at all times.

Believe it or not and strange as it may seem, the Sabbath is the most unholy of days when it comes to death from automobile accidents.

New Blacksmith Here

Hilmer Erickson, well driller and blacksmith by trade, has rented the blacksmith shop and equipment in the Engen Garage here and is now busy repairing machinery for the farmers of this community. A lot of this kind of work has piled up here since this spring when Dick Nyberg, for many years the village blacksmith, sold out his equipment to a party in Thief River.

You can have it done now at reasonable prices and all work guaranteed says Mr. Erickson.

Miss Sammy Saustad and Harry Ebert of St. Paul spent last week visiting at the former's home here.

Employers Rush to Support of President's Industrial Recovery Program—Grain Exchanges Called to Time by Administrator Peek.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

Pres. Roosevelt

RESPONSE by employers to President Roosevelt's radio appeal for adherence to the blanket industrial code was immediate and flatteringly favorable. Telegrams and letters by the thousands have been received at the White House and Gen. Hugh Johnson's office pledging eager co-operation, promising prompt action or asking for further information. Though there may be many dissidents, carpers and selfish holdouts, it is apparent that the people are determined to give the N. I. R. A. program a fair trial. Industrial leaders in general are willing to shorten work hours and increase wages. There is, however, one section of the "jobs agreement" that arouses considerable distrust. This in effect provides that signers of the blanket code automatically bind themselves to the so-called union labor provisions of the recovery act. Open shop employers naturally do not like this.

The President in his radio address declared that prompt action by employers and co-operation by workers would spell success for the recovery plan, while failure would mean another desperate winter. Signing of the universal agreement, he said, "will start the wheels turning now, and not six months from now," and he added that to await formation and approval of specific codes for separate industries would not be fast enough.

"We are not going through another winter like the last," he said, as a grim determination set into his voice, and he declared that if employers will act together now "we can put people back to work."

"Unless there is united action," the President said, "a few selfish men in each competitive group will pay starvation wages and insist on long hours of work, which forces honorable men to follow suit or close up shop. We have seen the result of action of that kind in the continuing descent into the economic hell of the past four years."

While pleading for voluntary action and promising the creation of "rolls of honor" of signers to be posted in their home towns, Mr. Roosevelt warned his hearers that the law gives him power to deal with those who try "to thwart this great common purpose by seeking selfish advantage."

GENERAL JOHNSON, working as energetically as he did when he administered the World war draft act, was pleased with the general approval of the uniform code designed to establish a 35-hour week and a $14 minimum wage for labor and a 40-hour week and $15 minimum wage for the "white collar" worker.

As in the draft case, he said, numerous questions come up in trying to apply a general rule to industry.

"We'll find undoubtedly that we've made mistakes," he said. "And whenever we find we've made a mistake we'll come out and say so and correct it. We attempted to strike as near a median as we could without upsetting too many applecarts. But we will deal very promptly with specific cases of hardship."

A very important question, covering a large class of workers, was raised as to whether existing contracts are affected by the uniform code. Johnson said they were not. Contracts cannot be broken.

Over the radio General Johnson told the country that no power can stop the recovery program and that five million workers would be re-employed before September 4—Labor day.

TEN regional advisors to the public works administration have been appointed by the President to serve as direct representatives of the administration and obtain from state boards lists of projects for consideration. These men, their headquarters and the states in each region are:

Region 1—Ralph L. Cooper of Belfast, Maine; Boston, Maine, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut.

Region 2—Edward J. Flynn of New York city; New York state.

Region 3—Daniel J. Tobin of Indianapolis; Chicago, Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Ohio and Wisconsin.

Region 4—Frank Murphy of Wheaton, Minn.; Omaha, North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Minnesota, Iowa and Wyoming.

Region 5—Dana Marshall of Portland, Ore.; Portland, Montana, Idaho, Washington and Oregon.

Region 6—Justus S. Wardell of San Francisco; San Francisco, California, Nevada, Utah and Arizona.

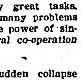
Region 7—Clifford Jones of Spur, Texas; Fort Worth, Texas, Louisiana, and New Mexico.

Region 8—Vincent M. Miles of Fort Smith, Ark.; Kansas City, Colorado, Kansas, Oklahoma, Missouri, and Arkansas.

Region 9—Monroe Johnson of Marion, S. C.; Atlanta, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, South Carolina and Florida.

Region 10—George L. Ratcliffe, Baltimore; Richmond, Tennessee, Kentucky, West Virginia, Maryland, Delaware, Virginia and North Carolina.

GOVERNORS of the states, who were holding their annual conference in California, received from President Roosevelt an invitation to assemble in Washington next winter "in the hope it will mark further solid accomplishments by all of us in the direction of national recovery." Progress is being made, the Chief Executive said, in his message to the governors, in adjusting the balance between mutual state and federal undertakings to determine the joint responsibilities of many great tasks. There are, he added, many problems that extend beyond the power of single states where federal co-operation is required.



George N. Peek

FOLLOWING the sudden collapse of grain prices on the Chicago board of trade and all other grain exchanges, the men directing those concerns were sharply called to time by George N. Peek, farm adjustment administrator. They took temporary action to halt the demoralizing declines—due mainly to the operations of Edward A. Crawford, a plunger—and then hastened to Washington to confer with Mr. Peek. That gentleman told them flatly that the government would take drastic action if the exchanges did not move at once to "put their house in order."

"I do not entertain the view that the present grain trade has any divine right to handle the farmer's products," Mr. Peek asserted. "We are not going to superimpose something on the grain trades until after they have had an opportunity to work out their problem themselves.

"If this is not done promptly, however, I will make no promises. An attempt will be made to meet that situation. Abuses exist in the grain trades. The trades, acting as the marketing medium of the farmers, should correct these abuses. If they do not succeed, then the government will act."

The grain men then offered these four sweeping reforms in trading practices:

Establishment of daily price fluctuation limits of 5 cents on wheat, rye and barley; 4 cents on corn, and 3 cents on oats.

Restriction of the futures holdings of any one trader to a maximum volume, probably between two and five million bushels, to be determined later.

Permanent elimination of trading in indemnities.

Uniform and perhaps higher margin requirements for all exchanges, the minimum requirements to be determined later.

Sen. Steiwer

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT and his close advisers were not in the least discomposed by the slump in prices on the stock exchanges that was simultaneous with the crash in grain prices. Indeed, they rather welcomed it because it was the puncturing of what they considered an unwholesome and unwarranted boom, and the administration gave no sign of intending to protect prices of securities as it did those of grain. However, Senator Steiwer of Oregon, Republican member of the senate banking committee, believes there may be legislation at the next session of congress to minimize the possibilities of such "abnormal shrinkage" of prices as occurred. He offers three propositions for consideration by business leaders and economists before their submission to congress. They are:

"Preparation of a simplified form of corporate returns to be used by all corporations reporting to the Treasury so that the reader could tell approximately the liquidating value of all classes of securities in any corporation at the time the return was made.

"An adequate curb on short selling.

"A prohibition of directors of any corporation increasing, decreasing or suspending the payment of dividends without first securing from the stockholders a 60-day prior authorization."

SECRETARY OF STATE HULL failed to persuade the leaders of the world economic conference in London that a time should be set for determining whether or when the parley should re-assemble; but before adjournment was taken the plenary session set up a permanent committee of twelve designed to keep life in the conference during the indeterminate recess. James M. Cox, head of the monetary section, is the American member of this committee.

THIS is the busy season of the year for aviators, and some of their accomplishments are notable. Wiley Post of Oklahoma, who once flew around the world with Gatty, successfully made the circuit alone, establishing a new time record of 7 days, 18 hours, 49 minutes. He is the first to make the solo round trip and the first to fly around the globe twice.

The Mollisons of England, Captain Charles and his wife, Amy Johnson, flew across the North Atlantic from Wales. They were headed for New York, but weariness and the exhaustion of their fuel supply forced them down at Stratford, Conn. They landed in the dark in a marsh and were slightly injured, and their plane was wrecked.

Gen. Italo Balbo and his men of the Italian squadron, after several days of festivity in New York, left for their homeland, going by way of New Brunswick and Newfoundland. As they soared away over Jamaica bay the commander sent to President Roosevelt and Mayor Kelly of Chicago radio messages of gratitude for their reception in the United States and at the World's fair.

One of the army's big twin motor bombers, carrying Lieut. Carl A. Murray and six other men, lost a wing in midair at Oceanside, Calif., and fell in ruins. The seven men, unable to get free to use their parachutes, were killed.

HUEY LONG, the kingfish senator from Louisiana, has been much vexed of late concerning patronage and flood control matters, feeling that he was being ignored by the administration. The other day he went to the White House in blustering mood, declaring he was going to have his rights. He had not been recognized in two appointments recently in Louisiana. That of controller of customs was given to a follower of Senator Harrison of Mississippi, and an avowed enemy of the Long organization; Paul B. Habans was selected to direct the affairs of the Home Loan bank there.

Well, Huey was affably received by President Roosevelt and Postmaster General Farley, and what the Chief Executive and the astute politician told the rampaging gentleman from the South must have been plenty. The Kingfish emerged from the conference a silent and seemingly squelched man.

FOR some weeks there have been persistent rumors in Washington that Secretary of the Treasury Woodin would soon resign. These were contradicted by officials connected with the administration, but were heard again when it was learned that the streptococcus sore throat from which Mr. Woodin had been suffering had not cleared up and had developed into "quinsy." He has been on vacation, and the President told him by telephone to take a good rest and return when he had regained his strength.

If Mr. Woodin should step out, it is believed his portfolio will be given to Frank C. Walker, treasurer of the Democratic national committee, who not long ago was made executive secretary of the new "super-cabinet." Mr. Walker has long been the devoted friend of Mr. Roosevelt and could have had about any job he wished, but heretofore he has preferred to remain in the background.

MISSOURIANS who are ardent admirers of the President have given him a handsome chestnut saddle horse, born and bred in Audrain county and now named New Deal. The animal was presented to Mr. Roosevelt by Senator Clark and Representatives Cochran, Lozier and Cannon, acting for the donors.

ONE of the old friends of Secretary of State Hull has been given the agreeable post of minister to Finland. He is Edward Albright of Gallatin, Tenn., editor and publisher of the Sumner County News and a former president of the National Editorial association.

ELLIOTT ROOSEVELT, son of the President, did marry Ruth Googins of Fort Worth, Texas, in Burlington, Iowa; and the couple sped down to the Lone Star state by automobile. Thence they went to Los Angeles.

HITLER'S secret German police staged the biggest raid ever seen in that country. Everywhere except in Bavaria the baggage of all travelers was opened and searched for subversive literature. All automobiles were stopped, and traffic was tied up in the cities. Arrests were numerous, but those persons who were found innocent were given passes to proceed and released.

Another of the Nazi chancellor's drastic measures is a new law for the sterilization of the unfit, designed to purify the German race. It is to be applied to persons afflicted with hereditary diseases, hereditary deficiencies such as idiocy, insanity, epilepsy, St. Vitus dance, blindness, deafness, or alcholism, and serious bodily deformities.

SPAIN was thoroughly worked up by the discovery of a great civilian plot to overthrow the existing government, the conspirers including various groups from Carlists to Communists. The civilian uprising was to have been followed by a military dictatorship, according to the police, though the latter were slow in arresting any army officers. Hundreds of civilians were jailed, and seized documents indicate that attempts on the lives of members of the republican government, bombings of ministries, sabotage of communication lines and general strikes were on the program.

SYNOPSIS

On her eighteenth birthday, Barbara, motherless daughter of Christopher Thorne, artist, receives a birthday ring from Bruce MacLain, young artist friend of the family, but more than friend to Barbara. Barbara and Bruce go picnicking. He tells her a story of a gypsy boy, a little gypsy girl whom he loves, and the song of a silver flute. She knows it is her own love tale. Her father is killed in an accident. Relatives arrive and take charge of things. Barbara fears the children's separation and its effects. Desperate, she plans to take her two brothers and sister and run away to her godfather, "Uncle Stephen" Drake. He, a bachelor, forty years old, still has vivid recollections of Barbara's mother, whom he had loved eighteen years before. He had made up his mind to propose that night to Emily Trent, so that his well-ordered household might have a permanent head. But the arrival of the children interrupts the proposal. Barbara tells him why they ran away, and he feels his heart warm to the brave daughter of his early love.

"Barbara. Babbie, dear—"

"You're like the rest of them," she said stormily. "I thought you would understand. Your letter was so friendly and nice. I—" She knew it was useless to talk. Tears caught in a lump in her throat. She buried her head in her arms and under the rose kimono her shoulders trembled with sobs.

"Babbie"—Stephen said—"don't cry so—please." Barbara's daughter! It was strange that she should be here. He wished he might help her, for that other Barbara's sake. But what in the world could he do?

Barbara grew quieter. Presently the curly head lifted again.

"Are you going to send us back?" she asked and the expression that was not childish settled into her eyes.

"I'm afraid I must."

"Yes." She sighed. "I suppose you must." Then, after a moment, "When?"

"Not for a day or two. You're tired." She looked so dreadfully tired, he thought. He wanted to keep her there—not permanently, of course, just until she had rested. "I want you to stay for a day or two. I have wired to Provincetown."

"Thank you." She smiled shakily. "Will your aunt mind very much if we stay?"

"I think not."

"She didn't seem pleased to see us."

"It was a surprise," Stephen said tactfully.

She was silent for a moment, her head drooping against the chair, her eyes watching the fire.

"Uncle Stephen?"

"Yes?"

"You needn't answer if this is an impertinent question. But is the lady who had on the lacy dress a particular friend of yours?"

"Miss Trent? She's a very dear friend."

"Gay thought you were engaged to her. Are you, Uncle Stephen?"

Stephen smiled. He wished someone would answer that question for him. It would help him, tomorrow, with the lilacs.

"I have known her for years," he said.

Barbara did not insist upon a more definite answer. Again she was quiet for a moment. Then, again, her lashes slowly lifted.

"I'm sorry I said what I did." Her wide dark eyes, sleepy, misted with tears, asked him to forgive her. "You aren't like others, Uncle Stephen. You're comfortable," she said drowsily, "and very, very nice."

Stephen had difficulty with his voice. He was obliged to cough once or twice before he was able to say:

"That's a nice compliment. Thank you, Babbie dear."

CHAPTER VII

Kit was ill.

"Exhaustion," the doctor said. "What have you been doing?" he asked, timing Kit's pulse.

Stephen answered for Kit. He told the story briefly. They were friends of his, he said. They had come to make him a visit. The trip from Provincetown in the rain had been, perhaps, a little too much for Kit.

"Hmm—" said Doctor Chase.

"Is he very ill?" Barbara asked anxiously. She would never forgive herself if running away had made Kit very ill.

The doctor reassured her.

"A touch of bronchitis," he said. "Some fever. Nothing to be alarmed about. He needs quiet and rest."

"How long?" Kit croaked from the huge bed.

"Oh, a week or two, I hope," he added, twinkling at Kit, "you haven't any important engagements."

A week or two! Barbara looked at Uncle Stephen. He was frowning a little, his brows drawn down over his pleasant gray eyes. They were going to be a bother to him. They shouldn't have run away. She sat very still in the stuffed damask chair, feeling extremely unhappy.

"Shall I get a nurse?" Stephen asked.

"Well—" Doctor Chase shook some bright colored pills into an envelope. "Well—" he repeated, considering the question.

"Oh, no, Uncle Stephen. Nurses are very expensive. I can take care of Kit. I always have," Barbara said earnestly, "when Kit has been sick like this. I know just exactly what to do."

"Well!" Doctor Chase seemed surprised. "Stand up," he said. "Let me see if you look like a reliable nurse."

Barbara uncurled herself from the chair. She tried to look grown up and tall.

"Will I do?" she asked.

Doctor Chase considered that question.

"How old are you?" he asked.

"Past eighteen."

The doctor raised a quizzical eyebrow.

"I shouldn't have thought it," he said. He looked at Stephen. He looked at Barbara. His eyebrow lifted again. "Very well," he said, snapping the catch on his leather bag. "I'll stop in again this evening."

Doctor Chase took himself off.

"I'm sorry," Kit said when he had gone.

"That's all right," Stephen said gently. The frown vanished. He found it hard to be severe with Kit. The boy had charming manners and he looked so completely done in.

Stephen smiled at Barbara. "Don't worry," he said to Kit. "Get well as fast as you can."

"Are You Going to Send Us Back."

"I will," Kit promised and then, remembering his manners, "it's very kind of you, sir."

"Very kind," echoed Barbara. "Isn't he lovely, Kit?"

Stephen left them together. Extraordinary children, he thought. Too reasonable and grown up for their years and, at the same time, so delightfully childish. The boy was a charming lad. He wondered if anything could be done about the limp. He might as well speak to Doctor Chase now while the children were here.

A clock struck ten as he walked downstairs. Stephen frowned. He was, already, an hour late at the office. His daily routine would be upset. Well, it wouldn't be for long—

Aunt Edith stood in the lower hall. Her expression was resigned.

"What did the doctor say?" she asked.

"A touch of bronchitis."

"Oh, dear!" Aunt Edith sighed and buttoned her lips together.

The sigh irritated Stephen. It was merely bronchitis, after all. She needn't look as though the house was smitten with a plague.

"It can't be helped," he said brusquely. "We can't put a sick child out of the house." But after all, it was difficult for Aunt Edith. She wasn't accustomed to children. "You needn't be inconvenienced," he said more gently. "Barbara will take care of him."

"Is she competent?" Aunt Edith unbuttoned her lips to ask.

"I think so." Stephen smiled. "She isn't an ordinary child."

"No," Aunt Edith agreed. She looked at Stephen questioningly.

"Have you called Emily?" she asked, after a moment of silence.

Stephen hadn't. He had meant to, of course. But this morning Kit had been ill. Women were curious, he thought. Aunt Edith, last evening, had not seemed very happy about his marrying Emily. Now she was Emily's champion. It was difficult to explain.

* * * * * * *

Miss Finch, Stephen's secretary, glanced up from the papers on her desk as Stephen came into his office. Her eyes were two startled questions.

"I'm late this morning," Stephen said, feeling uncomfortably guilty.

"Yes, Mr. Drake." Miss Finch adjusted her paper cuffs. Mr. Drake was invariably punctual. "You could set the clock by him," she told her married sister with whom she lived. And here he was two hours late!

"The man from Thompson and Gallard's was here," she said as Stephen began to open the letters placed in a neat pile on his desk. "He waited an hour." Miss Finch primly consulted a pad. "The appointment was for ten o'clock."

"Good Lord!" Stephen groaned. "That was important."

"Yes," said Miss Finch accusingly.

"Families are distracting."

"I beg your pardon, Mr. Drake?"

"I was thinking aloud." Stephen smiled, a smile half amused and half provoked. Miss Finch had never seen before that curious sort of a smile.

"Oh . . ." she said, wondering what in the world had happened to Mr. Drake.

"Get him on the 'phone for me, please, Miss Finch," Stephen said, "and make an appointment for tomorrow."

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

PATHS MADE IN JUNGLE OF LIFE

Elements of Progress in Each Generation.

The brain's telephone system develops automatically from a minute germ cell in a few years. We do not know how or why and we probably never will, M. E. Tracy writes in the New York World-Telegram.

The mechanical contraptions we have devised seem hopelessly simple when compared to that of the human body, much less the human mind.

With all of our skill we cannot produce an exact model of the brain, let alone a single brain cell, but whenever a baby is born we know that, under favorable conditions, the whole structure will soon appear complete.

Our absolute inability to understand the whys and wherefores of this common phenomenon makes speculation with regard to the universe, creation, or even humanity seem rather futile, especially in the sense that we shall ever be able to control them.

It is our obvious destiny to go on learning, but the purpose should be to get in step with natural law, not to alter it.

Whether one approaches life through the telescope or microscope it appears to be governed by immutable principles.

We have been able to discover a few of those principles in the field of physical force, but only a few. In the field of conscious or psychological force, we are still hopelessly bewildered.

We find it very difficult to separate intelligence from training, the power to think and imagine from the power to imitate.

We do not know what faculty issues orders for the brain's telephone system, or how far it is wise to suppress that faculty through the broadcasting of stereotyped rules and information.

Rules and information are necessary to give each generation a better start in life, but they cannot be profitably employed unless the power to think and imagine is encouraged.

Men have not climbed out of the jungle by merely learning what their fathers knew. If each generation had not added a little something on its own account, the human race would be right where it was at the beginning. The desire to add a little something is, therefore, an all-important factor of human progress. Nothing that we possess, nothing that we have accomplished, nothing that we believe, can be compared to the importance of that desire as a basis of future advancement.

Computes Feeding Costs for Horses

Expense This Year Found to Be One-Sixth That of War Time Rate.

By D. J. Kays, Professor of Animal Husbandry, Ohio State University.
WNU Service.

Cost of feeding a work horse today is just one-fifth as much as it was in 1918, which explains the demand for horses and harness at farm auction sales. Feed costs make up 72 per cent of the total cost of keeping a work horse.

In Illinois, where feed prices are even less than in Ohio, the cost is one-sixth of the war-time rate.

Feed for a horse that works 120 days a year amounts to about 3,000 pounds of grain, 5,000 pounds of roughage, and pasture. About 2,500 pounds of the roughage is legume hays, the other half timothy.

At January prices the total cost of feeding a horse for the year on a corn, alfalfa and timothy ration was $21.20, in Greene county, plus a six months' pasture charge of $4.50. If oats are fed instead of corn, the cost mounts to $26.30 a year, exclusive of pasturage.

Cost of a half corn and half oats ration was $23.05, exclusive of pasturage.

Prices of grain and hay in Greene county in January were 29 cents a hundred pounds for corn, 46 cents a hundred for oats, 3 cents a pound for alfalfa, and 2 cents a pound for timothy.

A pound of ear corn fed with a roughage of mixed hay is equal in feeding value to a pound of oats with mixed roughage.

Specialist Says Young Sows Most Efficient

A young sow is the best sow, according to J. W. Wuichet, extension specialist in animal husbandry for the Ohio State university, who recites the results of ten years of experimental tests with 1,467 brood sows to prove that after a sow reaches three years of age she rapidly loses her productive efficiency.

One and two-year-old sows raised a higher percentage of the pigs farrowed, in the experiments, then did the older brood sows. The younger porcine mothers raised 69 per cent of their pigs to weaning time, and this percentage dropped rapidly as the sows grew older, until at six and a half years the average sow raised only a few more than a third of the pigs farrowed.

Sows under four years of age produced litters averaging 210 pounds at weaning time, whereas the older sows produced litters averaging about 167 pounds.

Wuichet concluded from a study of the records that a sow should not be retained in the herd after she has farrowed a litter as a three-year-old, and that she should be considerably better than the ordinary producer if she is retained after farrowing as a two-year-old.

The Flock in Summer

When the flock goes out to summer pasture and you no longer bring them to the lot of an evening, says a correspondent in the Missouri Farmer, you will find it convenient to park a little can of gasoline, some pine tar and a pair of old shears by a fence post where you can find them when you make your occasional trip with salt or to look them over. You may find a sheep with maggots in hot weather and you won't have to make a long trip to the house after tools. Sometimes when visiting a back farm sheep pasture we have in our pocket some stout string or cord; if we find a sheep needing attention we catch it and hobble its feet, go to a fence post and get our parked tools and don't have to chase the sheep a second time to doctor it. Most any trip you make to such a flock there will be one or two sheep that need some little attention, like cutting off a soiled lock of wool or placing a little tar on stained wool will be a worthwhile preventive of worse trouble.

Sugar Raising Saved

The sugar cane industry of the United States was threatened with entire extinction back in the days just following the World war when mosaic disease broke out in Louisiana. This plant disease is fatal to the cane and its spread was rapid all through the sugar bowl of the lower Mississippi. Little was known about the disease and any effective remedies were hard to find. Federal plant experts tackled the problem from another angle and through the development of a mosaic-resistant strain of cane from imported varieties, the sugar growing has been restored to an acreage which compares favorably with that planted before the outbreak of mosaic disease.—Washington Star.

Agricultural Hints

Forage and coarse grain crops comprise 90 per cent of the total field crop area in Quebec, according to the latest estimates. Potatoes and buckwheat have the largest acreages among the strictly cash crops.

IF YOU'VE ever seen Howe Hollow in the spring, you've seen something. A background of low, rolling hills, covered with soft green. Through the valley, a winding clear, shallow brown stream—Howe brook, it is called—an occasional rocky ford across its bubbling surface, and willows sweeping their long branches down over its waters. The green and pink of blooming apple trees on the slopes of the stone-cleared farms. Zigzagging old gray rail fences marking the ancient boundaries, or straight, wide, old gray stone walls, sometimes as wide as the span of a man's arms.

And, cradled in the green trees, small, old white clapboard houses, with green blinds and faded red brick chimneys. Not big houses, for Howe Hollow has never supported a rich population. But comfortable houses, that have been kept in good condition by generations of comfortable people.

If you had seen Howe Hollow as it lay in the soft twilight of an evening in late May, with the sun just leaving the treetops and the thrushes singing their sweet spring song in the gathering dusk, you perhaps would not have wondered at the love Martha Howe bore it. Her father, and her father's fathers before him—her husband's ancestors, too—had lived there through the years. The blood of old Joshua Howe, who had founded the settlement two centuries before, flowed through the veins of her son William. And Martha Howe, a widow a few years after her marriage, had seen to it that William knew and venerated Howe Hollow and all that it stood for.

"But, dear me, Anna Pratt," she said, rising stiffly from her knees before her Sweet William border, where she had been ruthlessly rooting out weeds, "I don't mind because William went to the city. Of course not. Young people today aren't content with the things that made life complete for us when we were young." She spoke slowly and carefully as she dusted her hands against each other to free them from the soft earth of the flower border.

"No, it appears they aren't." Mrs. Pratt spoke acidly. "I know times change, Martha, but I've always said Howe Hollow was good enough for anyone—leastwise and more specially for a Howe—and I'll always stick to it. And what your William can find any better down in New York than we can find right here I don't know."

Mrs. Howe said only, "Come on up on the porch and sit down, Anna. I'll just run in and wash my hands and get a shawl and then come back and sit here a while. I love these spring twilights."

But perhaps if you had seen Howe Hollow in the soft, sleepy twilight of that late May evening you would have wondered how flesh and blood could endure it. Perhaps you would have sympathized with some of the younger Howe Hollow inhabitants, who gratefully shook its dust from their feet, as lightly as Martha Howe shook the dust of her Sweet William border from her fingers. "Howe Hollow!" said one young wit, "Yeah! It's hollow, all right. And how!"

Martha never blamed William for choosing the city instead of his ancestral home for his work. William had developed real talent, as a boy, in painting. She had conserved the family resources to the utmost that she might give him a good education—including two years' work in Paris. Now that he was a successful magazine illustrator she took it quite for granted that he should elect to live in New York. Naturally, that was the place for him. But in spite of her careful refusal to discuss the situation with her old friend Anna Pratt, Martha was troubled.

Times were bad—everybody knew that. William had been, graciously and generously, sending something to Martha each week to help keep up the old house. He had done it more as a matter of repaying her for his expensive training than as a filial duty. He had been careful in making Martha feel that. But even now a successful illustrator might find himself a bit short of funds. It was not surprising that William had less money than he had had. And William was in love. He had written his mother of his engagement to Felice Leeways. Felice had made a good beginning toward real success as a motion picture actress, when a fall had lamed her—slightly, but permanently, in such a way that she could not hope for a future as a screen star. William and Felice were to be married—tomorrow. Then in a few days they were coming to visit Martha. And Martha knew, from William's letters, that he would ask her to give up her old home among the New England hills and go back with him to New York. At her age, he had said, he worried about her. She would be safer, far more comfortable, boarding a block or so away from him and Felice, where he could keep his eye on her.

Martha knew the necessity to save money. And of course—she would give in. It was only right that William should have a chance for his own life. And if it cost too much to keep the old place in the Hollow for her, the old place would have to go. It could be sold for a small price. The Hollow was developing as a summer place, and the old houses were being remodeled and modernized for summer homes. The Howe house was one of the best. There would be little difficulty about selling it.

But Martha's heart was heavy. Her ancestors—her husband's ancestors—seemed to be putting out restraining hands to hold her, to keep her, where she belonged.

Anna Pratt arrived at the back door of the Howe house while Martha was getting breakfast the morning after William and Felice reached the Hollow. Martha asked her in.

"Well, you seem to be killing the fatted calf, all right," Anna said, curiously surveying the skillet of bacon waiting to be cooked, the hot, steaming muffins under a cloth, the pitcher of thick cream, the big blue bowl of stewed rhubarb, and Martha's grandmother's silver coffee service waiting for the fragrant coffee bubbling over the fire. "I saw her, last night, down in the village buying some cold cream at the store. Funny how these modern girls paint their lips."

Martha saw, in her mind's eye, the pale thin face of Felice, with its smooth childishly rounded cheeks, untouched by rouge, and its clearly outlined red lips.

"We used to wear crimpers, didn't we?" Martha answered back in spirit. "I do, yet. It's the only way I can keep my hair decent. And we ruined our ears having them punctured, and laced our waists—"

"Well I didn't say anything against her. Only, you might as well know what everybody's saying. Everybody's saying William and she will take you away from Howe Hollow. Back to the city."

Martha turned quickly to the stove. "Coffee most boiled over," she said, "And I hate to have it do that. Seems so careless."

"Well—" Anna Pratt walked to the dining room door. "I s'pose I'd better run along. Violets and apple blossoms! I must say they look pretty with your blue willowware." And she went her way.

There was a light sound behind the half-open dining room door, and Felice came, with her slight limp, into the kitchen. Felice in a blue linen dress—not, as Martha had expected her, in silk pajamas—her lips as carefully red as they were the night before, a light of affection and understanding in her bright eyes.

She put a timid arm around Martha's shoulder, and nestled soft yellow hair against soft, gray hair. "Your hair looks lovely, Mother Howe," she said. Then she laughed. "I adore crimpers."

Martha blushed. "Well," she said, "Anna Pratt is an old friend—I suppose you heard what she said. But she never did have sense enough to mind her own business. I'm sorry you've been bothered by our small gossip. Just you forget it. And I'll get your breakfast right on the table."

Felice picked up the bowl of rhubarb. "I'll help," she said. "No—wait." She laid the bowl back on the table. "William was going to tell you when he comes down. But I can't wait. Mother Howe—I love it here. We've decided—if you want us—we'll stay here. It will cost a lot less. And William can do a lot of painting. Apple trees in bloom with an old stone wall behind them—"

"And you in a blue linen dress, with violets in your hands—" Martha Howe put her arms about Felice.

"Yes—and William, here, where he really belongs. Mother Howe, may we stay? We thought we'd ask you to go back to the city with us. But when we got here—something seemed to hold us."

"Yes," nodded Martha, "yes—you may stay."

Foxes Can Be Outwitted at the Woodland Spring

Brer Reynard's reputation for "foxiness" is only matched bw his keenness of scent, but an ordinary woodland spring has been found the best place to outwit him.

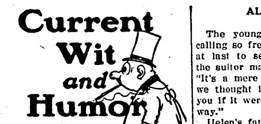
Long regarded by sportsmen and farmers as the nemesis of incautious poultry and small game, the fox depends principally upon scent to lead him to his quarry and warn of the presence of enemies. Bubbling woodland springs, however, have been found to leave no telltale scent, and by wading up their outlets the trapper can approach these pools where foxes love to quench their thirst without leaving odorous traces of his presence.

A sod or moss-covered stone is placed about two feet from the bank of the spring so that it protrudes about two inches above water level. A bait is laid on the sod. A submerged rock is placed half way between the bait and the bank. A steel trap with a light sod on the pan, the only part of the trap above water, is then arranged as a stepping stone to the bait. The trapper leaves the set by wading down the outlet and thus no human or trap scent will remain to warn the "foxy" fox.

Investigations into the food of foxes show that they prefer game birds, rabbits, rodents, large insects, poultry and eggs in addition to acorns and other nuts. As was true in the days when Aesop concocted his fable of the "Fox and Grapes," they also fancy these and other fruits.

Village of Ancients

There is a village in Durham where the old folk proudly boast that if their ages were totaled together they would stretch back to the days when Adam was a lad. Shotley Bridge is the place where people live happy and long. It has only a few hundred inhabitants, but they include several nonagenarians and over a score of eighty-year-olds, while people of sixty and seventy are looked upon as youngsters.—Montreal Herald



Current Wit and Humor

INNOCENCE

The enthusiastic angler was relating a fishing story to some of his neighbors.

"Yes," he said proudly. "I caught the biggest fish of my career last night. It was a bass, and what a whopper, too. Do you know, fellows, believe it or believe it not, that fish weighed about seven pounds. Some fish, what?'

His son, who had remained interested throughout the story, now spoke up.

"Yes, and do you know, daddy was so kind, he gave it to my little kitten," he said.

25c ADMISSION TO STATE FAIR

Most Pretentious Educational Program to be Presented This Year.

With the lowest admission price in history—25 cents—preparations are being made to care for record throngs at this year's Minnesota State Fair and Northwest Livestock Show, September 2 to 9, announces Raymond A. Lee, Secretary.

Continuously striving to improve its program, the management this year is presenting the most pretentious educational exhibits in history. In its efforts to encourage the raising of better livestock, the growing of better grains and grasses and in fostering the far-reaching 4-H Club work activities, $75,000 in premiums will be awarded.

Proper Planning Illustrated

With farm prices on the up-trend, efficient crop management is the theme to be expressed in all exhibits. Scores of displays will illustrate how a maximum income can be obtained through proper planning. Outstanding among the exhibits of this type will be the booth displays, depicting—county by county—the progress of diversified farming in Minnesota. Fourteen new varieties of fruits and flowers, developed to enhance farm incomes, will be additional evidence of the advancement of agriculture.

Champions of the nation will compete for world-wide honors in the Northwest Livestock Show. More than 6,000 head of prize cattle, horses, swine and sheep, carrying the colors of the country's best herds, stables and flocks, will vie for championship awards in the show ring.

Fourteen hundred future farmers will demonstrate their skill in practical husbandry and home-making demonstrations as a part of the Boys' and Girls' 4-H Club activities. These visual demonstrations will bring home to visitors the thoroughness and beneficial effects of the Junior program as sponsored by the Fair management.

60 Acres of Machinery

Industrial development will be detured in the 60 acres of moving displays showing the newest in farm and road building equipment, factory machinery and labor saving devices for the home.

Dairy exhibits in keeping with Minnesota's position as the leading butter-producing state of the Union will be featured in the new Dairy and Bee Culture building.

SUPER THRILLS AT STATE FAIR

Derby Day, Train Wreck, "America Marches On" New Attractions.

New and thrilling features, entirely different from other years, will make up the $100,000 entertainment program to be presented at the Minnesota State Fair and Northwest Livestock Show, September 2 to 9, announces Raymond A. Lee, secretary.

Outstanding new attractions will be the Derby Day races, the Thrill Day program headlined by a locomotive collision, the new automobile race plan, the gigantic evening show, "America Marches On" and the first appearance of the Royal American Shows on the Midway.

For the first time in history an all-running horse program will be staged on Saturday, Sept. 2, which has been designated Derby Day. The "Sport of Kings" will attract more than 100 of the fastest running horses in the nation. The card calls for six flat and two steeplechase races.

Locomotives to Crash

A train wreck with two giant locomotives pulling cars, crashing head-on, in front of the grandstand, will be the super-attraction on Thrill Day, Friday, Sept. 8. In addition to the duel of the two "Iron Horses" there will be a series of specially arranged thrillers including motorcycle races, a cyclist crashing through a board wall, stunt flying, parachute jumps, auto polo and chariot races.

Auto race fans will see 25 of the nation's leading speedway and dirt track pilots in action on Labor Day, Wednesday and Saturday, September 4, 6 and 9. The change in the program to provide auto races on Monday was made at the request of many patrons who can attend the Fair no other day.

Horse races will furnish the excitement on Tuesday and Thursday, Sept. 5 and 7, when both harness and running events will be staged.

Night Show Musical Spectacle

"America Marches On," the evening grandstand attraction, combines new and unusual sound, lighting and scenic effects into a gorgeous musical spectacle. Whirlwind acrobatics, intricate dancing numbers, grand opera, the unique disappearing water ballet, clowns and comedians are interwoven in an all-star production, which is climaxed by a brilliant display of fireworks. The performance will be staged each evening, including Sunday.

W L S radio performers, whose barn dance program is heard over a national hookup, will appear in special concerts Sunday afternoon and evening in the Hippodrome.

The Evening Horse Show, September 4, 5, 6, 7 and 8, will be the year's blue-ribbon equestrian event.

On the Midway will be seen for the first time the 40 new rides and attractions of the Royal American Shows.

Make Farm Outfit Deal

Edgar Horien and Elmer Nohre closed a big deal with Melvin Nohre the other day in which they became the owners of his entire farm equipment, livestock and crops and hay. Elmer has also rented the farm that Melvin was on and will soon start plowing there.

Melvin Nohre and family will move to St. Hilaire where they own a home in town.

Foods for Stay-at-Home Husbands

YOU didn't know there were any stay-at-home husbands? Well, we're talking about husbands whose wives are away for the summer. And in case you are one of those wives, and the sort who worries about the "poor dears" eating in restaurants, here are some timely suggestions.

Vacation Foods

Stock up your shelves with vacation foods. We won't guarantee that when you come home you won't find the food all intact, because actually the poor dears don't have a half-bad time, with everyone including themselves feeling very sorry about them. But we'll wager that if you stock up with the right foods—the sort of things that men like to eat without trouble or fuss—you'll find quite a dent in the family larder when you come home. And at any rate, you can bask on the beach without feeling like an old meanie.

Order such interesting and easily prepared foods as beef a la mode, chicken a la king, chicken curry, lobster newburg, cod fish cakes, cod fish flakes, shrimps, sardines in oil, mustard or tomato sauce; also some satisfying soups such as bean puree, pepper pot, cream of tomato, and lima bean puree; some fruit juices for summer drinks, such as pineapple juice, orange juice and grapefruit juice; and some sandwich meats that go well with beer, such as ham loaf, sliced ham, whole ham, hamburger steak, pig's feet, potted meats, sausage plain or with sauerkraut, and tongue.*

Wheat Allotment Meeting To Be Held Here Tuesday

Farmers in the townships of Holt, East Valley, Mud Lake, Excell, and Adger will have an opportunity to have the wheat allotment plan explained to them at a meeting to be held in Holt Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock. Elling Waagedahl will be the chairman and Jay Seymour, the emergency agent, will explain the plan and answer questions.

A similar meeting will be held in Newfolden Monday night, and other meetings have been held in all parts of the county.

These preliminary educational meetings will be finished in this county by Thursday, Aug. 24. As soon as arrangements can be made, a second meeting will be held in each township for the purpose of making out applications for their allotment. All wheat growers will be notified seven days in advance of this second meeting.

This is perhaps the first time in history that farmers will be paid for not growing wheat.

The Weather

A few showers of rain fell here Tuesday and Wednesday, which interfered some with the threshing. As we go to press, a decidedly cool wind from the northwest makes a fire feel good and brings out the coats and sweaters.

The "NRA" symbol is being displayed everywhere these days as firms subscribe to Pres. Roosevelt's recovery program. The letters mean "National Recovery Administration," of which all firms subscribing to the principles set forth in the "National Recovery Act" are members.

THE TAX ON FLOUR

A brief explanation in regard to the application of the Federal Processing Tax on Flour may not be amiss here.

On July 8 all flour mills and wholesalers of flour were instructed by the Federal Government to apply a tax on the basis of 30c per bushel of wheat or $1.48 per barrel of flour.

However, all flour delivered or in transit prior to July 8 to dealers for retail purposes should be non-taxable.

The local creamery has been handling flour for their patrons, but on July 8 they did not have a large supply on hand, so consequently the flour purchased during the period from July 8 to August 7, the processing tax had to be added to the price of flour. That accounts for a higher price to wholesalers than to the retail trade. On August 8 the Processing Tax was added to all Flour sold, whether wholesale or retail.

State To Buy Hay For Drouth Stricken Area

The following notices, relating to the buying of hay by the State for the drouth-stricken areas of Minnesota, were received this week:

The undersigned having been appointed by the Executive Council of this state for the purpose of renting hay stumpage to any farmer willing to cut the hay and sell it to the State of Minnesota, issue the following statement:

In order to acquire the right to cut the hay you will have to see one of the committee or else write one of them, but as you will have to sign a contract it would be well for you to make a personal trip to Warren to do so. The contract will simply be that you agree to cut all the hay on certain lands, which you select, and to pay the county to apply on the taxes 25 cents for each ton so cut, and that you will sell all of the hay to the State of Minnesota, over and above all that you need for your own use, properly baled and delivered at the nearest railroad station, at $7.00 per ton.

All checks in payment of the hay will be made payable to the person renting the hay land and will be delivered to W. O. Braggans, who out of such checks will deduct the 25 cents per ton for the county, and pay any laborer's claim incurred in the cutting, baling, and delivery of the hay to market, provided they are left with him in time to do so and the balance will be paid to the person renting the land.

Remember this: We can rent you any land any place in the county that has not already been rented, and if any land is already rented and the hay has not been cut, we can rent you that land, and will do so if the hay is not cut by September 1, 1933. It must however be owned by the State or there be some delinquent taxes on it.

W. O. Braggans, Warren, Minn.
John P. Bordewich, " "
Henry M. Hanson, " "

As a result of a meeting of the Executive Council of the State of Minnesota consisting of Governor Olson, chairman; Julius Schmahl, treasurer; Harry Peterson, attorney general; Mike Holm, secretary of State, and Stafford King, auditor, they proclaimed that an emergency exists in the western part of the state due to drouth. In some of the western counties farmers have lost all their crops and starvation of livestock is imminent unless these farmers receive hay to sustain their cattle. In view of this fact, the State of Minnesota presents the following program to help farmers in stricken areas:

To cut all hay stumpage on State-owned and Tax Delinquent lands in northern Minnesota, including Marshall county.

Any farmer who wishes to cut hay suitable for feeding on any of these lands can do so and will be paid by the State the sum of $7.00 per ton baled and delivered to the nearest station on track.

All hay stumpage that is cut on state owned and tax delinquent lands must be turned over to the state at the above mentioned price of $7.00 per ton less his actual need for his own use.

Anyone wishing to acquire the right to cut the hay on any of the above described lands may secure such right by applying to any one of the following committee:

W. O. Braggans, County Attorny, Warren, Minn.
Henry M. Hanson, Deputy County Auditor, Warren, Minn.
John P. Bordewich, Sheriff, Warren, Minn.

Anyone having any hay for sale can sell it to the State of Minnesota by getting in touch with any one of the following committee:

A. S. Rokke, Newfolden, Minn.
Jules J. Pagnac, Stephen, Minn.
Ole Bergman, Alvarado, Minn.
Otto Johnson, Grygla, Minn.
Geo. Fricker, Holt, Minn.
N. O. Folland, Strandquist, Minn.
Carl Olson, Gatzke, Minn.
E. M. Evans, Middle River, Minn.
F. A. Green, Stephen, Minn.
S. S. Easter, Warren, Minn.

The state executive council has the power to seize private property and give receipt for the same for the purpose of relieving districts of distressed conditions and the purpose of saving lives and property.

The right to cut the hay on any such lands shall exist only during the year 1933, and the State has authorized the above committee to act for it in the renting of such lands and in the purchase of the hay.

S. S. Easter will be the man that will inspect the hay before it is baled to see if it will be suitable to be shipped. We want hay, both tame and wild, that is suitable to be fed to livestock, We do not want weeds.

Delivery of the hay to the nearest shipping point may be made forthwith or as cut and baled, except that we wish it delivered as soon as possible.

This is a chance to help the other drouth stricken areas of the state and at the same time help yourself, by making a little money for yourself. A nominal charge for hay stumpage will be made by the county, all of which will be used to apply on taxes.

Industry in Holt

The new cement basement at the Holt Cafe was finished this week, and an outside entrance built over the steps leading down into it.

Mrs. Inga O. Berget has had the fixtures in the postoffice rearranged this week, in order to get more light. The waiting room has been made somewhat smaller, John Hagberg did the work.

Sam Lorentson has been busy this week fixing tables and brightening up his service station, in preparation for the opening of his Gamble Store agency tomorrow. The announcement of the opening is on the front page of this issue.

With four lunchrooms in town a fellow need not go hungry any more, says we. Or thirsty either, says you.

The band boys are getting a long-needed and well-deserved rest these days. That gives the village residents some rest, too, wot?

4-H Club Tour

The 4-H Club Tour held on Sunday was a successful demonstration of what the 4-H members are doing. Although Mr. Harrison of Warren was unable to attend, the local club leaders capably carried out the original purposes of the outing.

Beginning at the John Benitt farm, the tour proceeded to the Alfred Anderson place, then south, and east, and north to the homes of various club members, finally winding up south of the Sunnyside school, where the picnic was held.

Various games were played; at Kittenball the club girls won from the married women, and the club boys from the married men. The latter game was hotly contested, the final score being 9-11. It was estimated that 150 people were in attendance.

Johnny Ness, Stanley Sorenson, Tjollai Gilbertson and Irvin Hagglund made a trip to North Dakota last week to look for work. They found the same kind of work as we have here, so they decided to trade at home.

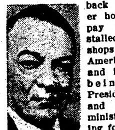
Recovery Act Blue Eagle Becomes the National Bird—Code Making Continues—President Plans War on Kidnaping and Racketeering.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

BLUE eagles of NRA by the hundred thousand are flying all over the United States; innumerable men and women, jobless for long, are going back to work; shorter hours and higher pay are being installed in factories, shops and offices. American commerce and industry is fast being regimented. President Roosevelt and his whole administration are pushing forward in the recovery campaign determinedly.



H. S. Johnson

Following out the President's program, Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, national recovery administrator, has "drafted" citizens in all the states to lead the great drive. Nine members were appointed on each of 48 state "recovery boards," and seven members were named for service on 26 district "recovery boards" for the recently made codes. The telegraphic notice sent each of the former by General Johnson was:

"President Roosevelt has drafted you as one of the nine members of the state recovery board for the state of . . . as explained in bulletin No. 3 of July 20. He has requested you to volunteer your services without compensation in this great drive for national rehabilitation. As a member of this board your duties will be to get every patriotic American citizen, employer, and consumer to co-operate in this program. Please wire acceptance immediately and you will receive further instructions."

The advisory board for public works is doing its part in the re-employment campaign by dealing out further large sums from the public works fund. Its head, Secretary of Interior Ickes, announced allotments totaling $118,282,000 for one state and five federal projects. Added to allotments already made, brought the total thus far earmarked out of the three billion three hundred million dollar fund to $1,058,106,201.

The state project to be financed by the government was beneficiary of the largest allotment. Sixty-three million dollars, Secretary Ickes announced, is allotted for construction of the Grand Coulee dam in the Columbia river basin.

The state of Washington is to undertake the dam project, it is understood. Thirty per cent of the $63,000,000 total cost, or $18,900,000 represents a direct outright gift by the federal government. The remainder is to be loaned to the state, at low interest rates over a long-time period.

The upper Mississippi 9-foot channel project, already approved by President Roosevelt, was allotted $11,500,000. This is a federal project to be undertaken under the government's rivers and harbors program.

Another $22,700,000 of the public works fund was earmarked for the Caspar-Alcova reclamation project in Wyoming, for many years the pet scheme of Senator John B. Kendrick of Wyoming.

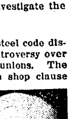
The federal forest service was allotted $15,282,745; the coast and geodetic survey $2,600,000, and the geologic survey $2,500,000.

REPRESENTATIVES of the oil, coal, steel and many other industries were busily trying to agree on their codes in Washington. In each there were factions with conflicting ideas, and it was not easy to reconcile them. This was especially true of the oil men. Among them were many advocates of federal regulation of petroleum prices, but they were told by Administrator Johnson that he would not recommend to the President any price fixing until the effect of production control has been determined.

Formation of the coal code was complicated by the riotous strike in the mining zone of southwestern Pennsylvania. Thirty thousand miners were out and Governor Pinchot called out state troops to control the situation after a quarrel with a sheriff. The National Coal association, controlled by nonunionized operators, asked Administrator Johnson to look into the trouble in the strike region, and he designated Edward F. McGrady, labor adviser to N. R. A., to investigate the situation.

IN BOTH the coal and steel code discussions there was controversy over the open shop versus unions. The steel men took the open shop clause out of their proposed code to facilitate settlement but they declared plainly that they would stand for the present systems of employees' councils in the industry to carry on collective bargaining.

Mr. Johnson said he would not approve any code that does not provide for advisory councils. On the old issue of how collective bargainings should be carried out, the administrator reiterated that N. I. R. A. provides for collective bargaining through employees chosen by the workers.



R. P. Lamont

Robert P. Lamont, former secretary of commerce and now president of the American Iron and Steel Institute, which represents 98 per cent of the country's producers of pig iron and steel ingots, was the chief spokesman for the iron and steel industry at the hearings. William Green, president of the A. F. L., challenged various sections of the offered code, especially the minimum wage and maximum hours provisions. Secretary of Labor Perkins, who had been making a tour of the Pennsylvania steel mills, wanted the wage rates altered, especially criticizing the 25 and 27 cents minimum hourly rate set up for the southern and Birmingham districts.

Shortly afterwards Mr. Lamont announced the industry had agreed to raise the minimum pay in those two districts to 30 cents an hour.

Both Green and Miss Perkins urged that the 40 hour week would not bring about sufficient re-employment in the industry.

Defending the proposed code, Mr. Lamont said:

"It is estimated that on the basis of a 60 per cent rate of operations and a 40 hour week, substantially all the 49,738 employees who were not receiving work July 1, 1933, would be given employment. On less than a 40 hour week the industry positively could not operate the mills and meet any demands on them in excess of present production.

"The code establishes a minimum rate of 40 cents an hour for common labor in the Pittsburgh, Youngstown, north Ohio, Canton, Massillon, Cleveland, Detroit-Toledo, Chicago and Colorado districts. This rate is only 9 per cent less than the highest base rate paid during the last 11 years, where living costs were above the present level."

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT, continuing his vacation at his home in Hyde Park, N. Y., called into conference there Assistant Secretary of State Raymond Moley and discussed with him a plan to put all the force of the federal government into a campaign to wipe out the two great evils of kidnaping and racketeering. Professor Moley was then relieved temporarily from his departmental duties and placed at the head of a special survey to determine where and how the federal power can best be used as a weapon against the criminal. He is well fitted for this work, for he is an expert criminologist, was an adviser to the New York crime commissioner and is the author of numerous surveys of crime, notably in Ohio and Missouri.

Raymond Moley

As for racketeering, both the President and Moley see in the new recovery act the authority, which the federal government has heretofore lacked, to intervene in criminal cases involving business conduct. Until now, unless a criminal act infringed upon some specific federal statute, such as one of the postal laws or the internal revenue act or a law based on interstate commerce, the federal government had no means of jurisdiction.

In the past the anti-trust laws have prevented the smaller industries and business units from banding together. Such a condition provided a fertile field for the racketeers, for illegal combinations, and for violence.

The national recovery act, however, provides directly for the abrogation of the anti-trust laws in cases where they interfere with the working of the recovery program. Industry and business are forced into trade agreements. The federal government sanctions and imposes those agreements and any act in violation of such agreements or tending to destroy the effect of the recovery act is made a crime.

Against kidnaping, the President is counting on a super police force modeled in a general way on England's Scotland Yard, the postal regulations, the income tax law, and the recently enacted kidnaping statute.

Recent instances of kidnaping are familiar to all newspaper readers. The "snatchers" have received large sums for the release of their victims in several cases. The relatives of John J. O'Connell, Jr., of Albany, N. Y., paid $40,000 for his freedom, and the ransom of Charles F. Urschel, millionaire oil operator of Oklahoma City, is said to have been $200,000.

CHESTER S. LORD, who as managing editor of the New York Sun for nearly a quarter of a century was admired and loved by two generations of newspaper men, died at the age of eighty-three years, in his home in Garden City, N. Y. The "Boss," as one of his reporters once wrote, "was never known in all the years of his managing editorship to utter an unkind word to any man on the paper, no matter how humble his station."

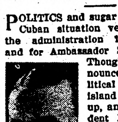
RESULTS shown by the civilian conservation corps are deemed so satisfactory by the administration that plans are being made to continue the experiment for another six months. Orders are to be sent out for the re-enlistment of all those who desire to go on with the work.

Enlistment is on a six months basis. The first "hitch" expires in November. There are at present 310,575 men in the corps, including 25,000 former service men. The forestry army is located in 1,438 camps in all parts of the country. The cost to the government is approximately $20,000,000 a month.

SENATOR HUEY P. LONG'S arbitrary rule in Louisiana was seriously threatened when District Judge A. C. O'Donnell began an open court investigation into the election of last fall in which Long's gang is alleged to have resorted to fraud in order to win. The judge ordered fifteen election commissioners, arrested on charges of certifying to false returns, brought before him; and he granted permission to District Attorney Stanley to examine ballot boxes in open court. Governor O. K. Allen, a Long henchman, in trying to halt the investigation, had declared New Orleans under martial law, but revoked the order after eight soldiers had been detailed to guard the grand jury. The latter body appeared to be dominated by the Long crowd.

The United States senate committee announced it planned to resume its investigation of Louisiana elections within two months. The Times-Picayune called upon President Roosevelt to take note of "political racketeering" in Louisiana and not to overlook it in his "war on gangsters."

POLITICS and sugar are making the Cuban situation very difficult for the administration in Washington, and for Ambassador Sumner Welles. Though it was announced that the political situation on the island was clearing up, and though President Machado issued an amnesty proclamation, the troubles there are continuing. The Cuban people are in distress, the school teachers in Havana have been demonstrating because they are not paid, and the veterans of the war of independence undertook to hold a parade to call attention to their inability to collect their pensions. The old soldiers were attacked by police and severely beaten, right under the eyes of Mr. Welles, and it was reported the ambassador would demand that Machado revamp his cabinet and dismiss Gen. Alberto Herrera, the cause of much of the recent disturbance.



Sumner Welles

The Cuban ambassador in Washington is persistently demanding a larger import quota for Cuban sugar. This and this alone would make the island fairly prosperous and would lead to the subsidence of the political disorders.

At present the sugar conference has tentatively set Cuba's sugar exports to the United States at 1,700,000 short tons of raw and only 110,000 tons of refined. Ordinarily United States importation of Cuban refined sugar is about half a million tons.

THE apprehension of war between the United States and Japan, entertained by not a few Americans, is apparently felt in Japan also, despite official denials. The army and navy heads of the island empire have just submitted to the finance ministry estimates for the 1934-35 defense expenditures larger than any in previous history and 45 per cent greater than the appropriation for the current year. These estimates included 180,000,000 yen ($50,400,000 at current exchange rates) for new naval construction and 75,000,000 yen ($21,000,000) for modernization of capital ships.

The navy ministry asked for the fiscal year beginning next April 1 the sum of 680,000,000 yen ($190,400,000), which is 30 per cent more than the estimates of 1921-22, the largest previous estimates for the sea forces.

The combined Japanese fleet began preparations for maneuvers several hundred miles southeast of Tokio, in which the major problem will be a battle with a hypothetical enemy. This will be preceded by a four-day defense of the Tokio district against a sham aerial attack from the sea.

ANDORRA, the little old republic in the Pyrenees, underwent a bloodless revolution and the young people won the right of franchise, hitherto confined to the heads of families. The revolters were supported by the state council, and the authority of Andorra's two co-princes was defied. These co-princes are the bishop of Urgel in Spain and the head of the French state as represented by the prefect of Perpignan. Their joint suzerainty has existed since 1278. They were told the Andorrans insisted on being a free people and that their jobs henceforth would be merely decorative.

President Lebrun of France evidently did not relish this flouting of his authority. The French customs authorities imposed an embargo on all Andorran exports to France, thus ruining at one fell swoop the little nation's most thriving industry, which is smuggling.

FOR the first time since 1912 England's tennis team has possession of the historic Davis cup. The islanders won the trophy by defeating the French players at Auteuil in the challenge round. France had held the cup for six years.

News of North Dakota

EVENTS OF THE WEEK THROUGHOUT THE STATE TOLD IN BRIEF FORM

Hettinger.—Thrown from a header barge when his horses became excited, Frank H. Pratt, Haynes farmer, was crushed beneath the wheels of the machine and died two hours later in a Lemmon, S. Dak., hospital.

Wyndmere.—Further attempts to interest residents in the construction of a city water system were made here, with petitions presented to the town board requesting them to ask government aid.

Linton.—Rev. Fr. Bernard Strassmaeir, veteran Standing Rock reservation priest, was signally honored at Conception, Mo., by laymen and clergy with a celebration observing the 50th anniversary of his profession.

Park River.—Duane Anderson, 12, of Park River, was a victim of an untimely accident when he was smothered to death in a wheat bin on the Mills-Farup farm, between Fordville and Lankin.

Fargo.—The North Dakota State college will open for the registration of the first year students on September 15 for the year of 1933-34. Regular college classes will begin September 20.

New Rockford.—Nearly 300 Eddy county men will lay aside their shaving brushes in preparation for the 50th anniversary of Eddy county to be staged in New Rockford, September 20 and 21.

Grand Forks.—The annual convention of the northeastern division of the North Dakota Education association will be held here October 12 and 13, Superintendent W. E. Lillo, Larimore, president of the group, announced.

Jamestown.—Agnes (Pat) Murphy of Jamestown, state women's golf champion, defeated Mrs. L. C. Anderson in the 18-hole final of the annual Jamestown Country club championship to win the title for the fourth year.

New England.—A city dump has been rebuilt into a municipal park here with funds furnished by the federal government as a municipal improvement and unemployment aid. Work was completed after 15 men had worked for a month.

Fargo.—Ralph Andrews, 54, well known Fargo musician and for the last 15 years secretary of the extension division of the N. D. A. C., died in a Fargo hospital following a cerebral hemorrhage, caused by leukemia, a disease from which he had been suffering since October, 1930.

Lidgerwood.—Mr. and Mrs. James Jackson, both age 86, and residents of Lidgerwood for 30 years, observed their 66th wedding anniversary here. They were married in Cambridgeshire, England, July 22, 1867, and lived in England six years before coming to the United States.

Elbowoods.—A $30,000 building, with construction scheduled to get under way here soon, is assured the Fort Berthold Indian mission. The structure will replace original units at the mission constructed from wood brought by steamboat up the Missouri river in 1876.

Bowbells.—Two years to the day after the crime was committed, Bert Lighthall, 27, formerly of Minot, was sentenced at Bowbells to serve 20 years in the state penitentiary for robbery of the First National bank of Bowbells. He pleaded guilty before Judge John C. Lowe.

Fargo.—The Fargo Junior American Legion baseball team won the state championship at Bismarck by defeating Minot in the final game of the state tournament. The Fargo team will represent the state in the regional tournament at Minneapolis on August 18 and 19. The Fargo team is under the management of Homer Major.

Edmore.—A deadly poisonous water moccasin snake nearly four feet in length was killed by James Fair, Jr. When discovered the snake was coiled on the lawn of the Fair residence, evidently feeling the effects of the cool weather, though when touched with a stick it quickly showed its viciousness.

Mayville.—The skeleton of a man, thought to be a dweller here long before the present Indians came to North Dakota, was discovered in a gravel pit near Mayville recently. The skeleton was buried in a sitting position, facing the east. It is very likely the man was one of the ancient Indian tribe of the Hidatsas who resided in this territory about 500 years ago.

Hazen.—The face of Laurence "Smiling Larry" Albers, former Hazen youth, may flicker for North Dakota audiences above the traditional chaps and bandanna of the movie western hero if present contract plans are carried through. Albers won second honors this year in the "all around cowboy" events of the Salinas (Calif.) rodeo, one of the largest in the west.

Kensal.—Approximately 100 persons received the sacrament of confirmation in the St. John's Catholic church with the Rev. James O'Reilly, bishop of Fargo, officiating. Several other priests assisted.

Garrison.—Bigelow Neal, Garrison novelist, took his place among the foremost authors of fiction in the United States, and in so doing he permitted North Dakota to succeed in carving out a niche for herself in the nation's literary hall of fame. Neal's first book novel is "The Last of the Thundering Herd."

Ugly, Disfiguring Pimples Covered Face

Cuticura Healed

"My entire face was covered with ugly, disfiguring pimples and they were very painful. They were very hard, large and red and they gave me such pain by itching that I scratched and made them worse. For four months they were so bad I could hardly rest.

"Everyone suggested remedies but to no avail, and I became so disfigured I would not go out. Finally I tried Cuticura Soap and Ointment and they made my face feel refreshed, and after using three cakes of Cuticura Soap and four boxes of Cuticura Ointment I was healed." SYNOPSIS

On her eighteenth birthday, Barbara, motherless daughter of Christopher Thorne, artist, receives a birthday ring from Bruce MacLain, young artist friend of the family, but more than friend to Barbara. Barbara and Bruce go picnicking. He tells her a story of a gypsy boy, a little gypsy girl whom he loves, and the song of a silver flute. She knows it is her own love tale. Her father is killed in an accident. Relatives arrive and take charge of things. Barbara fears the children's separation and its effects. Desperate, she plans to take her two brothers and sister and run away to her godfather, "Uncle Stephen" Drake. He, a bachelor, forty years old, still has vivid recollections of Barbara's mother, whom he had loved eighteen years before. He had made up his mind to propose that night to Emily Trent, so that his well-ordered household might have a permanent head. But the arrival of the children interrupts the proposal. Barbara tells him why they ran away, and he feels his heart warm to the brave daughter of his early love. But he tells her he must send them all back. Kit is taken ill.

"Yes, sir." What had happened? Miss Finch's tidy brown head was filled with puzzled conjectures. "There's a telegram," she said.

Stephen read it. "Leaving immediately," it said, "keep children should reach Philadelphia tomorrow much annoyed." It was signed H. G. Fales. That, Stephen thought, was "Uncle Herbert." He had used exactly ten words.

"Make that appointment for Monday," he said to Miss Finch who sat with the telephone in her hand. "I'll be rather busy tomorrow."

Miss Finch had read the telegram. She wondered about the "children" and hoped Mr. Drake would explain. But he didn't explain. His manner was preoccupied. And in the middle of the afternoon he said:

"Call my home, Miss Finch, and tell Thomas not to drive in for me today. I have some important errands. I'll go out on the train."

And then, although it was only three o'clock and there were urgent matters demanding his attention, Stephen walked out of the office!

Miss Finch was astonished. Her pad told her that he had a conference with Mr. Van Wyck at four o'clock. And there was the Arnold case, all at sixes and sevens.

Her astonishment would have been greater if her thoughts could have followed Stephen. The "important errands" had to do with the toy department at Wanamaker's. It had occurred to him that Kit might find it dull being ill with nothing to amuse him. A picture puzzle, he thought. He had liked them immensely when he was about Kit's age.

There were puzzles in great variety. Stephen selected two. The young lady clerk was amiable and anxious to please.

"How old is your little boy?" she asked.

Stephen felt embarrassed, but pleased, as well. Pretending to have a family gave him a certain sense of importance.

"There's one eleven or twelve," he said, thinking, at once, of Jamie.

The young clerk smiled. "Fathers never remember exactly," she said.

It gave him a light-headed feeling to be thought the father of Barbara's children—the Barbara he had loved. He thought of asking her, "Just how old is Jamie now?" The light-headed feeling increased. He suffered himself to be led to the section devoted to trains which ran on tracks with bridges and tunnels and tiny painted stations.

"Shall I send them?" asked the young lady clerk.

"I'll take them," Stephen answered.

He forgot, for the moment, his aversion to lumpy bundles. The trains, he thought, would keep Jamie out of mischief. They would set them up in the schoolroom out of Aunt Edith's way.

Stephen thought, as the elevator plunged downward, that he couldn't take home presents for the boys without remembering the girls. He found, without much difficulty, a shell bracelet for Gay. Barbara's gift required more time.

Stephen selected a carnelian pendant set in filigreed gold on a slender golden chain.

As he waited for the package, a woman paused at the counter. She smelled faintly of lilacs. Stephen remembered Emily. He glanced at his watch. Good Lord! He hadn't a minute to lose.

The florist had no white lilacs. There wasn't time to try at another shop. The pale yellow roses would have to do. He added the florist's box to his accumulation of bundles, plunged out of the shop with undignified haste and hailed a passing taxi.

A family is distracting, he thought again, as he relaxed against the upholstery and lit a soothing cigarette. Well, it wasn't for long. The children's relatives were coming tomorrow. Kit couldn't be moved just yet, of course. But bronchitis wasn't serious. In a week or two. . . .

Emily rose from a chair beside the fire as the maid, crisply aproned, led Stephen into the living room.

"Gracious!" she said brightly. "You look like Santa Claus, Stephen."

"Some things for the children."

"Oh. . . ." A little of the brightness slipped from Emily's face. The children!

"Good afternoon," Professor Trent said, feeling rather uneasy. Emily had told him to excuse himself when Stephen came. But his chair was comfortable and he liked the warmth of the fire. He would just pretend that he hadn't heard.

"I owe you an apology." Stephen presented the florist's box. "I'll let these make it for me."

"They're lovely!" Emily breathed, lifting from the box the tangle of roses and fragile asparagus fern. Roses! she thought, feeling her spirits sink. She had hoped they would be lilacs. But he mustn't know she was disappointed. "A vase, Agnes," she said brightly. "The crystal one. Of course we understood." She deftly arranged the flowers. "We missed you. But we understood, didn't we, Father-darling?"

"What's that?" The old man looked up owlishly. "Yes, yes," he said. "Of course we did, my dear." He dipped his chin into his collar and made himself as small as he could.

Why didn't Father excuse himself? Emily wondered nervously. He was exasperating at times. But she smiled at Stephen and led him to a sofa a little removed from the fire.

"Tell me about the children," she said, folding her hands in her lap. "I must admit I'm curious. Who are they, Stephen?"

He told her, making an appealing story of the somewhat distressing facts. He thought Emily would understand. She seemed fond of children.

"You mean they actually ran away?" she asked when he had finished.

"Actually." Stephen did not look at Emily. The smile, half provoked, half amused touched the corners of his lips. "In a truck," he added, "at five o'clock in the morning."

"Poor Stephen!" Emily, gentle and understanding, lightly touched his hand. "We'll have to forgive them, I suppose. Children brought up as they have been—"

"What do you mean?" Stephen asked, surprised at the note of resentment in his voice.

"Well, artists—" she said vaguely.

Stephen checked the impulse to make a caustic comment. He had been rude to Emily last night. He must be gentle with her today. But, instead of telling her the things he had meant to say in the conservatory, he found himself talking about the children. It seemed necessary, somehow, to explain their reasons for running away. He realized, as he talked, that he was making a heroine of Barbara. He was a bit surprised to find himself telling Emily about their talk last night in the library.

"How old is she?" Emily asked.

"Eighteen." Why, he thought irritably, did every one seem to think her age was so important?

"Oh," Emily said slowly. "Then she isn't a child."

"In some ways she seems younger than any of them." Stephen remembered the soft hair tumbling against her shoulders, her frank brown eyes, her childish faith in his ability to help her keep the children. "Kit is as grave as a judge. Gay is, I rather suspect, an artful little minx. Jamie seems to have a sort of sturdy independence. But Barbara—"

This Barbara, Emily thought, was the artful minx and not Gay. Girls of eighteen, in this modern generation, seemed to know how to get what they wanted. These children! She wished they had stayed in Provincetown.

But she told Stephen none of her thoughts.

"Poor little darlings!" she said, and then, because she felt that she simply must know, "You aren't going to keep them?"

"Only for a week or two. Kit is ill. We'll have to keep him until he has recovered. It can't be helped."

"You're very generous." Emily's lifted eyes shone with flattering admiration. "It's what I would have expected you to do."

"Dear . . ." Stephen pressed her hand, touched by the expression in her eyes. "I knew you would understand."

Emily's heart leapt and sank again. Stephen was glancing at his watch.

"I must go," he said and rose from the sofa.

"You couldn't have dinner with us?" Emily stood beside him, wanting to keep him, her hand upon his sleeve.

"Thank you," Stephen said absently. "I can't manage it this evening. I'm a bit worried about the boy."

Emily's heart sank lower. He was thinking of the children, and Barbara.

"Is there anything I can do?" she asked, annoyed at the flutter in her voice, unable to control it.

"Will you come to see them?" Stephen looked at her so tenderly that her heart leapt again. "I should like you to know them, Emily."

"I certainly will. Poor little darlings!" She felt quite fond of the children because Stephen wanted her to know them. She even felt fond of Barbara. She smiled at him, gently understanding.

But her spirits drooped again when he had gone. She looked at the yellow roses opening in the heat. They meant no more than an apology. Had Stephen forgotten those moments in the conservatory? He had said nothing definite. But she was sure he had meant— If the children hadn't come when they did— Suddenly she couldn't bear the aching disappointment. Her lips trembled, her eyes filled with tears. She went into her bedroom and quietly closed the door.

Highway Without a Rival

Traveler in California Can Journey for Many Miles Beneath Majestic Redwood Trees That Have Flourished for Thousands of Years.

I doubt if there is any highway in the world to match the beauty of the great Redwood highway which California has built through the mountains and along the sea, up toward her Oregon frontier. For two hundred miles you travel, most of the time, beneath redwoods which have the vertical majesty of the Empire State building's columns and a towering green dignity and simplicity which no man-made building can rival. They are immense; the eye takes time to adjust to their height.

Sometimes the rugged trunks stretch skyward for two hundred feet without a branch; sometimes the branches almost touch the ground. And they are abundant; these are no lone trees, relics of bygone age, but whole forests of giants, with few trees but redwood saplings in their shade. The "Founders' Tree" on the Dyerville flats, 364 feet high, labeled "the world's tallest known tree," seems little taller than its neighbors.

That "Founders' Tree," dedicated to the founders of the Save-the-Redwoods league—Madison Grant, John C. Merriam and Henry Fairfield Osborn, two of them New Yorkers and one a citizen of Washington, D. C.—hints part of the romance behind the chain of state redwood parks. Driving today through that chain of giant groves, you have no sense of a mighty race in peril of destruction; you feel only that redwoods have flourished her for thousands of years and still flourish. But there was a time when logging was proceeding at such a pace that it seemed doubtful whether coming generations would ever know what California's—and America's—biggest living things had been.

The Save-the-Redwoods league roused the nation so thoroughly that even along the Klamath river, where the mountain walls are solid with redwood and the river is full of dead redwood snags, I could hardly bring myself to feel that the Indians, using redwood for fuel, were less than desecrators. And the national bank and "movie" house at Scotia, built as imitation Greek temples with solid redwood logs for columns seemer a cruel waste. The Scotians, of course, had merely used the cheapest and most abundant wood of their neighborhood.

A few of the best groves, even directly beside the Redwood highway, are still in private hands, and some day may yet be sacrificed to the value of board feet of lumber. But most of these groves are state parks, saved, unless from fire, forever. You pass through the Lane grove, the Mather grove, the Williams grove, and other groves dedicated to heroes of the long fight, and finally even through the California-State-Federation-of-Women's-Clubs and the Garden-Clubs-of-America groves, dedicated to other groups of warriors.

Such names at first seem ludicrous; they are, of course, no sillier than the Mobiloil bay which Sir Hubert Wilkins dedicated to a patron of his Antarctic flights or the Charles V. Bob mountains which Admiral Byrd first dedicated to a doubtful benefactor, then erased from his maps. They are close kin to Virginia, Carolina and Georgia names of our Atlantic coast. Age lends dignity to the most violent eccentricities of grateful nomenclature—when it does not simply forget them.

The big trees lead the mind back into the prehistoric past of California. The giants were giants before Columbus sighted American land; some of them were titans when Caesar ruled Rome. For the redwood begins life violently, then takes its time. A fifty-year-old tree is as big as an eastern veteran; after its second century the redwood grows slowly, and the tree which may be twenty-five hundred years old today seems little vaster from the base than a tree a thousand years its junior.

The tall ferns, the oxalis and the little star flower, and the flesh-colored western azalea and pink rhododendron which peek out from beneath the big trees along the Klamath river cannot be much different from the ferns and forest flowers and shrubs which have been opening to the morning dews of California from time immemorial. But beyond their own shade the big trees look out on a changed prospect. The Yurok Indians still cut redwood to make the dugout canoes by which they still travel along their peaceful rivers. But they are fewer than they were; and the chug-chug of white men's motorboats begins to be heard, even up-river, in fishing season.

Every year the craze for good roads sends the long white fingers of machine civilization further and further into what has remained, deep into the Twentieth century, the wild country of northern California. Sometimes I think that those groves of redwoods, dedicated to the founders and the money-raisers, as they look down on the long streams of motor cars that wind along the new Redwood highway, must feel lost and lonely. Where does a redwood fit in a world of stream-lined cars and managed currencies and international balances of trade?—Lewis Gannett, in the New York Herald Tribune.

Freak Thunder Storm Made Weird Spectacle

In the log of the British steamer Moravian, Capt. A. Simpson described a thunder storm on December 30, 1902, just within range of Cape Verde lighthouse. At 1:30 a. m., a warm puff of dust-laden wind came off the African shore. Lightning, at first distant on the northeast horizon, became almost continuous, with loud thunder.

All the stars were visible; only upper clouds, no cumulus, in the sky. Captain Simpson had never before experienced a severe thunder storm without cloud. Charles Fitzhugh Talman, who describes this freak thunder storm in his Science Service feature "Why the Weather?" goes on:

"For fully an hour the sky was one blaze of lightning, and wire ropes, mastheads, yardarms, derrick ends, etc. were lighted up. All the stays seemed to have glow lamps three to four feet apart, and the mastheads and yardarms a bright light at their extremities.

"The most remarkable part of the phenomenon was the extraordinary sound emitted throughout. It was, says the log, exactly like the noise of the sparks from the carbons of an arc lamp; or as if several thousands of cicadas had taken up their quarters in the rigging; or the crackling of burning grass or twigs.

"This noise was not local near the bridge, but the officers reported it all over the ship, even in the neighborhood of the noisy steering gear."—Literary Digest.

Doomsday

The end of the world is in sight, according to the inhabitants of Pitcairn island, and they are making no provision for the future, says the Montreal Herald. They are not planting young coconuts this year nor storing up anything for the future. The 193 people of the island are the descendants of English sailors who mutinied on the warship Bounty in 1790 and Tahitian women. Because of their isolation in mid-Pacific, the islanders are self-supporting. Coconuts and other fruits brought to the island by the crew of the Bounty are still growing there. Some of the agricultural implements still used were made from the iron of the Bounty. Visitors are not allowed to smoke there. Neither are they permitted to drink alcohol or wear shorts.

Wanted Her to Shrink

Little Ellen heard it explained that "shrink" means "to grow smaller." A few evenings later we went to a movie and in front of Ellen's seat sat a very stout woman. After squirming around for some time in her seat, trying to look past the wide shoulders of the woman in front, Ellen leaned over and whispered. "Please, lady, do you mind shrinking a little so I can see the picture?"

Farmer-Labor Picnic at Thief River Falls Sunday

An exceptionally high class program of speeches and sports is promised at the Farmer-Labor picnic at Squaw Point, Thief River Falls next Sunday, August 27, to which Farmer-Laborites from all parts of Northwestern Minnesota are invited.

Heading the list of speakers is Attorney-General Harry H. Peterson, one of the outstanding speakers of the Farmer-Labor party, next to Governor Olson the most influential man in deciding matters of importance to the people of the state.

Another man, C. D. Egley of St. Paul, has not appeared before in Thief River Falls, but is widely known thruout the Dakotas and Montana as the "little fighter from the Farmers' Union," and as a speaker who always draws a crowd of farmers from fifty to sixty miles away whenever he appears. His talk should be of special interest during the present slump in the livestock market, which is one of the worst in years.

State Senator George Lommen of Eveleth and Representative Gustaf Erickson of Spooner may also speak. Altho a young man, Senator Lommen is a forceful and eloquent speaker. Representative Erickson is serving his fifth term, in the legislature and is one of the best informed men on the problems of Northern Minnesota.

There will also be a program of sports and stunts, with something of interest to everyone. Parking space will be provided on the grounds, and free coffee will be served.

Threshing Runs

Bill Paskewitz and John Benitt have the largest threshing run around here this fall. They were the first ones to pull out with their rig and, have up to the present time run steady for 17 days and expect to have that many days left. They are doing the threshing on eighteen farms this year and turned down nine jobs more.

So far as we have been able to find out from some of the local threshermen here, this community has fourteen threshing rigs operating here this fall. Out of this gang of humming birds one is imported from near Thief River Falls and one outfit is from Newfolden.

W. McMurray and Ole Lunke threshed out the biggest and best crops around here so far this fall.

Beaulah Bennes entertained a number of young folks, to a party in honor of Florence, Valborg and Hildred Ordahl at her home on Tuesday evening.

Late last week we received word that Gertrude Voth and Eleanor Larson, 4 - H canning team, had won first prize on their demonstration given on Crookston Aug. 2. They will get a free trip to the Minnesota State Fair.

Dr. Smith of Thief River Falls will be here on Saturday afternoon to inoculate children for Diphtheria. Those whom have children that they wish to have inoculated are asked to bring them to the schoolhouse in Holt on Saturday afternoon, August 26, at 2 p. m. The cost will be $1.50 per child.

Let's Have More Land O'Lakes Cream

Sour milk and cream are the result of at least three things: Hot weather, dirty containers, and neglect. Prompt cooling of warm milk, clean equipment, and frequent marketing add to the producers' returns from dairying. Sweet, clean cream makes good Land O'Lakes butter.

Head-On Train Collision at State Fair

A thrilling head-on crash between two giant locomotives drawing cars, speeding down a mile stretch of track will be the headline feature of Thrill Day, Friday, September 8 at the Minnesota State Fair.

The stupendous train collision will climax a program replete with breath-taking stunts on land and in the air. Hair-raising motorcycle races, a motorcyclist crashing through a solid board wall, new and novel parachute drops, acrobatics in super-fast planes all combine to give State Fair patrons the greatest afternoon of thrills in history.

The leviathans of the rails will be in readiness at each end of the track in full view of the thronged grandstand; the engineers will open the throttles wide, tie down the whistle cords and leap for life. The two thundering monsters will speed toward each other in a mass of steam and smoke—then the crash!! The picture gives an idea what may happen.

State To Buy Hay For Drouth Stricken Area

If there is any good hay land left around Holt, a bunch of farmers are going to make a little stake putting up hay for the State this fall.

Farmers here are still making hay. Well they should, for they can sell all the surplus crop. The state is buying hay here now at $7.00 a ton baled and delivered on cars here on the tracks.

Those whom have hay to sell should have same inspected so that they don't go and waste any time and money in baling a grade of hay that won't sell as the state want a fair grade of feeding hay to ship to the drouth stricken area.

From reports received here it is indicated that several cars of hay will be baled and shipped out within the next two weeks.

Drs. Roome and Scott of the cities were dinner guests at the Christ Engen home Sunday.

The June tax settlement from the 87 counties of the state netted the state government about $5,158,825.75, or $707,037.60 less than the June, 1932 settlement, according to an annoucement made by Julius A. Schmahl state treasurer.

FREE CHILDREN'S DAY STATE FAIR FEATURE

Special plans are being made by the management of the Minnesota State Fair, September 2 to 9, to play host to 100,000 children on Saturday, September 9, the closing day of the Fair.

Tickets for this gala Children's Day have been distributed by the publisher of this paper in co-operation with other newspapers of the state. Tickets are good for admission, not only at the outside gates, but also to the special Children's Grandstand Show at 10 A. M.

Exhibitors, concessionnaires and others connected with the State Fair are co-operating in every possible way to make it a big day for the youngsters.

FREE CAMP GROUNDS AT THE STATE FAIR

An extremely low cost family vacation is made available to visitors to the Minnesota State Fair and Northwest Livestock Show, September 2 to 9, through a combination of the new 25 cent admission price and the free camp ground.

The camp ground, located in a grove of trees on Machinery Hill, is under the supervision of the Minnesota Farm Bureau Federation with Leland J. Melrose in charge. Visitors will find two types of accommodations. They may either bring their own camping equipment or they may rent for a nominal charge one of the tents supplied by the Fair.

A Proposition

Due to the fact that so many peat fires are roaming at will here burning up hay and making it hard for the farmers, it seems queer that some of the township officials don't petition the state to have one of the Civilian Conservation Corps stationed here to relieve the situation.

Let's get our heads together and maybe something can be done yet this fall to protect property that is in the path of these creeping peat fires. We believe that if you ask for it that help will be furnished or, else the state will have to buy you hay if the fire takes what you have put up.

Successful Bus Bidders

The successful bidders for the jobs of driving the local school busses for the coming year are: Leo Horien, route one; Nils O. Johnson, route two; and Thorval Kolden, route three. The jobs were let cheaper this year then a year ago and, probably at the lowest figures since the bus routes were established.

The members of the board of education, who are doing all they can in the interest of the local taxpayers, let it be known that they were set to reduce all expenses this year which may have had a lot to do with getting the low bids.

Wheat Allotment

A large delegation of farmers were in on Tuesday evening to take in the big wheat allotment meeting. We were not able to be there so, can not say much about the subject other than that somebody is going to get some money out of the deal. No, we won't get it. So don't go getting excited as very little is said about keeping the small business place alive.

Mr. and Mrs. H. O. Hanson and family returned home Sunday evening after a trip down to Iowa and a few days visit with relatives in South Dakota. Mrs. Ole Hanson of Huron, So. Dak., accompanied them back here for a short visit.

Prize Drawing Postponed On Account of Sickness

The businessmen of Holt have decided to postpone the Prize Day drawing and Band Concert scheduled to be held Saturday evening, Aug. 26, to Saturday night, Sept. 2.

This action was taken after it was announced that a few families throuhout the community were sick with Diphtheria. It is not a good policy to have any large gatherings while there is any such sickness around as it may break out to be an epidemic and, with the starting of school only a short time away it was decided best to postpone the doing.

Don't forget that the drawing will be held Sat. Sept. 2.

The Weather

The first big rain we have had here since June, dropped down on us kind of unexpectedly late Tuesday night. It had been so many signs of rain here lately and nothing come of it that, the people thought the weatherman had gone bugs when he opened the gate and let it pour. We were treated to another good shower Wednesday night.

According to word from some of the farmers here, the crops they have been threshing the past week have yielded better than they expected.

Cuba in Turmoil as Machado Refuses to Quit the Presidency—Germany Rebuffs Britain and France—National Recovery Progress.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

GERARDO MACHADO, president of Cuba, appeared to be reaching the end of his rope, but was stubbornly defiant of his opponents and flatly rejected the plan offered by American Ambassador Sumner Welles for settlement of the island's political turmoil. Mr. Welles told Machado that he should ask congress for a leave of absence after appointing an acceptable man for the position of secretary of state; that secretary, according to the Cuban constitution, would succeed to the presidency in event that office became vacant. He would then select a cabinet representative of all political factions, constitutional reforms would be submitted to congress and later to a constitutional convention; and the vice presidential office would be filled by either the congress or the supreme court.

Gerardo Machado

To this proposition President Machado replied:

"I am and will continue to be the president of the Republic of Cuba, exercising all of my constitutional prerogatives. Of these I cannot relinquish the smallest part without becoming a traitor to the confidence reposed in me by the people of Cuba when they freely gave their votes to me, or without diminishing the independence and sovereignty of a republic that I assisted in founding, having fought in the war for independence."

The Cuban congress supported Machado in his determination to retain his office, and the mediation efforts of Ambassador Welles were denounced as detrimental to the sovereignty of the republic. To those who know conditions on the island this is not surprising. The basis of Machado's power is the state lottery. He controls this institution and by his favor many leading congressmen are able to realize large sums from the sale of lottery tickets.

What the people think of Machado was plainly indicated by the events just preceding the crisis described. It was reported in Havana that the president had resigned and immediately a great throng began demonstrating joyfully. But the police and troops attacked viciously, killing some and wounding many, and the marchers fled in dismay. Martial law was declared and the city was patroled, but acts of violence were frequent.

For several days the city had been tied up by a general transportation strike that involved many industries. The government announced it had granted the demands of the laborers, but the union men refused to return to work while constitutional guaranties of freedom remained suspended.

Cuban politicians thought Machado's rejection of Welles' peace plan would lead to intervention by the United States, but in Washington this was considered quite unlikely. To send our marines to the island would be contrary to President Roosevelt's declared policy, and would stultify the position he took concerning the Japanese in Manchuria.

Mr. Welles declared that mediation was not ended, and Machado in his statement said: "I am disposed to mediate with my political adversaries and to concede to them their just demands to any extent that will not diminish the authority or the prestige of the institutions of the republic or the head of the state."

SECRETARY OF STATE CORDELL HULL, back from the London conference, is again in his offices at the State department, and has lost none of his internationalism. He still believes all nations can and should co-operate to end the world depression, and says domestic programs for raising prices and reducing unemployment are but the preludes to such co-operation. Mr. Hull also announced that the United States was ready and willing to promote close trade and commercial relations with the countries of Latin America, and suggested the negotiation of specific commercial agreements.

Sec'y Hull

In advocating bi-lateral trade agreements under the most favored nation principle, Hull explained that such agreements would relate primarily to commodities of a noncompetitive nature. He explained that reciprocal trade agreements would not necessarily conflict with most favored nation treaties, because such agreements would be thrown open to signature by other nations which, however, might not be interested in the products affected by the treaties because the treaties would affect particular products which would best be manufactured in some one nation.

Explaining why the economic conference did not achieve the full measure of success that had been hoped for, Hull said the various nations found that their economic problems and the problem of co-operation were much more difficult than had been imagined. Nevertheless, he was unwilling to consider the London gathering of 66 nations a failure.

FRENCH fears of another war with Germany were sharply stimulated by the abrupt refusal of the Hitler government to consider the parallel requests made by Great Britain and France that Nazi propaganda in Austria be discontinued. The two protesting nations declared the course Germany was pursuing was in violation of the spirit of the four power peace pact recently signed; but their ambassadors were told by the German foreign office that the Berlin government failed to see any reason for application of the four power treaty in this instance, and that Germany regarded as inadmissible this interference in the German-Austrian trouble.

Italy had declined to join Britain and France in their protest, but did make friendly representations to Berlin concerning the Nazi aerial propaganda over Austrian territory. The Italian government was informally advised that Germany would take steps immediately to end this practice. This eased the situation considerably, but French statesmen were pessimistic and believed the whole affair would lead to the smashup of the disarmament conference when it reassembles in the fall.

ONE of the most important branches of the NRA, the national labor mediation board, met in Washington, formally organized and got busy at once, taking up first a controversy in New Orleans. Senator Robert F. Wagner of New York, chairman of the board, was on vacation in Europe but messages were sent to him asking that he return immediately. His secretary represented him at the board's sessions, the other members present being Walter C. Teagle, Dr. Leo Wolman, Louis E. Kirstein, John L. Lewis, William Green and Gerard Swope.

Senator Wagner

Henry I. Harriman, president of the United States Chamber of Commerce, is highly optimistic concerning the employment situation. At San Francisco he predicted that 7,000,000 persons would be re-employed by the end of this year.

BUY liberally now, but buy only from dealers who display the blue eagle, is the advice of Gen. Hugh Johnson, national recovery administrator. His justifiable expectation is that prices soon will advance as the various codes get into operation and the purchasing power of the people increases. At the same time the recovery administration is taking steps to keep the retailers within the terms of their agreements and to check profiteering. Housewives and wage earners over the entire country are being organized for house to house and store to store canvasses to insure against infractions of codes and to prevail on buyers to patronize only blue eagle businesses.

Miss Mary Hughes, director of the women's section of the emergency reemployment campaign, announced completion of an organization in 48 states to carry on the educational and "policing" work. Violators of codes and agreements are threatened with publication of their names.

Deputy Administrator A. D. Whiteside, in charge of the retail store temporary code, said he had received reports from many parts of the country that retail stores are entering agreements to shorter hours of operation so they will not have to hire additional workers. The enforced creation of more jobs is the major objective of the campaign.

In numerous cases stores also are "staggering" their employees to avoid an increase of their forces, Whiteside said. He sent a sharp warning to the Indiana Retail Grocers' association, which was intended as an admonition to retailers generally and which was immediately effective.

Among the many codes offered was one for the daily and Sunday newspapers.

ARIZONA became the twenty-first state to ratify the prohibition repeal amendment, the wets winning by a majority of more than 3 to 1. Their victory was unexpectedly complete, although the drys had failed to muster enough votes to place delegates on the ballot.

Mrs. Isabella Greenway, national Democratic committeewoman and a personal friend of President and Mrs. Roosevelt, easily captured the Democratic nomination to fill the congressional post vacated by Lewis Douglas when he was named director of the federal budget. The victory insured her election because of the absence of Republican opposition.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT by his appeal to both sides and Hugh Johnson by vigorous argument and threat brought the big bituminous coal strike in Pennsylvania to an end. Their efforts were ably seconded by Edward F. McGrady, the NRA labor representative in the controversy. At first many of the workers were inclined not to obey the order of the union chiefs to return to the mines, but when Mr. McGrady arrived at Uniontown by plane and told the men: "I am acting for the President of the United States and asking you to go back to work," they cheered him, picked up their lamps and got back to the pits. The trouble was mainly concerning recognition by the operators of the nationally organized unions.

Under terms of the truce reached in Washington the miners are to lay their problems before a board appointed by the President, pending acceptance of the coal code. Miners are to employ their own checkweighmen to calculate the amount of coal produced, upon which their pay depends.

CHINA'S last faint chance to recover Manchuria and Jehol from Japan probably has disappeared, for Gen. Feng Yu-hsiang, the independent commander who had been leading the fight against Japanese aggression, has given up and signed a peace pact with the national government. Under the agreement he abdicates all titles, turns over the command of his troops to the national government and retires to political obscurity. Gen. Sung Cheh-Yuan will become governor of Chahar province, seat of Feng's most recent operations, and the government will be reorganized.

Feng Yu-hsiang

Feng has been one of modern China's most romantic figures and his persistent opposition worried Japan not a little. His capitulation is attributed to a lack of funds and munitions as well as mutiny and dissatisfaction among his own men, said at one time to have numbered 20,000. Added were Japanese threats to boycott Kalgan, and the vastly superior national government forces sent against him.

THREE recognized authorities on economics and finance had a significant conference with the President at the summer White House in Hyde Park, N. Y. They were James Warburg, one of the fiscal experts for the American delegation at the London conference, and Profs. George F. Warren of Cornell university and James H. Rogers of Yale university.

The two professors brought to the President a report on the studies they have been conducting for him, including the budget, taxation, the tariffs, and particularly the possibility of adopting a dollar which would be geared to the commodity price index, rising and falling in value with the values of wholesale commodities.

TWO bold French aviators, Maurice Rossi and Paul Codos, set a new record for non-stop flight and are due to receive a million francs from the French government. Starting from New York, they flew almost directly to Rayak, Syria, about 500 miles further than the previous record. They intended to go to Bagdad but couldn't quite make it. Rossi said he thought the record would be accepted at 9,300 kilometers (5,775.3 miles), although they actually flew more than 10,000 kilometers (6,210 miles) at an average speed of 166 kilometers (82.28 miles) an hour.

General Balbo and his Italian seaplane fleet reached the Azores, some of the planes coming down at Ponta Delgada and the others at Horta. After a night of festivity and rest the big planes took off for home via Lisbon; but one of them, commanded by Captain Ranieri, upset and was left behind. Lieutenant Squaglia was killed, Ranieri was injured, and the others of the crew suffered from shock and bruises.

OUR government is getting out of the shipping business as fast as possible. Under an executive order from the President the shipping board is now abolished, and the merchant fleet corporation and its remaining 38 ships and 1,000 employees are transferred to the Department of Commerce for direction. Secretary Roper's department intends to carry on the policy of winding up commercial maritime activities.

Two years ago the corporation had approximately 300 ships. It had hundreds of employees scattered about this country and in foreign ports. Sale and lease of its shipping lines have reduced both personnel and ships.

Under reorganization the Commerce department may re-employ within the next four months as many of the workers as it needs. Many will be absorbed temporarily by the department, officials expecting the force to be decreased gradually as the fleet corporation's affairs are closed up.

VIOLENCE in the New York state milk strike increased daily and Gov. Herbert Lehman, though reluctant to call out the National Guard, consulted with its commander and prepared to take that extreme step if it were deemed necessary. The state police, acting as guards for milk trucks, were in conflict with the strikers in many localities, using bullets and tear gas against the armed farmers. Most of the cities and towns obtained plenty of milk.

News of Minnesota

EVENTS of the week throughout the "State of Ten Thousand Lakes" told in brief form

Dodge Center — Dodge Center's fourth annual community flower show was held with numerous exhibits in 13 classes.

Belle Plaine—A two-day observance of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the West Union Swedish church, was held here.

St. Paul—More than $1,000,000 already has been paid by Minnesota millers, wholesalers and bakers on the flour processing tax levied July 9.

St. Paul—The state executive council made available for veterans' relief in Minnesota $225,000 from the $1,500,000 state relief fund set up by the last legislature.

Fergus Falls—The city council approved applying to the federal government for a loan of $284,770, the money to be used to install a sewer system and sewage disposal plant.

St. Cloud—The recall petition asking removal of the three present city officials was rejected by the commission on the grounds that it was insufficiently signed.

Hutchinson—Material salvaged from the Zion Evangelical church at Acoma, razed after more than 60 years service to the community, will be used to enlarge the Bethlehem Lutheran church here.

Hamlin—A premium list totaling $70,105 to be offered for educational exhibits at the Minnesota State Fair and Northwest Livestock show, September 2 to 9, was announced by Raymond A. Lee, secretary.

Alexandria—A large delegation accompanied by the high school girl's drum corps and a little German band made their third get-acquainted tour, visiting the villages of Nelson, Carlos, Miltona and Parkers Prairie.

Redwood Falls — The Redwood County Game Protection League has adopted resolutions favoring immediate steps in the sewage disposal project to abolish what is termed a present menace to Redwood Falls society.

Lake Wilson—Ole Oldson, 91, who lives on a farm near here, is a consistent man. He has lived on the same farm continuously since settling here in 1889 and has subscribed to the local newspaper without interruption for 34 years.

Olivia—Two Mexicans are in jail here accused of breaking the seals on three carloads of hogs on a stock train. Several hogs were killed and thrown from the train while about 70 are missing, having evidently fallen out the car doors.

St. Paul—The Federal Home Loan bank board conferred with Otto Bremer, state manager for the Home Owners' Loan corporation, and selected St. Paul, as headquarters for the state with branch offices at Duluth and Minneapolis.

Fridley—Herding cows on a roadway adjoining his father's farm near here, Theodore Therris, came upon a freshly dug grave. In it was the body of Edward (Speed) Gabriel, Minneapolis former convict, riddled with shot gun wounds.

St. Paul—There has been a noticeable decrease in the number of mishaps on highways since the start of the united campaign of police throughout the state in testing lights and brakes, John P. Arnoldy, chief of the state highway patrol said.

St. Paul—Revenues of the state highway department from automobile license fees so far this year total $5,896,000 compared with $9,779,000 in the same period of 1932. This is a drop of $3,883,000 in the first seven months of 1933. The decrease is due to reductions in license fees made by the last legislature.

Minneapolis—Business in Minnesota benefits to the extent of $4,000 a day because of the 61 civilian conservation corps camps in operation in the state. That amount is spent daily to feed the workers engaged in road building, the elimination of fire hazards, planting of trees, construction of game shelters and beautification of roads.

Montgomery—An old threshing engine, equipped with wooden wheels, has been shipped from here to Detroit to be added to Henry Ford's Dearborn Institute collection of early American machinery. The engine was brought into the Montgomery community in 1882 and was largely used in harvesting operations previous to 1900. It has been owned during the past by Joseph T. Rynda.

Maple Lake—There is a movement on foot to organize a wheat allotment program here. W. C. Coffey, dean of the agricultural college, University of Minnesota, has appointed R. S. Harris to serve in Wright county as the agricultural emergency assistant.

St. Paul—Minnesota's $10,600,000 federal aid and highway program, awaiting formal approval by Washington authorities, provides for the improvement of more than 1,200 miles of road, construction of 24 bridges and seperation of grades at several railroad crossings.

Western Alfalfa Weevil Spreading

Entomologist Predicts That All Districts Will Be Reached in Time.

By J. H. Newton, Deputy State Entomologist, Colorado College Experiment Station.—WNU Service.

Occurrence of the alfalfa weevil in all the alfalfa-producing areas of the Western states is only a matter of time. First discovered in American alfalfa fields near Salt Lake City in 1904 or 1905, this native insect of Europe has spread since then to portions of seven of the neighboring states.

It was in 1917 that the weevil was first discovered in Colorado near Paonia, in Delta county. Since then it has spread to parts of Gunnison, Montrose, Ouray, Moffat, Routt, Rio Blanco, Garfield and Mesa counties. There is also an isolated infestation at Glenwood Springs, Garfield county. The spread of this insect has been at an average rate of six miles per season.

Careful scouting work has failed to reveal the alfalfa weevil east of the continental divide in Colorado.

Quarantines were never expected to prevent the spread of the weevil that can be expected from flight and other natural means. They are intended to:

1 Prevent promiscuous hauling of hays and straws and thus cut off the most important avenue for carrying the insect into uninfested areas.

2 To meet the quarantines of 22 states, thus assuring them that we are reasonably careful to see that our agricultural products are not carriers of the weevil.

3. To keep outside markets open for all hay grown in uninfested territory.

Orchard Irrigation Is Used by Ohio Growers

Irrigation of orchards is the new thing in Ohio agriculture. Prompted by losses incurred in the drought of three years ago, Ohio fruit growers in increasing numbers resort to canvas hose and pipe line irrigation to bring their crops through dry periods.

C. E. Dutton, manager of the Ohio Orchard company at Milford Center, in keeping records of costs and profits of the irrigated sections and nonirrigated sections of his orchard in 1932, found the total cost of irrigating Rome Beauty trees amounted to $11.30 an acre. Yield of fruit was increased 25 per cent. Irrigated apples cost less to produce than the non-irrigated fruit, owing to the increased yields.

Increased value of the apples on the irrigated section, owing both to increased yields and improved quality, was $66.80 an acre.

Water is being distributed in the irrigated orchards through "ooze" type of canvas hose. The water oozes through the side walls of the hose lines distributed among the trees. No nozzle sprinklers are used.

In dry seasons irrigation is continued through until the fruit ripens. From two to three acre-inches of water are applied each time.

Fermenting Tomato Seed

Allowing tomato pulp to ferment in the process of saving seed helps control the spread of bacterial canker, a plant disease that is very destructive to tomatoes in many parts of the country. At one time all tomato seeds were obtained by allowing them to ferment in the pulp. Recently high-speed seed-extracting machines have come into common use for separating these seeds. Studies by the United States Department of Agriculture in co-operation with the Utah agricultural experiment station have shown that seed fermentation largely kills the canker organism present on them, whereas seed extracted by the machines transmit the disease more generally.

Age of Freshening

In the examination of Advanced Registry records, Prof. C. W. Turner of the Missouri College of Agriculture has drawn the following conclusions concerning the effect of age at first freshening upon the later production of heifers: "The most efficient milk and fat production (utilization of nutrients) will be obtained by breeding animals to calve at from 20 to 24 months of age, maximum production at about 30 months of age, and within 5 to 10 per cent of the maximum production at from 23 to 28 months, depending upon the breed."

Copper Carbonate for Smut

Copper carbonate is the most effective chemical for the control of covered smut of barley, according to the results of experiments conducted at the University of Idaho agricultural experimental station farm at Sandpoint. Copper carbonate has been used for the prevention of bunt or stinking smut in wheat for many years, but it has not been previously recommended for the control of the smuts of other cereals.

Milking Time Respected

When a large farm was moved by two special trains in England, recently, the railway arranged the schedule so that the cows could be milked at their usual times. The trains left West Meon immediately after milking time in the evening and arrived at Stalbridge early the next morning, and the 17 cows apparently were satisfied. Fourteen farm hands, nearly 100 head of live stock and several carloads of furniture and implements were moved.—Washington Star.

Square Deal for Son or Daughter

Challenge to Parents Who Must Give Thought to the Future.

This contribution to the seemingly never-ending volumes dealing with parental problems is from the pen of a woman writer noted for the broadness of her views and her outlook on modern life:

"Would you marry your own daughter?"

"Since I saw that question somewhere it has stayed with me, haunting me, challenging me to challenge the parents who read this column.

"It is a startling question, isn't it—the most provocative that I have heard in many a day. It seems to reach out a hand to parents with children growing up to marriage, parents who like most of us are quite hot and bothered over this increasing menace of divorce, parents who like most of us are concerned about what is going to happen to our children in this gamble of modern times which is still called marriage. It seems to reach out to those parents and—sort of put them on the spot!

"It sort of points to the other side of the picture. The question is not only what is your child going to get, but what is your child going to give?

"Would you marry your own daughter?

"Would you?

"And mothers, would you marry your own son?

"You who have been through the mill of sharing life with another person—would you want to marry your own children? Would you want to live with them as the partner who is to share your hopes and dreams and your burdens and responsibilities?

"You who have learned the need in marriage for unselfishness, for good humor, good sportsmanship, generosity, forbearance, strength and courage and that superb quality that I, for want of a better name, call 'standability'—would you be willing to stake your chance of finding these in a life partner—in your own children?

"If you would you need not worry about your children. They will not land in the divorce court. They will be nappy. If you would not, some other mother's son or daughter is not going to get a square deal."

Washing Woolens

Whether it's baby Jane's sweater, or grandma's woolly shawl, woolens need a little care when they are washed, to stay soft and fluffy the way we like them.

First, it's important always to use a mild, neutral soap, preferably in flake form. Next, always use lukewarm or cool water. Never put woolens into hot water as this is very likely to make them stiff, and to fade the color. And do not rub or scrub woolens or run them too long in a washing machine. Gently force out the dirt by squeezing the suds through the garments. And finally, dry woolens at moderate temperature. Don't expose to freezing, nor to excessive heat.

The Silver Flute

SYNOPSIS

On her eighteenth birthday, Barbara, motherless daughter of Christopher Thorne, artist, receives a birthday ring from Bruce MacLain, young artist friend of the family, but more than friend to Barbara. Barbara and Bruce go picnicking. He tells her a story of a gypsy boy, a little gypsy girl whom he loves, and the song of a silver flute. She knows it is her own love tale. Her father is killed in an accident. Relatives arrive and take charge of things. Barbara fears the children's separation and its effects. Desperate, she plans to take her two brothers and sister and run away to her godfather, "Uncle Stephen" Drake. He, a bachelor, forty years old, still has vivid recollections of Barbara's mother, whom he had loved eighteen years before. He had made up his mind to propose that night to Emily Trent, so that his well-ordered household might have a permanent head. But the arrival of the children interrupts the proposal. Barbara tells him why they ran away, and he feels his heart warm to the brave daughter of his early love. But he tells her he must send them all back. Kit is taken ill. Stephen finds himself strangely unable to resume his lover-like feeling for Emily.

Uncle Herbert was very angry, indeed. Stephen realized that when Uncle Herbert exploded in the office. He was glad he had sent him the office address. The children would be spared the worst of the explosion.

Aunt Lola, who had come with Uncle Herbert to represent the relatives, wasn't angry. She was merely very much hurt. It was Barbara's fault, she repeated, whenever Uncle Herbert paused to catch a breath. Dear little Gay would never have thought of such a thing. Barbara, she feared, was like her mother, willful and headstrong, with no proper regard for other people's feelings.

"Barbara is an unusual child," Stephen said, nettled by Aunt Lola's remarks. "Impulsive, perhaps. But not headstrong. She wanted to keep the children together."

"A notion! All a notion!" Uncle Herbert stormed.

"We can't blame her too much, I suppose," Aunt Lola said with a fluttering sigh. "It's the way she has been brought up. Christopher Thorne was—" Respect for the dead caused Aunt Lola to pause. But her expression implied many things. "Poor Barbara!" She sighed again. "I'm afraid she hadn't a happy life."

Stephen had thought her the happiest person he had ever known—the Barbara he had loved. Through Uncle Herbert's voice, he heard her voice, gay and amused; through Aunt Lola's perfume, which was making his head ache a little, he smelled the roses of southern France. It seemed an act of treachery to Barbara to deliver her children into the hands of the enemy. But what in the world could he do?

"Kit is a bit ill," he said when Uncle Herbert's rage had subsided a little and Aunt Lola had ceased to sigh. "We'll have to keep him a week or two."

Uncle Herbert's expression indicated that this was the final indignity.

"I must get back to the office," he said, louder than was necessary. "I have wasted a great real of time."

"There's no reason for you to stay." Stephen felt that his patience was fraying at the edges. "We'll send Kit to you as soon as he is well enough to travel."

"What about Jamie?" Aunt Lola asked. "Aunt Josephine is very much annoyed." She thought of the irate old lady in the red brick Providence house.

Stephen thought of her, too—as Barbara had described her. He felt a disturbing desire to guard and protect the children. He knew it was an unreasonable desire. But it seemed a shame that Barbara should be forced to live where she had once been so unhappy. He was reluctant to send her to Providence. Stephen, of course, knew nothing at all about Bruce.

"I can take Gay at once, I suppose?" Aunt Lola asked. "There are such delightful children at the hotel. I'm sure she will have a lovely time."

Hotel children! Stephen thought with a silent groan. He had seen them in many places, pert, over-dressed girls, little boys who bullied the porters and maids and smoked cigarettes on the sly. Gay hadn't Barbara's character. Looking at Aunt Lola, it was easy to see what pretty Gay would probably become. Still, there was no reason why he should make himself responsible. He was sorry for the four Thornes. But what in the world could he do?

"I suppose so," he said with no great enthusiasm. Gay, he thought, would be entirely willing to go with Aunt Lola.

But Gay surprised him, when they reached Stephen's home that afternoon. She sat on the side of the huge bed helping Kit fit together one of the picture puzzles. Barbara had been reading aloud to Jamie when Stephen brought Aunt Lola and Uncle Herbert into the room. The reading had stopped abruptly and the color had paled from her cheeks. A little of it returned when Gay said, sweetly but firmly:

"Oh no, Aunt Lola. I can't leave Kit when he's sick."

"But we mustn't impose on Mr. Drake." Aunt Lola was hurt by Gay's lack of interest in the trip to Florida.

"Are we imposing?" Gay asked, glancing up at Stephen from under her long curled lashes.

They all looked at Stephen, Barbara, Kit, Gay and Jamie. He felt that he couldn't fail them.

"It's pleasant having you here," he said and realized, with a start of surprise, that what he said was true.

Aunt Lola was plaintive but Gay was firm. She couldn't leave Kit when he was sick. If Uncle Stephen didn't mind, she would very much rather stay. "Uncle Stephen" didn't mind. It was decided that Gay should go to Florida later.

Uncle Herbert behaved very well. An excellent luncheon had mellowed his temper. He scolded the children for running away, in a somewhat jocular fashion. He asked Kit riddles and tousled Gay's curls and admired Jamie's electric trains. He was agreeable to Barbara. He produced a checkbook and pen.

"That's quite all right," Stephen said. "Let me take care of them, please."

"Couldn't think of it, Mr. Drake." Uncle Herbert was pompous and dignified. The family pride was at stake.

"I'd rather. They are my guests. I have some claim on them, you know," he added with a smile. "Barbara is my little fillette."

"My little fillette!" . . . Barbara felt a singing inside of herself. Uncle Stephen, she thought, was the kindest man in the world.

"If you insist—" Uncle Herbert said doubtfully.

"I certainly do."

"Well, well—" The checkbook was restored to Uncle Herbert's pocket. He looked kindly at the children. "We can't expect old heads on young shoulders, I suppose," he said to Stephen and accepted another cigar.

They left some time later, declining an invitation to dinner.

The children greeted him jubilantly when Stephen returned to the room where Kit lay, propped against pillows, after Aunt Lola and Uncle Herbert had gone. Jamie and Gay fell upon him with rapturous cries. Stephen felt himself smothered in thin young arms and lusty bear-like embraces. It did something strange to his heart. He looked over their heads at Barbara standing beside Kit's bed. Her eyes thanked him. She smiled her gayest smile. Bless them, he thought, with a lump in his throat. What jolly youngsters they were!

They sang lustily to tell Uncle Stephen how very happy they were.

Aunt Edith opened the door, her face beneath waved white hair very stern and disapproving.

"The doctor advised rest and quiet," she said when she could be heard.

"A little pleasant excitement won't hurt him." Stephen smiled at Kit, propped against the pillows. "We're celebrating," he said. "The enemy has been routed."

"Whoopee!" Jamie shouted, his freckled face shining with happy excitement.

They swung into the chorus again. "Chips" barked, Jamie, to Aunt Edith's horror, beat time with a pair of drumsticks that used to be Stephen's against the foot of the bed. Kit tinkled the spoon against the glass and croaked like a happy bullfrog.

"Gracious!" Aunt Edith thought and buttoned her lips together.

* * * * * * *

That evening Barbara wrote to Bruce—

" . . . Kit is sick, but not very, just a cold and a temperature. I was worried but Kit says it's 'an act of Providence'—you know the old-fashioned way he talks. Anyhow, Uncle Stephen will let us stay here until Kit is better, although he was provoked about us running away. I think he's getting to like us a little. He brought us presents last night—a lovely necklace for me—and he has been so kind about Kit.

"Aunt Lola and Uncle Herbert came today but they were very polite. I think they were impressed by Uncle Stephen's home. It's very elegant, Bruce. It's built out of stone with ivy all over it and stables (only they don't have horses now)—and greenhouses and lawns and gardens and lovely trees. And a butler!!! What do you think of that? It's a very educating experience to live in a house that has a name and a butler and cords with tassels to ring for the servants.

"There is a library just full of books and a drawing room all full of rosewood furniture and chandeliers with glass icicles dripping from them and cabinets full of the loveliest things; little jade trees and ivory elephants and flowers made out of glass. And a conservatory!!! I didn't know people had conservatories and drawing rooms except in books, did you, Bruce darling? But, of course, this is a very old house.

"We have a great deal to live up to because, although Mother's relatives are 'well to do,' they don't live in places like this. Gay is simply entranced! You know how she loves elegance! But I wish we were back in Provincetown with Martha scolding us and Manuel playing his accordion and Father coming in from the studio with paint on his trousers and his hair all mussed up, making jokes and telling us stories the way he used to do.

AGE FINDS JOY IN QUIET WAYS

Compensation for Passage of the Years.

Ever since the days of Cicero's "De Senectute," which we labored over in junior high, as they call it now, men have been fretting about old age, a writer in the Indianapolis News comments. It is generally considered a time of life to be dreaded because of the sadness connected with declining activity. But sometimes the window opens upon a new vista, and we follow Vida T. Scudder's pages in the Atlantic with joy because they seem so sane.

Having suddenly found herself arrived at the age of seventy, Miss Scudder is inspired to take up her pen for the benefit of those in like predicament. She regards it as a matter of triumph, rather than discouragement, to have reached a time when one may be glad to be left off of committees and like responsibilities, and spend the remainder of her days in the enjoyment of the scenes of life from the shelf to which she has been relegated, when one may read, not classics or any prescribed course, but just what has long been coveted as desirable or particularly restful.

Lady Mary Wortley Montague evidently had a like aspiration, writing to her daughter, Lady Bute: "Daughter, daughter! Don't scold, don't call names. You are always abusing my pleasures, which is what no mortal will bear. Trash, lumber, and stuff are the titles you give to my favorite amusements. We all have our play things; happy are they that can be contented with those they can obtain; those hours are spent in the wisest manner that can easiest shade the ills of life and are the least productive of ill consequences . . . . The active scenes are over at my age. I indulge with all the art I can, my taste for reading. If I would confine it to valuable books, they are almost as rare as valuable men. I must be content with what I can find." (What would she have thought of the output of books, today?)

Continuing, Lady Mary writes: "As I approach a second childhood, I endeavor to enter into the pleasures of it. Your youngest son is perhaps at this very moment riding on a poker with great delight, not at all regretting that it is not a gold one and much less wishing it an Arabian horse, which he would not know how to manage. I am reading an idle tale, not expecting wit or truth in it, and am very glad it is not metaphysics to puzzle my judgment or history to mislead my opinion. He fortifies his strength by exercise; I calm my cares by oblivion. The methods may appear low to busy people, but if he improves his strength and I forget my infirmities, we both attain very desirable ends." How Lady Mary would have enjoyed a jig-saw puzzle!

The typical old lady of a generation but lately gone, sat by the fire with white cap and spectacles, knitting socks for the whole family. Today, she dons a stylish stout, wears the new Oxford, in lieu of the somewhat passee lorgnette, and sallies forth to solve problems of politics or contract bridge. A dear young Hoosier friend sent me the following original verse:

GRANDMOTHERS

Whene'er I think of grandmothers,
I think of cherished things;
Of creamy, delicate old lace,
And dear remembered dreams.
I think of modest mignonette
Dew-drenched at new day's dawn;
Of perfumed sweetpea's pastel tints;
Of shade upon a lawn.
I think of Artemisia gray,
Like filagree of silver hair,
Of lips that speak of troubled hearts
Love's words of wisdom rare;
Of fragile Dresden china in
A corner cupboard old.
Of Eden hours of new-wed love,
Too sacred to be told;
Of shaded lights on autumn night.
And sound of summer rain;
Of new-born baby's lips against
My breast that stings with pain;
Of work-worn hands, that yet are soft
That minister with loving care;
Of love that makes e'en drudgery
A shining halo wear.
Oh precious, priceless grandmothers!
Without you, how great dearth!
Oh grandmothers! Life shows in you
True beauty on the earth.

SHE COULDN'T FIND IT

Fondly little Ruth's father and mother were watching their daughter rock back and forth ecstatically in the little black chair they had just brought home to her.

Proudly the father said: "We got a bargain in that little chair, all right!"

Whereupon Ruth proceeded to get out of the chair, look at it closely, and then to lift a woe-begone face and say:

"Where is it, daddy? I can't find any bargain in my chair!"—Indianapolis News.

Better Luck

"On what grounds?"

"You don't seem in a good temper."

MIGHT BE WORSE

A visitor to a seaside town was observing the crowd. "I suppose you serve a good many fish dinners," he remarked to the hotel proprietor.

"Yes, the people eat fish, mostly."

"I thought fish was supposed to be brain food, but these people are about the most unintelligent specimens of humanity I've ever seen."

"Well," returned the other with a shrug of his shoulders, "just think of what they'd look like if they didn't eat fish."

The Difficulty

"There's always room at the top," said the man who speaks sagaciously.

"Yes," replied Bronco Bob; "but the trouble is that in a lot o' games the best cards is at the bottom of the pack."

Her Wish

Child—Mother, dear, why has the canary quit singing?

Mother—Because it is molting, dear.

Child—I wish Aunt Martha would molt.—Border Cities Star.

Comedy Calculation

"You drop an occasional remark of considerable sapiency," said the close friend.

"I try to," answered Senator Sorghum. "Life has become so serious that comedy is regarded as excusable only in one who is able to sell it."

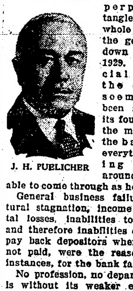
WHAT BANKING WENT THROUGH

By JOHN H. PUELICHER
American Bankers Association



J. H. PUELICHER

BANKING in its long career has been compelled to withstand many serious shocks, but it ran into the most perplexing entanglement of its whole history since the general breakdown of values in 1929. The commercial structure of the entire world seemed to have been shaken from its foundations and the marvel is that the banker, with everything breaking down all around him, was able to come through as he has.

General business failures, agricultural stagnation, income losses, capital losses, inabilities to meet debts and therefore inabilities of bankers to pay back depositors when loans were not paid, were the reasons, in most instances, for the bank failures.

No profession, no department of life is without its weaker elements, but had proper consideration been given to the relatively few instances in banking, had exaggerated and startling headlines been kept in true proportion, had banking not been used as a target for political self-seeking and with vote-seeking motives, had unfounded rumors not been spread the people's confidence might have been retained and financial losses, for many bank failures were caused that need not have happened.

There were factors in our banking experience which every earnest banker deplores—factors which many had worked years to eliminate, which it was fearfully recognized would aggravate any difficult days which might arise. One of the worst of these was due to political regulation which chartered many banks that should never have been chartered.

That there have been incompetence and dishonesty in banking is admitted. That the instances that did occur were used grossly to increase fear in the public mind, we affirm. We shall continue to strive for higher attainments in our profession and strive for laws that require competence and ability in management. That we cannot legislate honesty and unselfishness into either a banker or a borrower must be conceded, but dishonesty, wherever found, should be punished. It is as true in banking as elsewhere that no matter how good the law, dishonest and incompetent men can make it ineffective. Good laws are essential. We must strive for ever better ones, but their enforcement will come only as the public recognizes that it is a matter not of laws or codes alone but of the men who administer them.

The Public's Part

Our people must be brought to realize that the welfare of our country depends upon its banking system, that the strength of the banking system depends upon the public's faith and understanding and the vast majority of banks, because of faithful service rendered, even through the whole of this general breakdown, had the right to expect the trust and confidence of the people.

In every great catastrophe, no matter what its nature, no matter what its cause, someone must be crucified. The banker was this time selected. In the late 90's, political agitation started a tirade against the railroads. Some railroads may have done reprehensible things, but the agitation became so general and so violent as almost to destroy one of the fundamental factors in the progress of a country. Today the same thing has been done to the banker. In spite of all that has happened, the fact remains that even most of the banks which failed are paying out infinitely better than are investments in almost anything else.

Bankers Aiding Agriculture

State associations of bankers in many agricultural states are giving time and financial support to encourage practices among their farmers that will bring about better farm results.

The major activities reported from one state to the Agricultural Commission of the American Bankers Association which is nationally active in promoting this line of cooperation are as follows:

1. Drought relief work: Local banks have played a vital part in this work, being represented on the county committees for passing on all seed loans. These committees met practically every day during the spring to pass on the loans in order to get as quick action as possible. A total of 914 applications were received and handled by one committee, 833 being granted.
2. Four-H Club work: Bankers helped stimulate 4-H Club work, financing many members who otherwise could not have enrolled. They also helped finance fifteen 4-H Club delegates to the state club convention.
3. Livestock feeding: The banks cooperated with the Extension Service in the state and the railroads in increasing the amount of livestock feeding. Assistance was given the feeders in securing finances for their feeding operations.
4. Crop improvement: The bankers took part in the crop standardization program of the Extension Service and encouraged the farmers to use pure seed and in many cases made loans for this purpose.

One Dollar Fifty Per Year In Advance

H.O. Hanson, Editor and Publisher
Holt, Marshall County, Minnesota, Friday, September 1, 1933.
Volume 23, Number 18

School Will Open Here Monday, September 5

The local school will open on Tuesday, Sept. 5 for the 1933-1934 school year. The teaching staff will be the same as last year:

Edith Anderson — High School Principal
Alf. Sather—Upper Grades
Jeanette Lanman—Intermediate Grades
Eunice Johnson—Primary Grades
E. O. Nybakken — Superintendent

Pupils are urged to register on the opening day in order to facilitate the work of arranging the schedule of studies. Pupils from other districts who are enrolling for High School work for the first time are asked to bring their eighth grade diplomas or a transcript of their records.

The school plant has been thoroughly cleaned and the necessary repairs have been made so everything is in readiness for the opening day.

Band Members, Attention

The Holt Community Band was requested to play at the Prize Drawing tomorrow night, Saturday, Sept. 2, so band members are requested to be at the bandstand at 8 o'clock sharp.

Regular weekly rehearsals will be resumed Tuesday evening, Sept. 5, at the bandstand.

The Great Northern weedburner has made a run up this line this week. The section men had to work nights on this job as the fire does not travel off of the grade as much at night as it does in the day time.

Celebrated Golden Wedding

Mr. and Mrs. Hans Knutson, pioneers of this community, were greatly surprised on Sunday afternoon when relatives and friends gathered at their farm home east of town in observance of their golden wedding anniversary. The crowd, which numbered several hundred people, gathered at their home on Sunday, while Mr. and Mrs. Knutson were at Thief River Falls. The Holt Community Band were invited to take part in the program and played several numbers.

Rev. M. B. Ordahl of Binford, N. D., former pastor of the Nazareth Lutheran congregation here, was present and gave a talk in which he mentioned the pioneer life of the aged couple and the many changes that have taken place in this community since their coming here.

Mr. and Mrs. Knutson came here from Norway 43 years ago and settled on their homestead in East Valley township four miles east of Holt and have resided there ever since. Mr. Knutson was the first country blacksmith here and part of his old shop was viewed on Sunday as it stands in the grove back of the farm house.

Mr. and Mrs. Knutson have ten children, all of whom are married. They are: Mrs. Ole Lunke, John Knutson, Mrs. Ed Furr, and Mrs. Arthur Conklin, of Holt; Mrs. Theo. Johnson and Mrs. Wm. Cuthbert of Clan William, Sask., Canada; Mrs. Henry Hoard, Oscar Knutson, and Maynard Knutson, of Thief River Falls; and Clarence Knutson of Grand Forks. All of the children were home for the celebration with the exception of the two in Canada.

Governor Olson Pays Quarter For 1933 State Fair Ticket

Governor Olson (left) is shown purchasing the first 25 cent admission ticket to this year's Minnesota State Fair and Northwest Livestock Show, to be held from September 2 to 9. It was bought from Raymond A. Lee, secretary.

With the adoption of the 25 cent admission and "Everybody Pays" policy, the Fair management has abolished its complimentary list. No one, not even officials of the Fair, will be admitted through the outside gates, without first paying 25 cents.

"I am glad to buy my ticket for this year's State Fair," said Governor Olson. "I heartily approve the action of the management in eliminating all passes. The lowering of the admission to a quarter is another step in the right direction and brings the State Fair within reach of all citizens."

Mr. and Mrs. Knutson have been married for 57 years and celebrated their anniversary a little late, but nevertheless they have spent a happy married life and enjoyed the occasion of their anniversary very much.

After the program the afternoon was spent in visiting and taking pictures. A delicious lunch was served by the friends and relatives.

Mr. and Mrs. Knutson were presented with a cash purse as a token of remembrance.

Card of Thanks

We hereby wish to express our sincere thanks to our many relatives and friends for the great surprise given us on our golden wedding anniversary on Sunday.

We especialy wish to thank Rev. Ordahl for his inspiring words, the Holt Community Band for the fine concert; and the entire gathering for the cash purse given us and, all those whom had arranged for such a splendid day for us.

We thank you all.
Mr. and Mrs. Hans Knutson.

Rev. and Mrs. M. B. Ordahl and family whom have spent a few weeks vacation here, returned to their home at Binford, N. Dak., on Tuesday. While here Rev. Ordahl conducted services at the many places he served when he first came here twenty-five years ago and, during the eighteen years he was partor of the Nazareth Lutheran congregation here and several neighboring congregations.

Rev. S. T. Palm of Brookpark, Minn., a pioneer pastor here, visited at the Nils Lysne home last week. Mrs. Palm founded the Dorcas Society here about thirty years ago. Rev. Palm was present at the Dorcas Society meeting at the A. Bennes home on Wednesday afternoon of last week and, gave a short talk on his work.

A crew of local men are now busy refinishing the interior of the Nazareth Lutheran church. The Ladies Aid is sponsoring the project which consists of relining the interior of the church with heavy tin and two coats of paint.

C. L. Sandberg is supervising the work.

Someone who doesn't believe in raising a garden for themselves but, still likes the many vegetables and fruits grown in one, were so unkind one night last week as to steal all the big melons, some carrots and picked most of the big apples in the C. L. Sandberg garden.

Someone told us that a car in which five people were riding, hit a cow on the highway north of town Sunday morning and upset in the ditch. None of the people were hurt but the car was damaged quite bad. The cow seemed to stand the jolt a lot better as she walked home.

English services at Silver Creek Sunday at 11 a. m.

The Golden Valley Ladies Aid will meet at the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. Moberg Sunday. The services will commence promptly at 3 o'clock.

Luther League Sunday evening Sept. 3. Mrs. C. A. Davis and Mrs. Alfred Anderson will serve.

The Harvest Festival will be held Sept. 10. Rev. J.A. Johnson of Osakis has been secured as the afternoon speaker.

The Confirmants will meet on Monday at 1:00 p. m.

The Silver Creek Confirmants will meet Wednesday at 3 p. m.

The Golden Valley Confirmants will meet Sunday at the Moberg home.

Choir rehearsal Thursday evening at 8 p. m.

Church Dedication

The St. Petri church, three miles west of Grygla, will be dedicated by the Rt. Rev. Aastad, president of the northern Minnesota district, on Sunday, September 3.

The following ministers will take part in the dedication services: Rev. Bjorgon, Goodridge; Rev. Sabo, Mavie; Rev. Trelstad, Middle River; Rev. Bjornson, Rothsay; and Rev. Palm, Brook Park. In the afternoon, Dr. Brown, president of Concordia College, will address the audience. Music will be furnished by the St. Petri and Gatzke choirs, and a male quartet consisting of Olaf Anderson, John Loven, John Eastby, and John Olafson.

Free dinner will be served. A free will offering will be taken.

Delinquent Real Estate Taxes Being Collected

According to the way we see the situation now and, the way the county government is going into the business of cleaning up delinquent taxes, we are much afraid that some parties are going to have to do some moving this fall or, at least make some satisfactory arrangements as to whom and how much rent they will pay next year and how they are to pay same.

The county is going to rent out all tax delinquent land and collect in the rent for taxes and thru this method they hope to reach a lot of people whom have farmed places without paying taxes or rent.

Dogs Killed Sheep

O. H. Nohre reports that last week dogs got into his sheep fence one night and killed 13 head of nice sheep. Lucky for the owners of the dogs that Mr. Nohre did not catch the dogs in the act or else someone may have had to pay damages.

Even at these prices for his sheep, Mr. Nohre suffered a big loss in having so many killed.

Safetygrams

BY FRED W. BRAUN
© The Safety Man

Every community should have a safety committee for the control of traffic in and about its streets and highways. The organization or committee should be represented by the Chamber of Commerce, the police, the press, schools, civic clubs, and the city engineer.

This committee should prepare spot maps. These maps should show from police records and other available information where accidents have previously occurred. Records of local insurance agents and companies should also be valuable in reporting cases that have happened in the past and the exact details.

It is not necessary to know the parties involved in an accident, but merely at what location it happened. The committee should also try to find out the exact cause of the accident so that they will have some basis on which to prevent a recurrence.

These spot maps will quickly show to the entire community just where the accidents have happened in that community and the committee should take proper steps to eliminate the danger points.

Cuba Quieting Down With De Cespedes as President—Basic Industries Slow With Codes—Johnson Relies on the Women.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

CUBA, recovering from its spasm of revolution, began to settle back into normal living under its new provisional President, Carlos Manuel de Cespedes. Killing and looting, that prevailed for several days accompanying the ousting of the Machado regime, ceased in the main, though the pursuit and capture or slaughter of porristas was continued. The long suffering Cubans were determined to wipe out all those murderous members of Machado's secret police. Dr. De Cespedes appointed his cabinet ministers, most of them belonging to the ABC or the Nationalist party, and they were sworn in. The President himself took the post of secretary of state. Castillo Pokorny was made minister of war and Col. Erasmo Delgado, leader of the military coup that forced Machado to flee, was appointed military commander of Havana.

President De Cespedes

Machado, who fled to Nassau in the Bahamas by airplane, accompanied by several of his closest friends, was reported to have taken with him several million dollars though he left behind even his clothing. His wife and other members of the family escaped the vengeance of the mobs by taking a gunboat yacht to Key West, Fla., whence they expected to go to New York and later to Paris. The ex-dictator said he probably would remain in Nassau and would not interfere with developments in Cuba.

No one would even intimate that the Roosevelt administration fomented the anti-Machado revolution, but the State department in Washington certainly knew in advance just about what was going to happen in Cuba. It knew Machado would be ousted, and that he would be succeeded by De Cespedes. Ambassador Welles was in close touch with the revolutionaries and was apprised of their plans. Assistant Secretary of State Caffery was kept informed and approved each step taken, and President Roosevelt apparently let him and Mr. Welles work out the problem themselves. The Cubans selected De Cespedes for the Presidency, but he received the O. K. of official Washington before being named. The islanders were not coerced in any way by the United States, however, and the three American warships that were sent to Havana and Manzanillo were sent only to protect American lives and property.

What part in the revolution was played by the National City Bank of New York and Electric Bond and Shares, which have heavy interests in Cuba, has not been revealed. Both concerns had formerly been considered supporters of Machado, but seemingly they did not lift a hand to save him from destruction. Probably they will come out at the big end of the horn when the island is rehabilitated. This recovery, Cuban business men feel, is certain if the price of sugar can be raised a cent or a cent and a half a pound, which can be done if the United States tariff of two cents a pound is reduced or abolished. They believe, too, that Cuba would then become a good customer for American goods. Cuba's national debt, hugely increased under Machado, also will have to be refunded, for the interest and amortization payments now amount to $1,500,000 a month.

President Roosevelt was so satisfied with the state of affairs in Cuba that he went for a short motor trip in the Virginia mountains. Before leaving Washington he and President De Cespedes exchanged friendly messages. Secretary of State Hull explained to the press that Cuba had really not had a change of government. He said it was a mere change of personnel without any alteration in the structure or processes of government. Consequently, he said, the United States did not find it necessary to extend recognition to President De Cespedes since he came in under the constitutional method of succession in Cuba.

STEEL, oil, coal and automobile industries, looked upon as basic, were still unable to formulate codes satisfactory to their various factions and to the national recovery administration. This slowed up the NRA stride so much that President Roosevelt called on Hugh Johnson to get quick action, and the administrator told the leaders in the industries that they must at once agree on codes providing minimum wages and maximum hours. There was an unpleasant incident in the iron and steel discussions that caused further delay. William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, went into a conference as a member of the NRA labor advisory board and also on the invitation of Secretary Perkins. But the steel leaders took one look at him and walked out.

William Green

Green declared this act was "a challenge to the government," and continued:

"The question is whether steel is to dictate to the government or whether the government is going to set up machinery under the industrial recovery act and require industry to work with that machinery."

Shortly thereafter the labor advisory board formally protested his exclusion.

Johnson described it as "Miss Perkins' party" and declined further discussion. The labor secretary, who continued in conference with the steel leaders without Green, made no statement.

Better progress was made with the oil and automobile codes. The former, it was believed, would provide for a measure of government supervision of prices. A group of Texas oil producers who challenged the constitutionality of the recovery act met defeat in the District of Columbia Supreme court. Justice Joseph Cox denied the application for an injunction against sections of the law permitting federal regulation of oil production.

FOLLOWING a conference of President Roosevelt and his executive council, it was announced that the administration approved the Chicago Board of Trade's decision to withdraw the peg from wheat futures. Secretary Wallace said:

"We are going to do everything effective that we can to keep the price of wheat up, but we are not going to indulge in sleight-of-hand business. The peg was put in to give time to iron out a technical situation arising from one extremely large speculative account. We can't keep up the price of wheat by pegging futures. We are not engaging in a stabilization operation. We will try to do as effectively as possible the fundamental things which will keep the price of wheat up."

It was announced, also, that the government was waiving the bulk of its debt claims against cotton farmers who have complied with the acreage reduction program so that about $100,000,000 would start moving in small checks to farmers within a few days. The same formula found for cotton will be used for wheat.

FIRST of the open disputes within the personnel of the recovery administration resulted in the resignation of Prof. W. F. Ogburn as a member of the consumers' advisory board. Ogburg, who is an economist from the University of Chicago, was vexed because Mrs. Mary Harriman Rumsey, chairman of the board, appointed Mrs. Hugh R. Johnson, wife of the administrator, chairman of the complaint committee, and declared the committee was unable to fulfill its functions. Ogburn told Johnson the consuming public was not being protected, and later he said that the expressed policy of the NRA of keeping purchasing power moving alongside of rising prices "will be blocked, I predict, for want of adequate indexes.

Mrs. H. R. Johnson

"The complaints (against violations of codes by employers), I recommend, should be handled by a 'line' organization and not by an advisory board."

Mr. Johnson's only comment on Professor Ogburn's resignation was, "It's all right with me."

Flying in an army plane to St. Louis, Mr. Johnson made a stirring appeal for support of the President's reemployment program, asserting its success depended upon co-operation of the people in each town, and, in the last analysis, upon the women. "Woman in defense of the support of her home," he said, "is about as safe for triflers as a lioness at the door of a denful of cubs. When every American housewife understands that the Blue Eagle on everything that she permits to come into her home is a symbol of its restoration to security, may God have mercy on the man or group of men who attempts to trifle with that bird."

PARTS of four provinces in China are reported to be flooded by the waters of the Yellow river and many thousands of the wretched inhabitants have been drowned. The flood was said to be the worst since 1887. Several important towns were in danger of utter destruction.

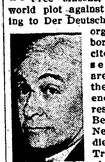
MARTINEZ MERA, who was inaugurated president of Ecuador only last December, may have to give up his high office, for he doesn't seem to be satisfactory to the country. The congress voted, 42 to 22, to send a commission to him to ask him "in the name of democracy" to let the popular will rule. Latest dispatches from Quito said soldiers were guarding the presidential palace; but it is hard to say which way Latin American soldiers will jump.

UNCLE SAM'S war on criminals, especially kidnapers and racketeers, made progress in some regions, notably in the capture in Texas of Harvey Bailey, escaped convict and leader of desperadoes who is wanted for numerous crimes in the Middle West, including the machine gun massacre last June at the Kansas City Union station. Bailey also is charged with the recent kidnaping of C. F. Urschel, Oklahoma oil operator, and ten others implicated in that crime have been nabbed.

The federal crusaders, however, staged an awful flop near Chicago. Government agents, policemen and deputy sheriffs to the number of 250, equipped with airplanes, squad cars, machine guns and bombs, cornered two kidnapers for whom they had laid a trap, chased them by land and air all over the western part of Cook county, and then had to admit their quarry had escaped. The kidnapers had been baited with a promise of collecting a second $50,000 from Jake Factor. They are supposed to be members of the Roger Touhy gang, four of whom, including the leader, are government prisoners under indictment for the kidnaping of William Hamm, Jr., wealthy St. Paul brewer.

Chicago's law authorities are doing better. The courts are manned by judges who have given up their vacations, and every day sees a number of desperate criminals convicted and sentenced to prison terms. The usual long delays granted to defendants in such cases are being refused by the judges, and the unsavory lot of lawyers who get rich defending known murderers and gangsters are rather dumfounded.

RUSSIANS, Jews and international Free Masons, are concocting a world plot against Germany, according to Der Deutsche of Berlin, official organ of the Nazi "labor front." The paper cites, as proof that secret negotiations are being carried on, the simultaneous presence at the French resort of Royat of Bernard Baruch of New York, Andre Tardieu of France, Leon Trotzky, Maxim Litvinov, Russian foreign commissar, and the Russian ambassador to the republic of Turkey.



Bernard Baruch

Former Premier Edouard Herriot's trip to Moscow is also part of the plot against Germany, according to Der Deutsche, which warns Germans against what it terms the duplicity of the Soviet Russians and "Jews who want to profit by the chaos and hatred they sow among nations."

The Swiss, on the other hand, claim to have discovered a Nazi plot, one of their papers charging that Hitler's followers have launched a propaganda campaign for the annexation of German Switzerland to Germany.

An American sailor named Thorsten Johnson was sentenced to six months in jail at Stettin on charges of calling Chancellor "a Czechoslovakian Jew," and the American authorities were preparing to move for his release.

JAPAN'S fine navy of about 280 ships sailed south from Tokyo, under personal command of Emperor Hirohito, and began the maneuvers that take the form of an encounter with a hypothetical foe attacking Japan from the equatorial Pacific. It was assumed that the enemy fleet had seized the Caroline and Marshall islands, between the Philippines and Hawaii, which the League of Nations turned over to Japan under mandate after the Germans lost them in the World war.

THOUGH the old prohibition bureau has been abolished, and repeal is expected before the close of the year, "liquor control is neither dead nor forgotten," in the words of L. McHenry Howe. The secretary to the President said the bureau had merely been absorbed by the division of investigation of the Department of Justice, adding that "if any racketeers or bootleggers are holding celebrations over the supposed demise of the bureau they are due for an awful shock."

"When the Eighteenth amendment is repealed," Howe added, "the bootlegger will find himself if anything in closer quarters than now. Uncle Sam is counting on several hundreds of millions of dollars from revenue taxes, which will lighten the taxpayers' burdens—and if you are laboring under any illusion that he doesn't intend to collect every red cent of it you are making the mistake of your life."

DETERMINED to prevent graft in the expenditures of the government's huge $3,300,000,000 public works fund, Secretary Ickes, the administrator, announced appointment of ten regional inspectors as the nucleus of an organization to see to it that the government gets its money's worth.

They will receive their orders from and report directly to Louis R. Glavis, chief of the division of investigations of the Interior department.

All engineers, familiar with construction work, the inspectors will be charged with seeing that contract specifications are fully met, and with investigating evidences of conspiracy in bidding and complaints.

GEN. ITALO BALBO and his fellow aviators brought their great seaplanes back to Italy and were given a welcome by Premier Mussolini and the people that was much like the triumphs of the ancient Caesars. Balbo was made air marshal and each of his men was promoted and decorated.

When Not Overdone

There ought to be more of the grand manner; and it becomes a small man as well as the one who weighs 250 pounds.

Ever Noticed It?

In the home, the steps of the stepladder, when you want it, are always piled full of objects "to get them out of the way."

My husband is a steam fitter and I am sure you know what that means when it comes to laundry work. Besides, I have two youngsters. My clothes aren't soiled—but dirty! And I believe I would throw up both my hands and quit if it weren't for Fels-Naptha. I've been using it for years now and I always will!

EASIER washdays—cleaner, whiter clothes—that's what Fels-Naptha Soap can mean to you, too. It brings you extra help—good golden soap and plenty of naptha working together to speed away dirt in jig time.

The SILVER FLUTE

SYNOPSIS

On her eighteenth birthday, Barbara, motherless daughter of Christopher Thorne, artist, receives a birthday ring from Bruce MacLain, young artist friend of the family, but more than friend to Barbara. Bruce tells her a story of a gypsy boy, a little gypsy girl whom he loves, and the song of a silver flute. She knows it is her own love tale. Her father is killed in an accident. Relatives arrive and take charge of things. To her dismay Barbara learns that she and her two brothers and small sister are to be separated. Desperate, the four children plot to run away to Barbara's godfather, "Uncle Stephen" Drake. Stephen Drake, bachelor, forty years old, still has vivid recollections of Barbara's mother, whom he had loved eighteen years before. He had made up his mind to propose that night to Emily Trent, so that his well-ordered household might have a permanent head. But the children arrive and the proposal is interrupted. Stephen feels his heart warm to the small daughter of his early love, but he tells her he must send them all back. Kit is taken ill. Stephen finds himself unable to resume his lover-like feeling for Emily. The children's relatives appear, highly annoyed and vociferously disapproving. Stephen pacifies them.

"I miss Father so much. And I miss you, too. I'm dreadfully homesick at night. I do get homesick, thinking of you, because 'home' doesn't mean Provincetown or any special place, but just wherever you are. I put myself to sleep every night by telling myself a story. Do you know what the story is, Bruce? It's the one about the silver flute. If I keep very still I imagine I can hear it. Is that silly and sentimental? I suppose it is, but I'm that way. If ever the flute stopped playing, I should simply want to die. Don't let it stop playing its one lovely song . . . 'I love you, pretty gypsy girl with the roses in your hair. . . .'

"Do you see this blot on the paper? That's a tear. . . .

"I couldn't help it. I want to see you so much. Wouldn't it be wonderful if Uncle Stephen would keep the children and I could come to New York? I know they'd be safe and happy here. He's so lovely and kind.

"But I don't suppose he will. His Aunt Edith doesn't like us. She wishes we hadn't come. But it's Uncle Stephen's house, so she doesn't say anything, but I know she'd like to, just the same. I haven't a nice disposition, have I, Bruce? But what can you expect of a 'gypsy girl'? I don't suppose they ever have any manners.

"There's another blot! I do love you so much. But I haven't told Uncle Stephen. He might think it was ridiculous because I am only eighteen. It's a beautiful secret and no one knows it but you and me, and the ring with the little gold heart. Here's all my love, except what belongs to the children, tied up in paper covered with stars with a huge silver bow. It makes a very large package. Keep it, Bruce, from

"Your Babbie,
"who loves you very much.

"P. S. I asked Uncle Stephen to call me Babbie instead of Barbara. He does. He's very accommodating.

"P. S. No. 2. He isn't a 'crusty old bachelor.' He's nice looking. But old. I guess he must be forty.

"P. S. No. 3. Here's a kiss for goodnight. Know something? I love you."

CHAPTER IX

Kit gradually improved. The schoolroom became the center of the house. There was always a fire in the open grate and cheerful red curtains shut out the dreariness of the late November days. Jamie's electric trains were set up on the floor. Gay played games with Kit, or Barbara, curled on a shabby red sofa with comfortable curves and hollows, read aloud to the children. Aunt Edith paid an occasional visit to the room. But the children, with the exception of Gay, were somewhat constrained with her. They knew Aunt Edith wished that they hadn't come.

Stephen went to the schoolroom, first, when he returned home in the evening. He was always greeted with rapturous cries and lusty embraces. He looked forward, each day, to the hour before dinner which he spent with the four Thornes. They told him things which had happened during the day. Kit would have a sketch to show him, perhaps. Jamie would have found a family of kittens in the old sleigh in the stable. Gay would want to dress up for him in a hoop-skirt and flowered bonnet she had discovered in the attic. Barbara would ask his advice about Jamie's cut finger or Kit's appetite which wasn't what it should be. And didn't he think that Gay should learn to spell ten new words every day?

There were arguments for him to settle.

"How can the sun come up like thunder?" Gay asked one evening, and Stephen knew they had been reading Kipling.

"I suppose it means suddenly," Stephen said when he had thought a little. The children's questions sometimes embarrassed him. They expected him to know everything, "because he was a lawyer."

"Does it make a noise?" Jamie asked. "A loud noise like thunder?"

"Not actually, I suppose."

"But China isn't right across a bay from Mandalay," Kit said with the air of an experienced traveler who had first hand information about flying fishes and palm trees and temple bells.

"But it must be, Kit." Barbara joined the discussion.

"It isn't."

"It must be or Kipling—"

"Is it, Uncle Stephen?"

Stephen sent Jamie down to the library for an atlas, and the argument became a geography lesson conducted by Kit.

The four Thornes argued about anything; modern painting, pirates, what made seeds grow when they were planted, why the kangaroo had two short legs in front. They had been encouraged, Stephen thought, whatever the limitations of their training, to exercise their minds.

"Aunt Josephine calls arguing 'talking back,'" Barbara said one evening, "But it isn't, is it, Uncle Stephen?"

"Of course it isn't," Stephen said. "Every one has a right to his own opinions."

"Even children," Kit said thoughtfully. "Father always liked us to have our own opinions."

Stephen liked it, too. He found the Thornes, as they became rested and more accustomed to their surroundings, increasingly entertaining. He was pleased, and a little flattered as well, because they accepted him on intimate terms. They were never reserved and polite with him as they were with Aunt Edith. It gave him the feeling of having shed a number of dreary years.

Barbara delighted him especially. She was such a bewildering combination of rather precocious wisdom and childish simplicity. She had no airs or poses, it was impossible to judge her by ordinary standards. Sometimes when she romped with the children, cheeks flushed, brown curls tumbling, she seemed the youngest of them all and, sometimes, her manner was quaintly grown up and her eyes were too big for her face. But the unhappy times never lasted long. Barbara's spirits were elastic. She was odd and exquisite and unaccountable. She had the gift of laughter.

It was pleasant to do things for her, to see her eyes brighten with pleasure, to hear the singing notes in her gay young voice.

"You'll spoil her, Stephen," Aunt Edith said when he continued to bring her odd little gifts.

"She can stand it, I think," Stephen replied. "I want her to be happy while she is here."

And then he forgot Aunt Edith. Barbara was coming downstairs to meet him, looking small and demure and very pretty in a bodiced frock the color of a primrose.

"Did you have a hard day at the office?" she asked, smiling up at him with the disturbing dimple at the corner of her mouth. "Come up and put on your slippers and let me light your pipe."

Of course she was only a child, Aunt Edith told herself. But Stephen was certainly bewitched. She thought, kindly of Emily as she watched Stephen and Barbara walk upstairs, her gay young laugh drifting back to Aunt Edith. Stephen shouldn't be allowed to make a fool of himself. Not if she could help it.

Stephen took the girls on a shopping expedition. It was Natalie who put the idea into his head.

"They're pretty," she said, having tea with Stephen after a visit to the schoolroom. "It would be fun to dress them properly."

"Aren't they properly dressed?" Stephen asked, smiling with pleasure because Natalie thought his guests were attractive.

Natalie thought more than that. She thought that the children were good for Stephen, in spite of the fuss Aunt Edith made. He seemed younger and more—well, human. She and Bob had agreed that Stephen needed to be jolted out of his comfortable rut.

But she did not put her thoughts into words. She stirred her tea with a thin silver spoon and smiled at Stephen through the firelight.

"Men don't notice such things, I suppose. But little girls like pretty clothes. Will you let me take them shopping?"

Stephen agreed, in an absent-minded fashion, and presently changed the subject. But he did not forget what Natalie had said.

"Barbara," he said that evening, finding her alone in the library after the children had gone to bed, "wouldn't you like to go shopping? I thought you or Gay might need something. Dresses, slippers—something like that."

"I'm afraid we can't, Uncle Stephen."

"Why not?"

She flushed. "I—we haven't any money."

Stephen knew he had blundered.

"I'd like to buy them for you," he said.

Her lashes lifted. She looked at him gravely.

"Oh, no," she said quickly. "Thank you very much. But we—I—I can't let you do that."

"Why not?"

"How could we ever pay you back?"

"Must you?" Stephen asked, liking her independence, wondering how he could buy her the clothes she needed without hurting her pride.

"Of course," she said, as though there could be no question at all about that. "But we are shabby, aren't we?" Her fingers touched the worn frock. "I don't want you to be ashamed of us."

"I'm not," Stephen said quickly, watching the pucker, soft as a wrinkle in silk, between her curving brows.

LATEST MOVE IN FIGHT ON GERMS

Something New in Idea of Removable Pockets.

Just when we thought that every inimical germ had been placed and ticketed, all its haunts patrolled and quarantined, an Englishman comes forward to say that the enemy has a foothold in our outer works. That is to say, "our ordinary fixed pockets are probably responsible for a great many of the ills from which we suffer, especially common colds." And then he goes on to describe in painfully unpleasant terms the armies of germs which we pocket with our handkerchiefs, with our paper and coined money, with a score of behandled articles of every sort.

The change we get, the roll we win at a race, even though we pay out again every penny, leave behind them in our pockets myriads of germs which they brought to us from unmentionable sources of foulness and disease. Every small boy with his amazing pocketed collections of odds and ends, from dried toads to rusty nails, is a harbinger of more microbes than Typhoid Mary carried about with her in her prime. We shall never know what a grim factor our pockets are in keeping down the population by the unnecessary shortening of life.

But the Englishman, having kindly scared us to death about our terrible pockets, proposes as a remedy that we have removable pockets, "quickly detached at will, capable of being boiled and laundered like a handkerchief, and then restored to their place by snap fasteners." If the substitution of these for the old-fashioned fixed pockets becomes general, there is no reason why so much labor should be lost every winter by the prevalence of colds; we shall be spared much of the illness from other infections and contagions. The Eskimos, who have no money, no handkerchiefs and no pockets, have no colds. We may arrive at some degree of their blissful state by sending our pockets to the wash every Monday morning. We shall have to take a chance, of course, with money and handkerchiefs in these latitudes of civilization. They are the prime germ conveyors, especially the money, which doesn't take kindly to laundering. Perhaps the cellophane salesmen, with their amazing enterprise, can arrange that street car conductors and bus drivers and others shall hand us our change in cellophane wrappers and so carry the war on germs into their last stronghold.—Boston Transcript.

Simpleness

Simplicity, in truth, is less dependent upon external things than we imagine. It can live in broadcloth or homespun; it can eat white bread or black. It is not outward, but inward. A certain openness of mind to learn the daily lessons of the school of life; a certain willingness of heart to give and to receive that extra service, that gift beyond the strict measure of debt which makes friendship possible; a certain clearness of spirit to perceive the best in things and people, to love it without fear and to cleave to it without mistrust; a peaceable sureness of affection and taste; a gentle straightforwardness of action; a kind sincerity of speech—these are the marks of simple life, which cometh not with observation, for it is within you.—Henry Van Dyke.

A BIT THICK

The manager of the big business firm stormed into his head clerk's office and banged a fist angrily on his desk.

"Smithers," he cried ominously, "this is outrageous. I distinctly told you you could only take seven clear days' holiday, and here you have at last put in an appearance on the eleventh day. What is the meaning of it?"

"Oh, yes, sir," said Smithers, coolly enough. "I have an explanation. Three of them were foggy."—London Answers.

No Bouquets

"Do you remember that little war song, "Somewhere in France is the lily close by the English rose?"

"No," answered Senator Sorghum, "and I don't see the point of it. None of us international choir members is engaged in throwing bouquets just now."

The Mean Thing!

Wife—You ought to know by now, Thomas, that I speak as I think.

COMMON EXPERIENCE

"As I understand it," said the sinner, "a church calls a minister to preach the gospel."

"That's the idea," sighed the parson, "but he's sometimes apt to get the feeling that he's only been called to have somebody around that everybody in the church will be free to pick to pieces."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Had to Get Him First

Contractor (just arrived)—Does the foreman know the trench has fallen in?

Workman—No, sir! We're just digging 'im out to tell 'im."

Not a Pleasing Thought

"Do you think you could learn to love me?"

"Possibly; but if I were a man, I'd hate to think I was an acquired taste."

They Are Offering $10,000 In Cash Simply To Acquaint More Women With A Way To Get Snowy-White Wash Without Boiling or Scrubbing — To Stop Wash-Tub Fade—To Cut Washing Time In Half—To Get Bland, Mild Suds That Are Gentle To Hands

Contest Closes Sept. 9th, 1933. 488 Cash Prizes To Be Awarded For Answering One Simple Question—Read Details Below

WOULD you like to get a check for enough money to put your child through school; to cut down the loan on your home; to pay for a vacation in Europe, or—just to spend for something you've always wanted but felt you couldn't afford?

Then—just write a phrase of a few words giving your opinion of Oxydol soap. You may win a thousand dollars cash, or, if not that, one of 487 other cash prizes.

Here is a description of Oxydol which may help you a lot in working out a phrase. Study it. Then write us a phrase telling in your own words why Oxydol is better for washing clothes than any other soap.

What Oxydol Is

Oxydol is a new-type granulated soap. The latest scientific discovery of Procter & Gamble experts. A discovery that gives sparkling white wash every time—that stops washtub fading—cuts washing time in half—and gives bland, mild suds that are gentle to your hands. This is how it acts.

It takes the harshness out of so-called "hard" water; the hardness that makes boiling, extra rubbing and strong soap necessary to get things white and clean.

Then, due to bland, cleansing qualities available in no other soap, flake or powder made, Oxydol DISSOLVES all dirt and grime; breaks it up, loosens it, and "suds" it away with rich, creamy suds that last throughout washing time.

Thus you do your wash in water soft and gentle as rain-water. With a bland, mild cleanser, NOT with skin eating, harsh, strong soap. With gentle, long-lasting suds that DISSOLVE grease, dirt and grime. It's made by the makers of Ivory Soap, so you know it's kind to hands. You cut washing time, too—either on board or in washing machine—50% or more.

Consider what this means in saving rubbing and scrubbing, in saving your hands, in saving fine fabrics from soap fade and ruin.

Rules Of The Contest

Nothing could be simpler or easier than this Oxydol Soap Contest. This is all you do.

OXYDOL

DON'T THINK YOU CAN'T WIN!

Nearly all the people who ever won the big prizes in a contest of this sort usually started out by believing they didn't have a chance. Then all of a sudden were amazed and surprised when they did.

For instance, a big magazine contest for a name was won by a housewife in a small town outside of Chicago.

The Coca-Cola $10,000 prize was won by a stenographer of Anderson, Indiana. The Liberty Magazine $20,000 contest for a name was won by a commercial artist in Youngstown, Ohio.

You have as big a chance as anyone else to win one of these prizes. Read the description of Oxydol on this page, then get a box top or facsimile—then write anything that comes to your mind about how it's better for washing clothes, and mail your suggestion in. You may win!

Just tear the top off a box of Oxydol. Write your name and address, and your grocer's name and address on this box top. (If you can't easily obtain Oxydol, a reasonably exact facsimile of the box top will do. You don't have to buy to enter this contest.)

HERE ARE EXAMPLES OF WHAT'S WANTED

Use These Phrases As Your Guide. We Want Them Just As Simple As These—Phrases Like Any School Child Can Write. Yet A Few Words Just As Simple Will Win The Grand Prize In This Contest.

1. "I never scrub or boil clothes any more. Oxydol dissolves all the dirt out for me."
2. "Neighbors envy the way my wash always comes out sweet and clean. Theirs would, too, if they used Oxydol."
3. "My clothes need lots of rich, lasting suds in this hard water and Oxydol makes them quicker than any other soap."
4. "I always wondered how my neighbor got her clothes sparkling white—until Oxydol made mine the whitest line in town."
5. "Oxydol goes so far in this hard water. Less than half a box does for my 100 piece washing and I don't need a softener."
6. "I'm so glad I changed to Oxydol. My washing's through hours earlier and my hands stay soft and smooth—they've lost that red, swollen wash-day look."

Then write, in your own words, YOUR answer to the question: "Why is Oxydol better than any other soap for washing clothes?"

Send your letter, and the box top or facsimile with your own and your grocer's name and address written on it, to Oxydol, Post Office Box No. 1801, Cincinnati, Ohio. Send it as soon as you can—this contest closes at midnight, September 9th.

Enter Contest Now—Wash With Oxydol

Enter this $10,000 contest now. Remember, a housewife who knows wash day work and good washing results is the one who will win. Society women and college professors won't know how. A phrase written in lead pencil on tablet paper is just as good as one that's typewritten or on dollar stationery. So write without delay. You may win $1,000 in CASH. Or—one of 487 other CASH prizes.

And—you'll find in Oxydol a far easier, far safer and far surer way of getting perfect laundry results. Its sudsing action in any kind of water, hard or soft, will amaze you. And when your wash is on the line and you see how fresh and white it looks, that alone will make you feel it's worth while asking for Oxydol every time. 33-A3

Armless Man Learns to Shave, Play Piano; To be At State Fair

The fact that he was born without hands or legs does not handicap Rodney Elzea, better known as Rex, who will be seen at the Minnesota State Fair September 2 to 9, with the Royal American Shows. Rex shaves himself, as is shown in the picture, rolls cigarettes, plays the piano and performs all of the normal daily tasks of an ordinary person. Painstaking training in his early years, says Rex, is responsible for overcoming his physical handicap.

WLS Stars At Fair

The W L S radio performers will be at the Minnesota State Fair for a special one-day performance, Sunday afternoon and evening, September 3, in the Hippodrome.

A score of nationally known radio stars will give a reproduction of a Barn Dance program heard regularly over a nation-wide hookup. Radio fans will have an opportunity of seeing just how a big-time radio program is produced.

Frank Hartman and family of St. Cloud are visiting relatives here this week.

Dr. Smith of Thief River Falls spent Saturday afternoon here inoculating children for Diphtheria.

H. O. Hanson and family and Mrs. Ole Hanson visited at the the L. Sagstuen home Saturday evening.

Mike Fricker of St. Hilaire has been visiting at the home of his son Geo. Fricker and family here this week.

Melvin Nohre and family who have made their home on a farm here the past few years, moved to St. Hilaire last week.

Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Carlson of Crookston visited at the home of Mrs. Carlson's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Wegge, Sunday.

Kenneth Swan closed a deal last week with Clarence Swan his brother, in which he became the owner of all his farm property in Mud Lake.

The farmers here are threshing out some dandy yields of flax and sweet clover. One farmer reported that he got fourteen and a half bushels sweet clover to the acre. Flax is averaging about ten bushels per acre.

Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Hanson and family of Mahnomen spent Sunday and Monday here visiting with relatives and friends. Mr. Hanson stated that they had a pretty good crop down there and that he has bought a new farm only two miles from town.

Rev. and Mrs. L. M. Redal and family returned home Monday after spending a months vacation visiting relatives over in North Dakota and also at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

They also took in the World's Fair in Chicago and took a trip to Washington, D. C.

Lawrence, Gertrude and Myrtle Reierson motored to Fargo Monday. Myrtle who has been teaching school near Greenbush for several years will attend teachers' college this winter at Moorhead. Gertrude Reierson will teach a country school near Strathcona, this being her first year.

Free Training for Youth of State Is Hoped For

The Northwest School of Agriculture is cooperating with Floyd B. Olson's committee on the education of unemployed youth by endeavoring to secure the names of all unemployed rural young men and women between the ages of 17 and 24 who wish additional training in gas motors, farm machinery, blacksmithing, carpentry, mechanical drawing, animal and dairy husbandry, poultry, crops and soils, horticulture, beekeeping, cooking, sewing, household management, home nursing, business training, music, public speaking, and citizenship. By unemployed rural youth we mean any young man or woman whose services are not required on the farm or in the home where he or she resides, and who is anxious to secure additional training, but is unable to finance such a program.

According to the 1930 census, there are over 350,000 young people in this age group in Minnesota. The number of unemployed rural youth who are anxious for and would profit by this training is not known. Preliminary reports indicate a large number in every county in the state.

It is to be hoped that financial aid may be obtained to assist these worthy young people. The first step is to ascertain the need. All who are interested are asked to write Superintendent A. A. Dowell, Northwest School of Agriculture, Crookston, for additional information.

Chicken Season Dates Set

At a special meeting of the Conservation Commission last week definite dates for an open season on pinnated and sharp-tailed grouse were fixed. Pinnated grouse are commonly known as prairie chickens. The season will open in 28 Minnesota counties on September 16 at noon. The daily bag limit is set at six birds with twelve allowed in possession and eighteen as the season's limit.

In 14 counties the season will close at sunset on September 20 while in the balance the open season will be extended to sunset on September 24.

In Wilkin, Ottertail, Becker, Wadena, Hubbard, Cass, Crow Wing, Morrison, Itasca, St. Louis, Mille Lacs, Isanti, and Kanabec counties and the northern part of Todd county the closing date will be September 20. The closing date in Kittson, Roseau, Lake of the Woods, Koochiching, Marshall, Beltrami, Polk, Pennington, Red Lake, Clearwater, Mahnomen, Norman, Aitkin, and Pine counties will be four days later, on September 24.

Definite seasons, open areas, and bag limits on other upland game birds including pheasants, quail, and ruffed grouse or native partridges will be fixed by the commission at its next meeting to be held early in September.

Indications point to an open season on ducks from October 1 to November 30 with the final decision awaiting federal action. Early action in this respect has been requested by E. V. Willard, acting commissioner of conservation, at the behest of the commission. Federal duck regulations are established by the Department of Agriculture upon recommendations submitted by the Migratory Bird Commission.

Help Wanted for Fire Victims

The Salvation Army of Thief River Falls were here yesterday and reported to us on the fire situation near Warroad. They told us that several families up north have already been completely wiped out in the big fire which is raging thru the woods and swamps near Warroad and Salol.

The Salvation Army asked us to appeal to the people here for donation of stoves, furniture, clothing, and food for those unfortunate people whom have lost everything they had. Let us know what you have to give and we will take care of same here at the News Office.

The Harvest Festival

The Congregation of the Nazareth Lutheran church will hold their annual Harvest Festival on Sunday, September 10 at the home of Mr. and Mrs. F. K. Fredrickson on the C. L. Heinze farm a half mile north of Holt.

Rev. J. A. Johnson of Osakis, Minn., will be the speaker of the day. Divine services will begin promptly at 10:30 A. M. In the afternoon Rev. Johnson will speak on his work as chaplain of the Home School for Girls at Sauk Center, Minn.

Several musical numbers have been secured to make the program more interesting The afternoon session will be followed by a band concert by the Holt Community Band. The afternoon program will commence at 1 P. M.

The harvest festival is held every fall at this time to raise money with which to help pay the general church budget. The Ladies Aid is sponsoring the dinner which will be served at noon and for which there will be a charge of 25c for adults and 15c for children.

Rev. Redal, pastor of the Nazareth Lutheran church here asks that we all show our enthusiasm for the work of the church by being present on that day. Everybody welcome.

Wheat Allotment News

Wheat Growers of Marshall County have, during the past week, been given an opportunity to sign their application for wheat allotment contracts. Approximately 80-90 percent of the wheat growers of each township have signed so far, states Emergency Agricultural Assistant, Mr. Jay H. Seymour.

"Exactly how will the wheat allotment for my farm be figured out" is the big question with every wheat grower when he considers signing up under the Government's wheat production control plan. Mr. Seymour explains the process as follows:

Suppose we begin at the top with the national allotment and work down to the individual farm allotment. And let's keep in mind that allotment always means the number of bushels of wheat on which the Government agrees to make adjustment payments to farmers for reducing their acreage.

The entire national allotment is 456,198,588 bushels. This was set by Secretary of Agriculture H. A. Wallace and is about 54 percent of the average annual wheat crop of the United States for the 5 years 1928 to 1932--844,812,200 bushels. The 54 per cent was used because it is estimated to be the share of the average crop that is consumed as human food in this country and on which the Government will collect a processing tax out of which to make the adjustment payments to farmers.

We have pointed out that the national allotment is a definite part of the average annual crop for the 5 years mentioned. Likewise, each state's share of the allotment is the same part, roughly 54 percent, of its average crop during the same years. Minnesota's average crop during those years was 20,679,600 bushels, so its allotment is only 11,166,829 bushels or 54 percent of the average crop.

Marshall county's average crop having been 818,260 bushels per year, its allotment is 54 percent of that figure, or 441,841 bushels.

The Safety Man

A few words to parents.

Schools are again starting all over the country and thousands of children will be required to leave the protection of their homes to make the daily trips back and forth to their places of instruction. In doing so it will be necessary for them to use their own judgment in crossing streets and walking on the highways.

Eddie Cantor once said in one of his broadcasts, "Drive Slowly—We Love Our Children."

I sometimes wonder whether certain parents really do love their children. If they did, they would show more concern about their safety and conduct at crossings and on the highways.

Teach your children to cross streets only at the regular crossings and to be careful when doing so. If it is necessary for your children to walk on the highways, instruct them to walk on the left-hand side and step off the road if necessary. REMIND THEM DAILY.

The Holt Consolidated School opened its doors on Tuesday for the 1933-34 term. The entire faculty are welcomed back here by the people of this community.

Johnson Bringing Basic Industries Into Line Under Codes; Wants Banks to Relax Credits; Caffery to Succeed Welles in Cuba.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

CODES for the oil, steel and lumber industries, formulated in Washington after hot discussions and with great travail, were agreed to by the representatives of the industries and signed by President Roosevelt, who thereupon retired to his summer home at Hyde Park, N. Y., to complete his interrupted vacation. But General Johnson, indefatigable NRA chief, had to continue the battling, for there remained of the so-called basic industries coal and automobiles to be brought under the wings of the blue eagle. Despite the sometimes angry debates over main points of divergence, especially the open shop question, Johnson was certain the automobile code would be completed within a few days. Donald Richberg, NRA general counsel, asked that the open shop clause be eliminated because it left doubt as to whether the industry accepted the collective bargaining provision. The motor car manufacturers seemed disposed to agree to this without surrendering the policy.

Henry Ford

Every one was anxious to learn what stand Henry Ford would take, but he maintained deep silence. Mr. Ford is the only large automobile manufacturer who is not a member of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce. Hitherto he has insisted on his right to bargain with his workers without the intervention of unions. That he may alter this policy, voluntarily or otherwise, was indicated by dispatches from Edgewater, N. J., which said the employees of the Ford assembling plant there were organizing under the auspices of the American Federation of Labor. In the past Mr. Ford has maintained the open shop by meeting or exceeding the demands of organized labor in pay and working conditions. It was thought possible he would adopt a similar course in the matter of the blue eagle code.

Coal operators, according to General Johnson, were all displaying a co-operative spirit that insured an early agreement for the bituminous industry, and the representatives of the miners appeared willing to accept compromises on the question in debate.

BY LABOR day the oil code will go into effect, and the industry generally will support it although it does not completely satisfy the trade. To a very limited extent it provides for price fixing for gasoline. Standard Oil of Indiana did not wait for the effective date of the code, but put all its refineries on code schedules of hours and wages. The part-time system was abandoned, resulting in a 13 per cent increase in the total wage payment and a corresponding increase in the purchasing power of the refinery employees as a group.

Base rates of pay in the various refineries were established as prescribed by the code as follows: Whiting, Ind., 52 cents an hour; Wood River, Ill., 52 cents; Sugar Creek, Mo., 48 cents; Neodosha, Kan., 48 cents; Casper, Wyo., 50 cents. These rates are for common labor. Proportionate adjustments were made in rates for skilled labor.

RETAIL dealers who gathered in Johnson's office for a hearing on their code were warned by the administrator that the government would not countenance unreasonable price increases and were urged to resist such boosts from jobbers who supply them with their goods. He said the national industrial recovery act would increase prices to meet new costs imposed by compliance with the trade charters, but just because of this "there is no reason to go way beyond reason. If you do this you just kill the goose that lays the golden egg. The house that we are trying to build will collapse like a house of cards."

Mrs. Mary H. Rumsey

In enforcing compliance with the blue eagle provisions, Johnson asserted that there would be no violence, no man-hunting and no boycotting. But, he said, the administration would move to uncover cheaters behind the blue eagle and then "we are going to move in and take the blue eagle right off their windows."

Human nature being what it is, there naturally are lots of complaints of "chiseling" by persons and concerns that have received the blue eagle. These come most numerously to Mrs. Mary H. Rumsey, head of the committee that is supposed to protect the consumer—though Professor Ogburn says it isn't doing it—and to President William Green of the American Federation of Labor. Both of them have organized systems for watching and catching the code evaders. Mr. Green has instructed all union men to keep an eye on things throughout the country and to report to him any suspected violation of codes; he then reports to General Johnson. In this way a closer scrutiny of code chiselers than the government could institute is made possible.

SOME time ago Administrator Johnson hinted that the banks were not doing their part in the recovery program, and he has now persuaded them to relax credit extension conditions and thereby make money available in the channels of general commerce. To begin with, he conferred with members of the federal reserve board and Jesse Jones, chairman of the Reconstruction Finance corporation, concerning methods by which the bankers might be induced to grant loans on classes of security which they have not been willing to accept.

"Bankers ought to resume the financing of ordinary commercial operations," General Johnson said. "I have studied the figures on commercial credit trends recently, and I do not think they indicate much loosening up on the part of bankers.

"We are working on that now, but listen, the ordinary banker wants sound risks. Most of them got pretty badly burnt in past years, and we've got to establish some basis for assuring them safety.

"I don't believe you can force extension of credit by fiat. The whole trouble in this country has been lack of confidence by all classes of people, and we've got to do what we can to bring confidence in business, in loans, and in the future back again."

HAVING accomplished neatly and speedily the job for which he was sent to Cuba, Sumner Welles will soon return to Washington to take again his position of assistant secretary of state in charge of Latin-American affairs. He is to be succeeded as ambassador to the island republic by Jefferson Caffery who, from his post in the State department, so ably seconded the efforts of Mr. Welles. Caffery, like Welles, is a career diplomat and was minister to Colombia before becoming assistant secretary of state last spring. In the last 22 years he has held many important diplomatic positions. Caffery is from Louisiana and the favor with which he is looked upon by the administration is one of the thorns in the flesh of Senator Huey Long. His first job in Havana will be to negotiate a new United States-Cuban commercial treaty. President De Cespedes of course hopes this will include lower duties on Cuban sugar. Settlement of the water front strike in Havana led the new president to believe industrial peace would soon be re-established.

Jefferson Caffery

Most of the Machado supporters and porristas having been killed or captured, except those who had escaped from the island, the Cuban mobs let up in their bloody work. Their last grim performance in Havana was to steal and try to burn the body of Antonio Ancart, former chief of police, who had committed suicide to avoid capture.

Former President Mario Menocal, Col. Carlos Mendieta, leader of the Nationalist party, and many others who had been driven to exile by Machado returned to Havana and were enthusiastically welcomed by the people.

GEORGE N. PEEK, administrator of the agricultural adjustment act, put into effect at six principal live stock markets what has been called the "birth control" program for pigs, the object being the elimination of about 5,000,000 animals and the consequent raising of prices. In Chicago, Omaha, Sioux City, St. Paul, Kansas City and St. Joseph, Mo., the emergency relief administration began the purchasing of 4,000,000 pigs between 25 and 100 pounds in weight each and 1,000,000 brood sows. Most of the meat accumulated was to be distributed to the poor. A price schedule was fixed and the farmers were to be paid the difference between this and what they actually received, from a fund of $55,000,000 obtained from the processing tax on all pork. The buying operations were to be started soon at other leading markets besides those named above.

MEREDITH NICHOLSON of Indianapolis is one fortunate author. He has been appointed by President Roosevelt to be minister to Paraguay and he will have, in Asuncion, the capital, a most delightful place to live, among pleasant people. Mr. Meredith was summoned to Washington for preparatory conferences and is expected to leave for his post in the near future.

Leo R. Sack, a Washington newspaper man, was appointed minister to Costa Rica

ROBERT H. GORE, governor of Puerto Rico, is not liked by the Liberal party of the island, which claims to represent 46 per cent of the electorate. It has sent to President Roosevelt a protest against Gore's administration, charging that he has utterly failed to live up to his declarations for efficiency and nonpolitical policies and has grated on the sensibilities of the people.

The message concluded that "as a man unfamiliar with our character and our problems, and as we believe with the practices of government and statesmanship in general, Governor Gore is very much on trial before the Puerto Rican people."

MAHATMA GANDHI has won another contest with the British government of India. Imprisoned because he had renewed his civil disobedience campaign, he started a new "fast unto death" and in a week was so near dissolution that the authorities released him unconditionally. His wife and Miss Madeleine Slade, one of his "three graces," were released from six months' sentences at Ahmedabad so they could attend him.

Mahatma Gandhi

Gandhi had been offered his freedom if he would remain in Poona and refrain from conducting civil disobedience propaganda. He refused. He demanded that he be given unlimited facilities to conduct from prison his campaign in aid of the Hindu untouchables. He was told he could carry on the campaign only if he kept it free of politics.

"I might as well be dead if I can't work for them," he said and began his fast, vowing he would maintain it until death unless the government relented.

NORMAN DAVIS, "ambassador at large," called on President Roosevelt in Hyde Park and departed with fairly complete instructions for his course in the disarmament conference which reassembles in Geneva on October 16. In general Mr. Davis will support the British plan for limitation of offensive weapons; but both Mr. Roosevelt and he believe the French proposal for supervision and control of world armaments would be a big step toward an agreement. This plan calls for a permanent disarmament commission that would act as the official body in complaints against one signatory power by another. It also would provide the manner and shipment of arms from one nation to another, make inspections of world armaments and carry out a systematic check on the manufacture of offensive and defensive weapons.

ENGELBERT DOLLFUSS, the diminutive but nervy chancellor of Austria, assured of allied support, took steps to check the German Nazis along the Bavarian border, where, he was informed, the latter were fomenting trouble and planning invasions of Austrian territory for next month. Dollfuss ordered the mobilization of more than a thousand picked marksmen in the home guards and prepared to rush them to the frontier to reinforce the troops patrolling there if the Nazi campaign continues. The Vienna home guard includes only two battalions, but thousands of volunteers are being recruited in eastern and southern Austria, and all of them are dead shots.

GEN. OWEN O'DUFFY'S blue-shirted National Guard of Ireland paraded in defiance of President De Valera's prohibition, and the Free State government declared it an illegal organization. A military tribunal was set up under the public safety act and all blue shirts who do not resign from the guard are to be arraigned before it and will be liable to death sentence. De Valera's government charges the National Guard was organized for the purpose of setting up a dictatorship. Minister of Justice Ruttledge said he had evidence that the guard was heavily armed and was importing arms.

SOCIALISTS are not happy these days, and when the Second Internationale opened its world congress in Paris there were a lot of gloomy faces among the delegates. However, the executive committee firmly opposed the defeatists and pessimists in the party. The bright spots on the Socialist map were said to be Spain, where the tide of Socialism is steadily rising; and the United States, where in the opinion of American members, the "new deal" is leading to Socialism.

COMING up from the Caribbean, a tremendous storm swept the Atlantic coast of the United States from Virginia northward. About a dozen lives were lost and immense damage was done to property. Yachts were wrecked and several liners were in peril.

The storm played havoc in scores of communities in southern New Jersey as well as surrounding states. From Atlantic City to Cape May every seashore resort had flooded streets and homes. Beach front hotels were virtually marooned. Ocean City, N. J., was cut off from rail communication with the mainland.

BY A vote of about 3 to 1, Missouri decided that prohibition should be repealed and thus became the twenty-second state to line up in the wet column. Ratification by only fourteen more states is needed to repeal the Eighteenth amendment.

SYNOPSIS

On her eighteenth birthday, Barbara, motherless daughter of Christopher Thorne, artist, receives a birthday ring from Bruce MacLain, young artist friend of the family, but more than friend to Barbara. Bruce tells her a story of a gypsy boy, a little gypsy girl whom he loves, and the song of a silver flute. She knows it is her own love tale. Her father is killed in an accident. Relatives arrive and take charge of things. To her dismay Barbara learns that she and her two brothers and small sister are to be separated. Desperate, the four children plot to run away to Barbara's godfather, "Uncle Stephen" Drake. Stephen Drake, bachelor, forty years old, still has vivid recollections of Barbara's mother, whom he had loved eighteen years before. He had made up his mind to propose that night to Emily Trent, so that his well-ordered household might have a permanent head. But the children arrive and the proposal is interrupted. Stephen feels his heart warm to the small daughter of his early love, but he tells her he must send them all back. Kit is taken ill. Stephen finds himself unable to resume his lover-like feeling for Emily. The children's relatives appear, highly annoyed and vociferously disapproving. Stephen pacifies them. The youngsters become a recognized part of the household.

"You have reason to be," she decided, after an interval of thought. "Maybe we could pay you back. There'll be some money when they sell the Provincetown house."

"That's a good idea," Stephen agreed. "I'll present you with all of the bills."

"Promise?" she asked very gravely.

"I promise," he gravely agreed.

A day or two later he took them shopping, leaving the office at noon with no explanations, which caused Miss Finch to wonder more than ever what had happened to Mr. Drake.

Stephen wondered, too. The children, he thought, were discovering for him qualities which he did not know that he possessed. He was suddenly interested in hats and dresses and slippers, jealously wanting to do everything for Barbara's children himself as long as they were with him. He did it for her—the Barbara he had loved.

He was a little embarrassed, at first, by the suave salesladies in the shop Natalie had recommended. But the embarrassment gradually merged into interest and pride. Gay was enchanting in the frocks which the salesladies selected.

"Sweet!" they murmured to each other, loud enough for Stephen to hear. "A real little beauty!"

Gay wore her look of a little girl who had just given her shoes to an orphan. But Stephen knew she had heard the admiring comments. She was an artful little minx but she was also a beauty. It embarrassed, and pleased him, too, when she flung her arms around his neck and cried happily:

"Oh, Uncle Stephen, aren't they perfectly sweet!"

"We can't afford much for me," Barbara said when they had selected frocks for Gay and a coat with a squirrel collar and a cap banded with soft, dark fur.

"Try them on, anyway," Stephen suggested, seeing the wistful expression in her eyes.

They changed her amazingly, he thought. He had not realized the magic of pretty clothes. In these frocks, cunningly cut and fitted, she looked older—until he saw her eyes. Then she looked like a little girl dressing up.

"We can't," she protested when Stephen would have instructed the saleslady to send the enchanting frocks.

"One or two?" He smiled at her.

"One or two," she agreed, quickly returning the smile.

The saleslady displayed a short fur jacket the color of coffee with cream.

"Gracious!" Barbara exclaimed. "I can't buy fur coats, Uncle Stephen!"

"Try it on," he suggested.

She slipped her arms into the coat.

"Will you let me buy it for a present?" Stephen asked when the saleslady had disappeared in quest of other temptations.

"I can't, Uncle Stephen," she said. "You've done so much for us. I can't let you buy presents like this."

"Barbara," Stephen said, "do you know what a godfather is? He's a second father. Now, will you let me buy you the coat?"

"But you've done so much, Uncle Stephen."

"I like doing things for you," Stephen said gently. "It gives me a great deal of pleasure."

"Then I'd let him," Gay advised.

Barbara finally agreed.

"Thank you," she said, when they had decided that she should wear the coat. "I guess I have a frivolous disposition. I wish—" She paused and a wistful expression crept into her eyes. She wished Bruce could see her in the fur jacket with the muff and the soft little pull-on hat.

Stephen saw the wistful expression. He thought she wished that her father might see her. Or her mother, perhaps. Stephen, of course, knew nothing at all about Bruce.

That evening Barbara saw, for the first time, the painting which hung above the fireplace in Stephen's room.

"I wanted you to see me," she said, standing in the open door just before time for dinner. She wore one of the frocks they had selected that afternoon, a frock the color of a tea-rose, which fell to her ankles in graceful folds.

"You look very nice," Stephen said, feeling a strange disturbance in his heart.

And then she saw the painting; red rocks, blue sea, distant rust-colored sails, a girl with the wind blowing her skirt against her bare brown legs.

"Father did that!" she said, moving toward the fireplace.

"Yes," Stephen said.

"It's Mother." She stood looking up at the painting, her lashes misted with tears. "It isn't Mother's face exactly but the rest of it is."

"Yes," Stephen said again.

"She was lovely, wasn't she?"

"Very lovely." Was it memories of the Barbara he had loved, Stephen wondered, or was it the Barbara in the tea-rose frock that caused the strange disturbance in his heart? He saw her, standing there in the firelight, as he had not seen her before. She seemed, for a moment, a woman old enough to be loved as he had loved her mother.

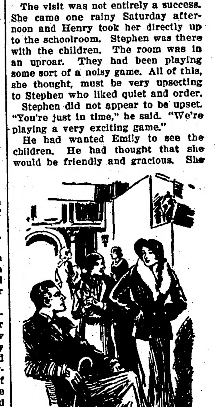
* * * * * * *

Emily came to see Barbara and the children.

The visit was not entirely a success. She came one rainy Saturday afternoon and Henry took her directly up to the schoolroom. Stephen was there with the children. The room was in an uproar. They had been playing some sort of a noisy game. All of this, she thought, must be very upsetting to Stephen who liked quiet and order.

Stephen did not appear to be upset. "You're just in time," he said. "We're playing a very exciting game."

He had wanted Emily to see the children. He had thought that she would be friendly and gracious. She was—but with a difference. Her manner was playful and slightly condescending. She made the fatal error of calling them "Stephen's kiddies."



"I Like Doing Things for You," Stephen Said Gently.

"Will you let me play the game with you?" she asked, smiling a shade too brightly, Stephen thought. They weren't babies, these children of his. They were intelligent. Why must Emily use that patronizing tone?

The children lost interest in the game. They were reserved and very polite. It was apparent that they did not intend to include Emily in the happy intimacy which Stephen shared. Stephen had wanted Emily to see the children at their best. They would be very appealing. Now they looked like bored little puppets whose strings weren't working well.

Barbara joined them, presently.

"This is Barbara," Stephen said, thinking how pretty she looked.

"How do you do, Miss Trent," Barbara said, poised and self-possessed. "I'm rather drippy, I'm afraid. I've been walking in the rain."

She wasn't a child, Emily thought, resenting Barbara's poise, resenting her glowing cheeks and the curly soft brown hair. Her manner was gracious and reserved. She was a very pretty girl.

Conversation became increasingly difficult.

"Are you having a nice visit?" Emily asked.

"Very nice," Barbara answered.

"Very nice," Gay echoed, trying to be tactful and polite.

"Chips" advanced, baring his teeth in what Jamie called "a smile." Emily drew herself into the depths of the chair. She was timid about strange dogs.

"Here, 'Chips'!" Jamie called, withering scorn in his voice. Couldn't this lady see that "Chips" was smiling and wanted to be friendly? He wished she would leave so they could go on with the game.

Emily had brought Kit a book—"The Motorboat Boys in Southern Waters." Kit thanked her politely and laid it aside. Emily felt that something was wrong. And then she noticed that "Moby Dick" lay on the table beside Kit's chair. The book she had brought was too juvenile, though the clerk in the bookshop had assured her that it was a favorite with boys of any age. She grew pink with confusion. She wished that she had not come.

She wanted to be charming to the children. All the way out she had pictured herself winning their immediate affection. But everything was wrong. She introduced subjects which she thought might interest them. They were polite but bored. Emily became increasingly nervous. Her head ached. She felt as though she were getting a cold.

GEM OF AN IDEA

"Jim," said the puzzled young bank clerk to his friend, "what's a good thing to give a girl for a birthday present?"

"I gave my girl a ring," replied Jim.

His companion shook his head.

"Couldn't afford it," he replied. "How much did it cost?"

"Nothing," smiled back Jim. "She's a telephone operator."

AN OFFICIAL ERROR

By H. M. Egbert

"WE ARE all agreed upon our verdict, gentlemen?" inquired the presiding officer of the court-martial.

"Yes, sir," answered Major Lafleche.

"Yes, sir," repeated the other members, down to the junior one, Lieutenant Leblanc, who repeated the words in a dry voice and licked his lips nervously.

"It is the only verdict possible under the laws of war," said Colonel Boileau. "Let the prisoner be brought in."

Two noncommissioned officers led the young fellow into the tent. He was a fair-haired boy, not more than two or three and twenty. He faced the court impassively, but the fear of death was evident in his ashen face and twining fingers.

"Jean Marchand," said the colonel, "you have been found guilty of the crime of sleeping on sentry duty. There is only one punishment for that. Have you anything to say before sentence is pronounced upon you?"

"Not much, sir," answered the boy. "I had not slept for three nights, owing to the forced marches. And the sergeant put me on duty two nights in succession, by error."

"Let Sergeant Lavergne be recalled," commanded the colonel, and presently the sergeant appeared within the tent.

"Was the prisoner placed on sentry duty on two successive nights?" asked Colonel Boileau.

"No, sir," replied the sergeant quietly.

He was not sure, now that they questioned him, but having given his evidence, he did not want to get into trouble. Besides, he hated the young American who had returned at the outbreak of war to fight for his father's country.

Marchand, with his American ideas, had been what is called a "lawyer." He had made trouble with the commissariat, with the little thieving corporal who sold the hay; altogether he was what the sergeant regarded as a bad influence in the force—that is to say, a man, not a machine.

War had been declared four days before, and the company was moving by forced marches toward the frontier. In war time sleeping on sentry duty has, justly enough, only one penalty—death. Marchand could hope for no mercy, for his negligence might have cost hundreds of lives.

He had been brought to America in childhood, and had grown up an American in every sense of the word. His father, a silk importer, had prospered in the land of his adoption, and two months before, while on a business trip to his native land, had died suddenly. The boy and his mother had hurried to France to adjust his affairs. Then Mrs. Marchand had remembered some old friends in Nancy, and had gone there for a brief visit, while the son settled the Paris business tangle.

Suddenly, like a bolt from the blue, war blazed out. Mrs. Marchand, shut up in Nancy, could get no news of her son. And Jean, ablaze with new love for the land of his birth, had enlisted as a private soldier.

The tragedy of the affair was that Nancy was not six miles distant, and the mother, waiting there, did not know but that Jean was in Paris.

Colonel Boileau faced the prisoner.

"The sentence of this court is that you be shot at dawn," he said.

The noncommissioned officers took the young man to the guard tent. The court-martial dispersed. It was evening, and the company had been ordered to advance no further till it received orders.

The firing squadron which had been told off to perform the execution at dawn whispered together. It was a melancholy duty, yet a necessity, if discipline was to be maintained, for upon the vigilance of her soldiers the safety of the motherland depended. In his tent Colonel Boileau scanned his war map, together with his aide, Jacquevel, the captain who had endeavored most strongly of all the court to find extenuating circumstances.

When the business of the night was done Boileau turned to Jacquevel.

"It's a sad business," he said. "But it's a necessity. And, to be frank, Jacquevel, I suspected that young man of more than the crime of which he was accused. If it were only that I should telegraph Joffre, asking for a commutation of sentence."

"Of what do you suspect him, sir?" inquired Captain Jacquevel.

"Espionage," answered the colonel briefly. "He is not a Frenchman. Did you not detect his accent?"

"Alsatian," suggested Captain Jacquevel.

"Never," replied Boileau. "I spent three months in Alsace. They have the heavy Teutonic guttural in their throats, not that North German burr of Marchand's. I think—"

But what he thought was never said, for at that moment an orderly raised the flap of the tent.

"A lady wishes to see you, sir," he said. "A Mme. Marchand of Nancy."

Colonel Boileau looked triumphantly at Jacquevel. "You see," he said. "A prearranged thing. No doubt another spy, passing as a relative. Well, show her in, Louis. And we'll keep her when she comes in," he added to Jacquevel, "unless she can tell a plain story."

The tent flap was raised again and a little old lady came in. Despite his angry suspicions Colonel Boileau rose and offered her a camp stool. For the little old lady was so typically French.

"Well, madam?" he asked.

"My son has enlisted in your company, colonel," said the little old lady triumphantly.

Yes, there was triumph in her voice and all through the story she told him. For Mme. Marchand had in secret wished that her son might not forfeit his birthright, and, learning at Nancy, by a friend who managed to reach her, that Jean had enlisted, nothing would satisfy her but that she must go to the place where he was and see him in the uniform which his father had worn.

"And, thank heaven, he is here," she continued. "I walked from Nancy, starting at noon."

"You walked from Nancy, madam?" inquired the colonel incredulously.

"Six miles? Pooh! That is nothing. During the war of 1870, when my Philippe was serving on the frontier, I walked from Nancy to Paris. And now I have come to see my Jean in the midst of his comrades. To think that, with all his American citizenship he preserved his French heart—"

"Did you say he was an American, madam?" demanded Colonel Boileau gruffly.

"Assuredly. His father and I went to America when he was a baby, and he obtained citizenship at twenty-one. But a Frenchman never forgets France. Now take me to him, colonel!"

Colonel Boileau sat staring into the little old lady's face. She was typically French, so smartly attired, despite her widow's weeds. Captain Jacquevel coughed in a melancholy manner and looked down at the ground.

"My son is only a private now," continued Mme. Marchand. "But soon you will see him a corporal, and then a sergeant. He will be promoted for gallantry upon the field and made lieutenant, then captain, major—who knows but that the end of the war may see him a colonel?"

Colonel Boileau could find nothing to say. For a long while he sat staring at the little old lady. At last he arose.

"Captain Jacquevel, you will offer our hospitality to Mme. Marchand until I return," he said, and, leaving the tent, went to the guard tent.

Inside, between two corporals, sat Jean Marchand. He was seated bolt upright, staring out into the darkness. The terror had not yet come upon him, for it all seemed like a disordered dream—all the incidents since his enlistment.

Colonel Boileau led the prisoner outside the tent. The corporals, springing to their feet, saluted their officer. It did not seem strange to them that he should have come for Marchand—nothing seemed strange in times like these.

When they had gone a little way Colonel Boileau shouted, "Halt!"

The prisoner faced him expectantly. He did not know that the hour of execution had not been advanced.

"Marchand," said the colonel, "your mother is here."

Jean Marchand's hand went up to his hat brim mechanically, in the manner he had learned.

"Marchand, you will die at sunrise," said Colonel Boileau. "But you will appear before your mother and tell her that you are a free man. She will think that you have been killed in action. Do you understand?"

The young man nodded, and Colonel Boileau brought him to the tent door and conducted his mother out to him.

Half an hour later a wagon, drawn by four horses and escorted by a file of soldiers, conveyed Mme. Marchand back to Nancy. Her eyes were brimming with tears of happiness at the thought of her son's future.

Jean Marchand stood at the colonel's door. He was awaiting the soldiers who were to conduct him back to the guard tent.

Colonel Boileau took him by the shoulders and pointed southward.

"Yonder lies Tourville," he said. "The Army of the East is recruiting there. Your future lies there. Officially, you die at dawn. But Jean Marchand is not a unique name, and it is possible that another Jean Marchand may win honors in war and serve the army of his mother land."

Nahunta, Georgia, Town That Has No Cemetery

Nahunta, Ga., is a town without a cemetery. No one has ever been buried there, and the town authorities seem to be willing to let the cemetery at Hickox, four miles away, suffice for Nahunta also, observes a correspondent in the New York Times.

Usually when a new town is laid out one of the first spots designated is the cemetery site. But when Nahunta was created those instrumental in its development decided it should not have a burying ground. The town is proud of the derivation of its name, also. A railroad shipping clerk often had to write N. A. Hunter, the name of a local saw mill operator, so he coined "Nahunta" from the name and initials. The townspeople liked it, and got the legislature to incorporate it.

Radio Masses Opposed

The holding of Catholic masses by radio, proposed in France because of the shortage of priests in many country districts, from which suggestions came that loudspeakers might be placed in priestless churches, has been discouraged by the vatican newspaper Osservatore Romano, which laid down the doctrine that "to accomplish their duty the faithful must be present at a church where the mass is celebrated."

WORLD CULTURE AIDED BY GAMES

Lasting Impression of Pythian Festivals.

So much stress has been placed upon the Olympic games that it is common to think of Greek contests in the light of athletic prowess, but equally as important as the Olympic contests were the old Pythian games, which gave most of their attention to the arts and literature.

The beginning of the games stretches back into the realms of mythology and is credited to Apollo. According to the ancient belief, Apollo, flushed with his victory over the snaky monster Python, inaugurated the annual festivals. They were conducted under the leadership of the Delphians for many years, but around 600 B. C. they passed under the control of the Amphyctions. They were placed upon a four-year basis at this time and when given were employed to honor Apollo.

Because they honored Apollo, the sweet singer of the Olympic gods, it was natural that the first Pythian games should be, in reality, a contest of musicians. The festival continued as such for a long period, but about the time the Amphyctions assumed control, athletic contests, horse races and various competitions in art and literature were added, thus making of the festival not only a competition of culture, but a meeting of those not gifted in the arts of the day.

The Pythian games, as such, ended around the first of the Fifth century after the birth of Christ. Their influence has lived after them, however, for various contests in the present day date back to the Pythian games for their original inspiration. There are, for instance, the local and national contests for art and sculpture. Artists from all over the world compete in the big international displays to seek honors and prizes.

In music the fame of the Welsh Elstedfod is world wide. At this meeting singers and choruses from many lands meet to compete in contests, in which the various competitors sing or perform the same composition before a group of skilled judges.

The young orators of the country, meeting in their regional contests, from which the winners advance to the national and then international contests, can look back to the Pythian games for the origin of their competition.

Unlike the Olympic games, which have gradually reached out to embrace all types of sport and gather them under a single control, the Pythian games have been broken up and scattered into the various categories that originally were combined. Because of the diversification, the origin of many of the modern contests is forgotten, but the Pythian games have had a more profound effect upon the culture of the world than the Olympic games have had upon the athletic.

Best of Philosophy in Old Negro Sentiment

It is more or less generally known that the old time darkies of the South always faced things hopefully, even against the greatest odds. And many of them are still that way. Just the other day some of our southern friends called to our attention a striking bit of old southern darkey philosophy that we learned in our boyhood days.

No advice could be more appropriate just at this time when the whole country is enjoying the first upswing from those awful four years of depression. It seems that one old darkey whose motto was "keep going, don't give up" rimed it out like this:

Ef it rain o' ef it blow
Kep uh gwyne.
Ef it sleet or ef it snow,
Keep uh gwyne.
'Taint no use to sit an' pine
Ef de fish ain't on de line!
Jes' bait yo' hook u-gin an'
Keep uh gwyne.

Simple, but well expressed. If we "keep uh gwyne" we are bound to get out of the mire. So let's all "keep gwyne," folks.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Digestion's Best Hour

Digestive action reaches its height just after dinner, it has been established in experiments at a New Jersey college. Just before breakfast is the period of least activity. The starch digestive power of saliva secreted by different individuals at the same time of day and by the same individual at different times in the day was compared under rigidly controlled conditions. The study revealed that saliva secreted a half-hour after meals is decidedly more active than that collected immediately before. There is an enormous decline in activity during the night.

DESCRIBES FARM ADJUSTMENT PLAN

Agricultural College President Says Federal Program Seeks to Coordinate Production with Reduced Exports

The Federal farm adjustment program is partly guided by the belief that export of agricultural commodities will not soon recover its volume of five or ten years ago, in the opinion of F. D. Farrell, President Kansas Agricultural College, writing in the August issue of the American Bankers Association Journal.

"Nobody knows whether the farm adjustment program will succeed," writes Mr. Farrell. "Its sponsors describe it frankly as an experiment. It seeks to socialize agriculture at least to the extent that farmers, in what is believed to be the public interest, will restrain their production activities and that processors, distributors and consumers will contribute something toward paying farmers for exercising this restraint. The adjustment programs definitely are based on the fact that prices are determined primarily by supply and demand. They also are based on the assumption that the export business in agricultural commodities will not soon return to its volume of five or ten years ago.

Dependence on Public Support

"The plan offers wheat price insurance for 1933, 1934 and 1935, for the domestically consumed portion of the wheat crop. The insured price is to be sufficiently high to give the domestically consumed portion of the wheat crop pre-war purchasing power. If the plan is as effective as its sponsors hope it will be, the reduction in supply may influence wheat prices so that the entire wheat crop will have pre-war purchasing power.

"If the adjustment program succeeds, its launching probably will mark the end of an era of extreme individualism in agriculture in the United States," says Mr. Farrell.

"Recent fundamental changes led Secretary Wallace to say, 'What we really have to do is to change the whole psychology of the people of the United States.' This is a large order. It involves the whole program of farm adjustment as well as the larger national economic program, of which farm adjustment is a part. If the people decline to participate in the program to the extent necessary to give the experiment a fair trial, we shall never know whether farm adjustment as now proposed would have succeeded or not if it had been given a fair trial."

BANKERS PREPARE FARM FINANCE BOOK

Tells Bankers and Farmers What to Consider in Making Sound Loans

A book on "Making Farm Investments Safe" has been prepared by the Agricultural Commission of the American Bankers Association, summarizing material published by it during the past ten years. It presents a compendium of scientific facts, practice and experience in farming, with timely and helpful suggestions to serve as a reference and guide in the daily routine of banking and farming. From it practical workers in these fields can obtain an idea as to what extent and in what manner farm loans should be limited by soil erosion, weeds, plant diseases, rodents and fire hazards, etc.

The book also indicates how much is added to the security of a farm loan by the farmer who keeps accounts and practices good business methods, as well as the extent to which loans are safeguarded by crop rotation, production of legumes, judicious use of commercial fertilizers, the use of quality seed and the providing of home grown feeds.

Another section sets forth the precautions that should be exercised by both the banker and farmer when negotiating loans to increase or improve dairy production, or beef, sheep, swine or poultry production, as well as what factors should be considered in the economic marketing of products and the way efficiency in production affects efficiency in marketing. Many other everyday details of farm life that have a practical financial significance are treated in the book. A particular important section deals with experience with farm leases and another with directed farm credit.

Banks Make Best Record in R. F. C. Loans Repayments.

Among the loans of $2,819,000,000 made by the Federal Government through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the highest percentage of repayments, official reports show, has been made by the banks, indicating the return of stability as the chief unsettling element of public fear has been lifted from them.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has authorized cash advances, fully secured by sound collateral, to 6,278 banks since it began operations in February, 1932, and made actual disbursements to them in the amount of $1,221,878,000. Of this amount, however, $545,073,000, or over 44 per cent, has been repaid by the banks. All other classes of borrowers combined have repaid about 16 per cent of their loans.

N. S. A. Students to Cut Expenses With Vegetables

A number of NorthwestSchool students have arranged to pay part of their regular school expenses this year by bringing canned fruits and vegetables and other home grown produce when they report for duty at the opening of the fall term. Much of the canning has been done as a regular home project work required of each student during the vacation months. This work is outlined by Miss Retta Bede and Miss Fanny Lippitt of the Home Economics division and supervised by Home Project Leaders E. R. Clark and R. J. Christgau.

Potatoes, cabbage, and other vegetables will also be purchased from needy students by T. H. McCall, Horticulturist, and used in the school dining hall during the winter months. Nearby students will have an opportunity to sell surplus oats and barley to the station for use in the livestock department.

School officials report widespread interest in the plan, as indicated by many letters of inquiry from former as well as new students. For additional information write the Northwest School of Agriculture, Crookston.

Local School Receives Questionaires for Survey

The State of Minnesota is conducting a survey to gain information regarding unemployed young men and women between the ages of 17 and 24, who wish to continue their education but are unable to do so because of lack of funds.

Questionaires have been received at the local school and anyone in the community who is interested is urged to call at the office of the Superintendent at the local school to fill out a blank or secure further information regarding the matter.

Harvest Festival

A very large crowd came out onSunday to the harvest festival of the Nazareth Lutheran church held at the F. K. Fredrickson home.

Rev. J. A. Johnson, chaplain of the Home School for Girls at Sauk Center, Minn., was the speaker of the day. A very interesting program consisting of song and music was given in the morning and afternoon. The Holt Community Band played a concert late in the afternoon which closed the festival.

The net proceeds from the dinner and afternoon lunch were $58.95. The Luther League also had a refreshment stand and took in a few dollars. All this money will be used to pay the general budget of the local church.

Many former Holt residents who live in nearby cities were here for the day.

Holt Voted Dry

The special election held here on Tuesday to vote on the repeal of the 18th Amendment, went dry in the Village of Holt. There were 69 votes cast and 46 of them were against repeal. The Township of Holt also voted dry by 33 against and 9 for repeal. East Valley voted wet by four votes. There vote being twelve against and sixteen for repeal.

Thief River Falls went wet by 78 votes and Warren followed the same course, going wet by only nine votes. Crookston set the pace at 2 to 1 for repeal and East Grand Forks went damp.

The nation's repeal complexion the way its face looks now, is, that by November 7 enough states will have voted on the big question to decide whether the "wets" or "drys" are going to hold sway in this great country of ours.

The great state of Minnesota, the home state of Mr. Andrew Volstead, "father" of the prohibition enforcement law, went wet by a two to one vote in the special election on Tuesday.

Twenty-nine states have now voted on the question and all of them gone wet. Some game eh, 29 to 0.

4-H Members to Banquet on County Achievement Day

When Marshall county's 4-H club members and their local club leaders come to Warren for their annual fall Achievement Day on September 23, they will be entertained royally at a banquet and entertainment program, preliminary plans for the event being made last week by the Community Activities committee of the Warren Commercial club.

The committee headed by G. C. Magoris, with the aid of the civic club's entertainment committee will seek cooperation from every business and professional man and woman in the city to stage this banquet and thus show Warren's appreciation to the splendid work done during the past year by the 4-H club members of the county.

Detailed work for the Achievement day celebration will get under way this week when banquet tickets will be sold to residents of the city. Program details are already under way and will call for an address by a prominent Minnesotan actively interested in 4-H club work.

Secretaries of the various local 4-H clubs scattered throughout the county are requested to submit their records and reports to H. F. Harrison, county club leader before September 20. This is necessary in order to have the activities judged before Achievement day when the announcement will be made of the winner of the WarrenPostNo. 27 American Legion Trophy. Individual club members will compete for $150 in money provided by the Warren Commercial Club. —Warren Sheaf.

Sugar Beet Lifting Started

According to the Grand Forks Herald, lifting of sugar beets in the Red River valley started Tuesday and first shipments of the new crop are expected at the East Grand Forks sugar factory within a few days, factory officials stated.

Although now under way at only a few of the 41 loading stations in the valley, the big beet harvest is expected to become general in a few days.

Slicing of the beets will be started at the East Grand Forks plant about a week after the crop movement begins, when enough beets are received to insure a continous run at the factory. This will be about September 18, officials estimated, and approximately 100,000 lbs. of beets are expected at the plant by that time.

No report on the quality of the beets already harvested has been received, but the largest crop ever grown in the valley is expected this fall. Twenty-four thousand acres are being grown this year, approximately 4,000 more than last year. The crop has been benefitted by recent rains and generally should be of good weight, experts said.

Approximately 300 men have been hired to report for work at the East Grand Forks plant when slicing and manufacturing operations are started. This is 70 more than were given employment for the 1932 fall run.

Mrs. Olof Ness spent a few days at the St. Lukes hospital in Thief River Falls this week where she underwent an operation for blood poison in a finger. Mrs. Geo. Johnson is staying at the Ness home doing house work.

Big Crop Harvested

The biggest crop harvested and sold here this year was that of Carl Ostby of McIntosh. He owns an open quarter section of land east of Mud Lake near the Olaf Dahl farm on which he had a hundred and fifty acres of crop this year. The yield was exceptionally heavy.

Olaf Dahl and son put in and harvested the crop for Mr. Ostby and when it was sold at the local elevator it brought him about $2,100. Even after paying all the expenses he will have a nice sum left, as well as all the seed for next year. He had the farm into rye and barley this year.

The Rodahl Brothers, sons of Mrs. Olaus Rodahl, harvested the biggest flax crop here this fall. They had a field of seventy-five acres which brought them 840 bushels of nice flax.

Guy Anderson harvested the biggest sweet clover seed crop in this community. He had a large field which yielded fourteen and a half bushels to the acre.

Road To Be Graveled

The county highway engineer and his surveyors from Warren were here last week to look for good gravel pits out of which to get gravel to surface the road going west a half mile north of town. The question of graveling this road has been brought up at different times since it was regraded but, now the county board has finaly ordered the job done according to reports.

Whether the work will be done by teams or trucks has not been announced but, many farmers were in hopes of getting a job to haul the gravel they said.

Auction Sale Monday

Mrs. Arthur E. Olson who has for the past few years been farming a quarter section four and a half miles northwest of Holt, has decided to quit farming and is this week advertising an auction sale to be held on the farm on Monday afternoon, September 18. O. C. Brenna is the auctioneer and Geo. Fricker, clerk. Sale starts at 12:30 p. m.

Highway Construction Jobs Let By Highway Department

Contracts for highway construction projects totalling more than $400,000 were awarded last week by the state highway department. Work will begin at once, furnishing jobs to from 400 to 500 men, it is estimated.

Last week the highway department let contracts for more than $500,000 of work in various parts of the state, and contractors are already on the job and are putting more men to work daily. The awards made to date will make work for approximately 1,000 men. As the contracts are being financed from Federal funds, the hiring of labor for the project is being done through the National Reemployment Service and its approved agencies. Another group of contracts will be let this week.

The jobs to be worked on up in this end of the state are: the grading of Trunk Highway No. 11 between Roseau and Warroad and on No. 32 between Red Lake Falls and No. 8.

C. L. Heinze and son Frank of Thief River Falls have been repairing and painting the buildings on their farm here the past two weeks.

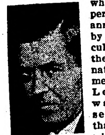
Wallace Asks 15 Per Cent Wheat Acreage Reduction—NRA Campaign Among the Consumers—Raymond Moley's Resignation—Washington for Repeal.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

WHEAT farmers of the nation, in order to receive federal cash benefits under the domestic allotment plan, must agree to reduce their 1934 wheat acreage by 15 per cent. This was the announcement made by Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, after the news of the international wheat agreement reached in the London conference was received. The secretary estimated that this reduction will mean a cut of about 9,600,000 acres in wheat plantings and of more than 124,000,000 bushels in the 1934 wheat crop, provided all the farmers sign up. This they were being strongly urged to do in appeals that were broadcast throughout the wheat belt.



Sec'y Wallace

Under the allotment plan, the machinery of which is now completed, the government will pay the farmer 28 cents per bushel on 54 per cent of his crop, or that portion destined for consumption in this country. In return the farmer must agree to cut his 1934 wheat plantings by 15 per cent. Some $120,000,000 in compensating payments is expected to be paid this year, if all wheat farmers sign government contracts promising to reduce their next year's planting by the stipulated amount. Funds for the payments are expected to be raised by a 30-cents-a-bushel processing tax on the flour millers.

The application each farmer signs obligates him to sign a contract with Secretary Wallace when his application is approved in Washington. It must be accompanied by a map of his farm, showing location of all buildings, his crop system, and legal description of his location. It must also have a signed statement of the thresherman as to how much wheat came off the farm in the last three years and a certificate of the elevator or railroad official who bought the wheat.

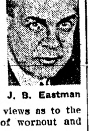
"BUY under the blue eagle," was the slogan with which Administrator Hugh Johnson opened the great drive to persuade the entire nation to give its full support to the NRA. The cry was taken up by an army of a million and a half volunteers who started out to canvass the households of the country, to tell the people what the recovery act means and to enlist the individual citizens under its emblem.

General Johnson warned the people that "even a shadow" of boycott, intimidation and violence would wreck the whole endeavor; but he insisted that confining one's patronage to dealers who fly the blue eagle would not be boycotting the others and would be not only justifiable but necessary to the campaign's success.

Completion of the automobile code and its acceptance by President Roosevelt was counted a great achievement by NRA, and the manufacturers were fairly well satisfied with the compromise on the union labor problem which gave them the right to deal with their workers on a basis of merit and efficiency. President William Green of the American Federation of Labor was quick to take advantage of the provision of the code which, he held, permits the workers to organize. He wired the general organizer, William Collins, in Detroit to appeal to auto employees to "unite with labor." Pessimistic observers see in all this the seeds of future conflicts.

Henry Ford was still silent on his intentions concerning the code. General Johnson said emphatically that if he did not sign he could not get the blue eagle; that outdoing the code with shorter hours and higher wages would not be compliance.

JOSEPH B. EASTMAN, who as federal co-ordinator of transportation has perhaps the hardest job in the administration, is promoting a freight car equipment replacement program, believing this would be a great contribution toward the increasing of employment—as it undoubtedly would. He has asked the executives of class 1 railroads "to make a thorough canvass of existing freight car equipment and to submit at the earliest practicable date their views as to the repair or retirement of wornout and obsolete cars."



J. B. Eastman

The railroads are asked to submit their recommendations for repairs and retirements of each year up to and including 1938 with the average cost for each car.

Mr. Eastman wants the railroads to retire and destroy or rehabilitate the thousands of cars whose period of service has expired. He also asks them to consider the voluntary restriction to service on their own lines of cars of light construction and cars of larger capacity that are not good for more than two and a half years of further service.

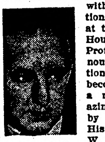
PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT selected Secretary of the Interior Ickes to be administrator for the oil industry, and then selected the other 14 members of the planning and conservation committee to assist Mr. Ickes in this work.

The President also took steps to relax the gold embargo for the benefit of the mine owners. He issued two orders, one allowing the sale in foreign markets of gold mined in the United States and the other stringently binding the anti-hoarding regulations to safeguard the national supply.

He made sure that this permission to give gold producers the advantage of the higher prices available abroad would also be shared by the refiners and his two orders made this possible.

Then Mr. Roosevelt cleaned up his desk and began a week-end vacation. He attended the Dutchess county fair at Rhinebeck, and next day embarked on Vincent Astor's yacht for a cruise that was to last until after Labor day.

RAYMOND MOLEY, regarded as the "ace" of the Roosevelt brain trust, is no longer assistant secretary of state or in any other way connected with the administration. Following a call at the summer White House in Hyde Park, Professor Moley announced his resignation and his plans to become the editor of a new weekly magazine to be established by Vincent Astor. His associates will be W. Averill Harriman and V. V. McNitt. The publication will be devoted to controversial articles concerning politics and economics and Moley said one of its purposes will be to interpret the ideas of the Roosevelt administration, though it will not be in any sense an agent of the NRA.



Raymond Moley

Both Professor Moley and Secretary of State Hull denied that the former's resignation was caused by the disagreements between those two gentlemen which culminated at the London conference. Many independent commentators held that Moley's retirement from the administration heralded the passing of the regime of the professor and the return of practical politicians to the direction of the nation's affairs.

REPEALISTS were unnecessarily worried about the state of Washington, partly because the vote on wiping out the Eighteenth amendment was in the form of referendums in each of the legislative districts. This scheme, however, availed the drys nothing, for the state voted for repeal by about 5 to 2. Nearly complete returns showed that only one district, with two delegates, went dry, so the repeal amendment will be ratified by the other 97 delegates when the convention meets October 3 in Olympia. Washington is the twenty-fourth state in the repeal column.

The state emergency committee, a retentionist organization, fought repeal. It contended that in the event of abolition of the prohibition amendment the state would be without liquor regulation, except laws prohibiting sale of alcoholic beverages to Indians and minors, until the legislature meets again in 1935.

TEA and conversation were all that Montagu Norman, governor of the Bank of England, obtained when he visited President Roosevelt at Hyde Park. He was accompanied by George L. Harrison, governor of the New York federal reserve bank, and he hoped to talk about stabilization of the currency. But there were various other guests present, and still more dropped in during the afternoon—and Mr. Roosevelt had no desire to talk about stabilization or any allied matters. So it was just a pleasant social affair, and Mr. Norman left early.

Montagu Norman

The eminent Londoner, however, did have a number of conferences with financial men, including Secretary of the Treasury Woodin, and monetary problems were discussed, but the results, if any, were not made public.

THIRTEEN deaths are to be laid to a storm in New Mexico. The Golden State Limited, a transcontinental passenger train, plunged through a weakened bridge into an arroyo near Tucumcari, eight persons being killed and many injured. During the same storm a night mail and passenger transport plane crashed against Mesa mountain not far from Quay, and the two pilots and three passengers perished.

Two pursuit training planes collided in mid air over Randolph field, San Antonio, Texas, two cadets and an instructor losing their lives. Another instructor leaped with his parachute and was saved.

If only she wouldn't try so hard, Stephen thought, feeling sorry for Emily, resenting her inability to interest the children. If she would treat them as equals instead of using that playful tone. He exerted himself to restore the usual gayety of the schoolroom. It was useless. Emily was nervous and uneasy. Barbara looked uncomfortable. The children were bored and polite.

There was, however, one bright moment amid the difficulties of the visit. Gay, a born diplomat, admired Emily's hair.

"It must look lovely when it's let down," she said, glancing up at Emily from under her long curled lashes. "Like the fairy tale—'Rapunzel, Rapunzel, let down your hair.'"

Emily flushed with pleasure. She hoped Stephen saw her as a fairy-tale princess. She relaxed, for a moment, and was friendly and gracious, especially to Gay.

But only for a moment. She saw Stephen look at Barbara, curled on the sofa in a smart little frock of honey-colored wool. She saw herself in the glass doors of the bookcase. She didn't look like a fairy-tale princess. She looked almost middle-aged, compared with Barbara's glowing youth. Her head throbbed painfully. She wished again that she hadn't come.

Henry brought tea and little frosted cakes. Barbara served it prettily.

"I've had lots of experience," she said to Emily, wanting to be friendly. "Father had 'Visiting Days' at the studio. There were always a great many ladies. Father was very handsome."

"That must have been nice," Emily said vaguely. Stephen had said that Barbara was a child, "younger than any of them in many ways." She didn't act like a child. Her manner was assured. And the way she had been brought up! Artists—

"Two lumps for you, Uncle Stephen." Barbara dimpled and smiled as she handed him the cup. "I've learned that, anyway."

Artful, Emily thought. Stephen looked at her so tenderly. But he looked at Emily, too. She felt better when they left the schoolroom and walked downstairs together. She spoke of Gay with enthusiasm as they waited in the hall for Thomas to bring the car.

She knows I think less of Gay than any of them, Stephen thought. She's jealous of Barbara. That was absurd. Emily was too intelligent to be jealous of a child. He silently apologized. Stephen, as Aunt Edith had once before observed, had much to learn about women.

"Will you come for dinner some evening soon?" Emily asked as Stephen settled her into the car and folded the robe about her. "Father enjoys your visits so much. You have rather neglected us lately."

Had he hesitated a moment too long before he had accepted the invitation, Emily wondered, as the car followed the winding drive. She told herself that Stephen had not changed. He must, of course, spend some time with the children. Everything would be right again when they had gone.

But her arguments were not convincing. Stephen had changed. Tears filled her eyes, spilled down over her cheeks.

When Stephen returned to the schoolroom, he found the children engaged in a heated argument. They looked a little guilty.

"What's the matter?" he asked.

"Gay says you're goin' to marry her," Jamie said indignantly, his face and his ears very red.

"Jamie!" Barbara said.

"Shut up!" hissed Kit.

"Are you, Uncle Stephen?" asked Gay, who loved a romance.

"Why?" Stephen felt embarrassed. He lit a cigarette.

"Well," Gay reported, ignoring warning glances from Kit and Barbara, "Sarah told Henry you were and your Aunt Edith told Mrs. King. It seems as though everybody knows."

"Did they? Stephen wondered irritably. He looked at Barbara, recalling what Aunt Edith had said a day or two ago. "You shouldn't pay so much attention to Barbara," Aunt Edith had said. 'Girls are always ready to fall in love. You don't want to hurt her, Stephen."

Aunt Edith had "notions," Stephen thought. "She thinks I'm a nice old man," he had told her, annoyed at the fantastic notion that Barbara might fall in love with him. It was flattering to think that the child found him attractive. But he hadn't thought, for a moment, that Aunt Edith had reasonable grounds for so fantastic a notion.

He was sure of it now. Barbara smiled at him from the sofa.

"Why shouldn't Uncle Stephen marry anyone he likes?" she asked with a merry disarming laugh. "He should have some children of his own. He knows how to treat them so nicely."

Stephen should have felt relieved. But, somehow, he didn't exactly.

* * * * * * *

Barbara wrote to Bruce—

". . . We are to stay for Christmas. Isn't that lovely of Uncle Stephen? Kit is lots better. Thomas took him for a ride this afternoon and he's able, now, to have meals in the dining room. Aunt Edith (I don't call her that to her face. It would be too much like calling the queen of Belgium 'Aunt Lizzie') wishes we'd have our meals in the schoolroom. We do talk a lot, I guess, and sometimes Jamie spills things. But Uncle Stephen doesn't mind. He says he has just found out that dinner can be an entertaining occasion.

"Uncle Stephen took me to the opera the other night all alone. The opera! Doesn't that sound grand? We sat in a box, if you please, and I had a dress the color of strawberries and cream and a strawberry velvet wrap and gilt slippers with buckles. I felt very elegant and not at all like me. And the music, Bruce! It was 'Madame Butterfly.' I cried at the part where she waited all night for her lover and Uncle Stephen had to lend me his handkerchief because, with all my elegance, I hadn't remembered to bring one, which shows you that I haven't changed at all, in spite of sitting in a box at the opera and having a new dress. . . ."

Bruce wrote to Barbara—

" . . . It all sounds very exciting. I know you were lovely in the dress that looks like 'strawberries and cream' but I'd rather think of you in a yellow jersey with a rip sewed up and an old brown skirt and sandals and socks. The dress like cream and strawberries would be too elegant for my studio, which is up four flights of dingy stairs with a fruit store underneath.

"I'm glad, of course, that you and the children will be together for Christmas. I had hoped that you would be here. I'm trying to be patient. Don't fall in love with 'Uncle Stephen,' no matter how nice he is. . . ."

Barbara answered—

"That wasn't a nice letter, Bruce. It didn't sound a bit like you. Don't you know that I'd rather live up over the fruit store with you than anything else in the world? But Uncle Stephen has been so kind. I think he enjoys doing things for us. It's only being grateful to let him, isn't it? Besides, he is my godfather and that makes it all right.

"I do love him in a way, of course. But not the way you mean. That's the way I love you. I told you Uncle Stephen is old. Forty, anyway, though he isn't bald and is very distinguished looking. But as for falling in love with him—Bruce MacLain, that's the silliest thing you ever thought of in all the born days of your life.

"He will probably marry Miss Emily Trent. We (the children and I) don't think she's nice enough for him but if he likes her, we'll give him our blessing. I don't think she likes us very much, though she has come to see us twice and invited Gay to her house for luncheon one day. Gay is lovely to her because she wants to be a bridesmaid. As though she could! Why, you know, Bruce, Gay couldn't even spell it.

"So you see you've been very silly, Bruce. But I love you in spite of that. I love you so much that sometimes it's like an ache and sometimes it's like music and sometimes I just want to cry. You do believe me, don't you? If you don't I'll probably drown myself in the fountain in the conservatory. No, I couldn't. There isn't enough water and, besides, the goldfish might be offended. But I would do something desperate. I love you so very much. . . ."

CHAPTER X

Bruce was coming for Christmas.

Barbara asked Stephen if she might invite him, as she sat facing him across a small table in a tearoom one afternoon a week before Christmas.

"Who is Bruce?" Stephen asked, when she had shyly made the request and sat waiting for his answer, her hands clasped tightly under the edge of the table.

"He's a friend of ours," she answered, wanting to tell him all about Bruce, wondering why she found it a difficult thing to do. "Father liked him."

"An artist?"

"He will be—some time." Her voice was warm with enthusiasm. "Father said he has a great deal of talent."

"Young or old?"

"About twenty-five, I guess."

She said twenty-five as though it were not so very young. Stephen felt an odd sort of pang. There were times when it did not please him to be reminded of his age.

This was one of the times. They had been shopping all day—presents for the children, a fur neckpiece for Martha in Provincetown, gifts for the relatives. He had enjoyed shopping with Barbara. He enjoyed looking at her across the small intimate table. He saw admiring glances directed at their table, heard admiring comments. He was very proud of his little fillette.

He had long ago given up any attempt to fit her into one of the pigeonholes in his orderly clear-thinking mind. A child? A woman? He didn't know. He thought of her merely as Barbara. She had come to be very dear to him, gay and amusing, grave sometimes, finding adventure in commonplace things. The gift of laughter. It gives him a jolt, at times like that, to realize that she was just past eighteen years old.

"You would like Bruce to come?" he asked, knowing that he could deny her nothing.

"Oh, yes, Uncle Stephen," she assured him. "You see his family lives in the west and he wouldn't have time to go home. The children like Bruce. He just about lived at our house in Provincetown."

Seeing the Good Things in Life

One of the Great Factors in Man's Search for Happiness.

Happiness consists largely in the appreciation of the good things which occur—the things which are blessings. These may be temporal blessings or spiritual experiences. The persons who recognize their blessings and give thanks for them find life has a wonderful side. There is seldom a day when something does not occur which is pleasant, which averts misfortune and thereby becomes a blessing, or which is a positive joy and satisfaction. Every day does not bring great events, but there are the occasional days when there is one outstanding event for which to give thanks, and others when an accumulation of smaller good things combine to bring equal happiness.

To experience the pleasure which good things bring, two matters are essential. First, the person must recognize the blessing, and, second, he must rejoice in it. It is not enough that one has the experience. It must be seen as a blessing and it must be delighted in. One can scarcely be happy over a splendid occurrence, unless he recognizes it.

Unfortunately there are thousands of persons who are blind to the good things of life, but have keen sight for each smallest misfortune. They live lives of apprehension, of joyless days and sleepless nights, not because they fail to have good things happen to them, but just because they fail to recognize such things.

Those who would experience happiness will find they must look for blessings. This is no mere vapid statement. It is a positive fact. One mechanical aid to happiness through recognition of pleasant occurrence is the keeping of a line-a-day book in which those things only which make for happiness are set down. Let no day go by without jotting down something good which has been recognized as such. Do not be discouraged if some days are lean, especially at first. Gradually the appreciation of blessings grows. This will be found true partly because the mind comes to see the good with clearer vision, and partly because it will be discovered that what seemed a small blessing had far-reaching results for good in later developments. A sharpening of one's blessings brings its sure reward in happiness.

Dogs in Family Grave of Ancient Americans

Scientists studying basket-maker culture in northeastern Arizona came across a cave containing several burials, which had not previously been disturbed since those ancient inhabitants of America flourished—between 2500 and 1500 B. C.

A little family occupied one of the cists which were used as graves: husband, wife, and small baby, buried side by side, and preserved and "mummified" by the dry air of the Southwest. With them were interred their two dogs; and this forms, perhaps, the most ancient example of love for animals to be found on this continent, Editha L. Watson writes, in Our Dumb Animals.

One of the dogs had long light-yellow hair, and was as large as a small collie. He still wore a snarl, and was probably the man's companion, a strong and not too friendly creature, and a good watch dog. The other was much smaller—a little black-and-white fellow, with a rather short nose and erect ears—looking as if puppyhood were not far behind him. It would be easy to imagine him romping about, getting under foot, being petted and teased, and adoring the baby, who was scarcely old enough to pay much attention to him.

Scientists have determined that these were true dogs, derived from those long-ago canines which followed their masters on the long trek from Asia to America. They were in no way related to coyotes or other dog-like animals of this continent.

I'm a stenographer — but I help in the kitchen at home and I've discovered a thing or two about soaps. I find that Fels-Naptha loosens grease quicker. When I'm through, the dishes and pans fairly shine. And my hands are out of water so fast, that they don't get red. Mother now swears by Fels-Naptha, too. She uses it for the family wash and says it's so much easier to keep the clothes white and sweet-smelling.

It's true—the greasiest dirt hustles right out when you use Fels-Naptha Soap. It has to—for Fels-Naptha holds a special grease-loosener. Lots of naptha in addition to good golden soap. That means extra help—a better job—and less work for you.

Made Jefferson President

Matthew Lyon, Irish Boy Who Was Sold for a Yoke of Oxen and Was Congressman From Two States, Kept Burr From White House.

Nearly two centuries ago, July 14, 1750, there was born in Ireland a boy destined to become a big business man, to represent two of our states in congress and to cast the deciding vote for a President of the then unthought-of United States of America, Mary Gilbert Smith writes, in the Boston Globe.

His father, a member of a prominent family, was executed for his part in the White Boys' insurrection. His mother married again. Young Matthew Lyon, studious and enterprising, was well treated by his stepfather, who was proud and fond of the boy.

But he had heard of the strange new land beyond the seas and longed to try his fortunes there. One morning when he was fourteen he bargained with a sea captain to carry him to the province of Connecticut in return for his services as cabin boy. He had a guinea which he had saved from his pocket money, and he gave this to the captain for safe-keeping.

The captain hid him in the hold, so that no one would find him before the vessel sailed, and took the precaution to lock him in. Had he not done so, young Matthew's adventure would have ended that same morning. When his stepfather came seeking him, and called to him effectionately, the lad would have responded at once had he not been restrained by the locked door.

When they reached Connecticut, the captain betrayed the boy's trust by selling him into service as a "redemptioner"—one of those impecunious emigrants who paid for their passage to the New world by serving as bond-servants for a number of years.

Fortunately for young Matthew, his services were secured by Jabez Bacon, one of the wealthies merchants in Connecticut; he was worth half a million when he died—a vast sum for those early days. His example and precepts did much to set the ambitious boy on his way. Trade at that time was largely by barter. Bacon gave a yoke of oxen for Lyon's services until he was twenty-one.

In after years when the young Irishman was a candidate for office this incident was distorted by his political opponents to show that he was of low origin and unfit to be a representative in congress. Lyon never apologized for the manner of his entry into Connecticut nor told of the deception that had been practiced upon him. Rather, he acted as if it were something he was proud of. He swore "by the bulls that redeemed me" to beat his opponents—and he did.

Of his work here, J. A. Graham, in a book published in London in 1797, says in part:

"Fair Haven joins on Skenesborough (now Whitehall, N. Y.) and is the most flourishing manufacturing town in the state. It owes its consequence to its founder, Colonel Lyon, whose enterprise and perseverance in promoting and carrying on manufactories has been of infinite utility to the public. He has erected a furnace for casting all kinds of hollow iron ware and two forges, a slitting mill for the making of nail rods, a paper mill, a printing press and corn and sawmills.

"It is a curious fact that Colonel Lyon has executed a good deal of printing at his office, on paper manufactured by himself of the bark of the basswood tree, and which is found to answer every purpose for common printing.

"He has held some of the first offices of the state and no man in it can be more qualified to do so, as his knowledge of the finances and situation of the country is scarcely to be equaled, nor does his integrity ever suffer him to lose sight of the real good of the people. His friendship and generosity are as great as his ambition. His passions and all his pursuits are exerted for the benefit of mankind."

Zenas H. Ellis of Fair Haven, who lives in the old Matthew Lyon home, has gathered a notable collection of Colonial relics, including a copy of the above-mentioned book and one of Franklin's autobiography. "Together with Essays Humorous, Moral and Literary, chiefly in the manner of the Spectator. Printed and sold by J. Lyon, Fair Haven, Vt., 1798."

James Lyon was the eldest son of Col. Matthew Lyon. The book is printed on paper made in Colonel Lyon's mill and bound in leather tanned in his tannery.

It was James Lyon who published at Fair Haven the paper in which was printed Matthew Lyon's article attacking President John Adams, which caused Colonel Lyons' arrest under the alien and sedition law. He wsa fined $100 and sentenced to four months' imprisonment at Vergennes.

He was in jail at the time of the congressional election, but his constituents rolled up so large a majority for him that he was released to return to congress. The largest crowd assembled in Vermont in early days sped him on his way. He arrived in time to cast the decisive vote that made Thomas Jefferson President over Aaron Burr.

The restless spirit of the pioneer now urged Matthew Lyon to turn from things accomplished to a new country where everything was yet to be done. In Fair Haven he was at the head of a household of 16. Leaving his sons in charge of his many enterprises, he went to Arkansas and later to Kentucky, the next state after the original 13 to be admitted to the Union. Here he made his home for the rest of his life, and from here he was again returned to congress.

Radio May Be Weapon in Pest Extermination

Several years ago the writer made some preliminary tests on small quantities of infested wheat with a view to determining if radio methods could be effectively used to exterminate the eggs and larval forms which may be concealed within the material, as well as the adult insects.

Thirty and six-meter waves were used, the former of low capacity and the latter of high capacity. The 30-meter low-capacity waves were effective in exterminating adult insects in small quantities of wheat within a period of about 90 seconds, but the eggs later hatched out. With the 20-kilowatt, 6-meter waves, an exposure of six seconds was sufficient to exterminate eggs, larvae and adults.

The testing plant has been in operation for a year and many kinds of infested materials have been successfully treated, including wheat, corn, flower and garden seeds, tobacco, spices, nuts, beans, peas, cocoa beans, packaged and bulk milled cereals, and so on.

Results of the writer's research work indicate definitely that weevils in all stages of their development, from eggs to adults, can be exterminated without injury to the germinating properties of grain, or appreciably affecting the moisture content, and without adversely affecting the food value. There are indications that the germinating properties of wheat and other seeds treated may be enhanced.

Worms, mites and other infestations of cocoa beans, spices, tobacco, nuts, packaged cereals, and so on, can be exterminated without injury to the products treated. Where the equipment is properly installed there are no adverse effects upon persons working or stationed in the vicinity of the apparatus.—J. H. Davis in the Scientific American.

HOME RAMBLES

Its a good thing that harvest is over and most of the threshing is done before the wet season set in. ✠ Twenty-nine of our states have gone wet. ✠

It looks like it will soon be open prairie up north where at one time our best ax men found a job in the winter time. ✠ Our beautiful forests are soon only ash heaps. ✠ The big cement trust won't cry when the lumber is gone—no sah.

Since it was announced that the jail was fixed up no one has over-taxed their capacity on the non-intoxicating hop-water. ✠ The Indians call it "ha-ha" or laughing water. ✠ Some one was heard the other day to say that those whom live here sure are foolish. ✠ Maybe so but, they never look as foolish as one whom come back on a visit and gets stumped for bills he left unpaid when he moved away.

Safetygrams BY FRED W. BRAUN © The Safety Man

'One eyed or one lamp Loueys' should not be allowed on our highways at night. These drivers with but a single headlight to warn fellow motorists are a distinct menace to safe driving.

It is difficult to tell from an approaching car burning one light whether it is the right or left light and confusion results. Extra bulbs should be carried along to prevent this dangerous condition. A general check-up of your lighting and lights and ignition about once every 10 days will also materially help.

Frequently, however, the driver of an automobile does not know he is running with one light and approaching motorists should call this to his attention if at all possible.

Look out for one eyed drivers.

G. A. R. Members Hold 67th Annual Encampment

Memories of days and deeds in 1861 is breathing new life in the boys in blue this week when the rapidly thinning ranks of the Grand Army of the Republic are assembled in St. Paul for their 67th national annual six-day encampment.

Some six hundred of them—death has taken its yearly toll—are reveling once more in reminiscences and recollections of their younger days. Business matters pertaining to the encampment will be few; ebbing strength of the young old soldier will not permit too much activity at this time.

But nevertheless those men who tramped the battlefields of '61 tramped the pavements of our capitol city on Wednesday in their annual encampment parade, the high spot of the big convention.

Whether spry or feeble all the veterans took part in the reunions, including Samuel Van Sant, former governor of Minnesota and for many year a prominent figure in the G. A. R.

National conventions of the following organizations are held in conjunction with the G. A. R. meeting: Daughters of Union Veterans of the Civil War; Ladies of the G. A. R.; Sons of Union Veterans of the Civil War, and auxiliary to the Sons of Union Veterans of the Civil War.

Guy Anderson has been taking a few days vacation this week from his daily duty as mail man on the rural route. Saturday he made a business trip to the Twin Cities where he bought a Ford V-8 coupe for use on his mail route, returning Monday.

Bjerk-Rodahl

On Saturday evening Miss Lorraine Bjerk, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. M. Bjerk of St. Hilaire became the bride of Orris Rodahl, son of Mrs. Olaus Rodahl, the wedding being held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. N. O. Johnson here.

Rev. L. M. Redal spoke the wedding ceremony.

Mrs. Johnson is a sister of the bride. The newlyweds expect to make their home on a farm here and, the News joins their many friends in wishing them success and happiness.

Chicken Huuting Begins

The chicken hunting season opened with a bang here Saturday afternoon, in spite of the fact that a heavy rain set in at noon and kept a steady drizzle throughout the day. Sunday was a swell day for hunting and the village looked deserted as all the men folks were out trying their luck with the shot gun.

Most hunters report having good shooting as the birds seem plentiful around here.

The Weather

We had several good showers of rain here last week including a steady downpour Saturday afternoon. The farmers who are thru with threshing are busy plowing since the ground soaked up.

Holt 4-H Club Will Show Their Achievements Today

The Holt 4-H Club will hold their annual achievement day here today (Friday) and will exhibit their club stock, sewing, canning, baking and other projects which the local club has taken up during the past year.

A short program will be held in the schoolhouse in the afternoon and at 3 p. m. the Holt Community Band will march up town with the 4-H club members and play a few numbers before the judging of exhibits starts.

The Holt 4-H club has been a very active organization this year. They walked off with a sack full of prizes at the Marshall county fair and two of its girl members won first prize at the district canning demonstration and were awarded a free trip to the State Fair.

Let's all give them a big hand today when they parade.

Government To Buy Two Million More Small Pigs

The decision by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration to buy two million more light pigs than were for in its original emergency program will enable many farmers hit by drought or feed shortages to dispose of their pigs at premium prices. The original program contemplated purchasing 4,000,000 pigs and a million piggy sows. Now 2,000,000 more pigs are to be purchased, making the total 6,000,000.

Warning has been given, however, that Friday, September 29, will be the final day for accepting pigs under the emergency program.

Additional government buying permits have been granted to several points in or near to Minnesota. Word received at University Farm, St. Paul, indicates that the following points have had their quotas increased by the numbers given.

So. St. Paul	150,000
Sioux City	95,000
Watertown, S. D.	15,000
Fargo	30,000
Chicago	280,000

An additional quota also has been granted the plant down at Austin, Minnesota, but amount of the increase was not stated.

Dr. Andrew Boss, University Farm, St. Paul, in charge of the production control campaign in Minnesota, advices farmers who have been unable to get pig-selling permits from their regular markets to try one or more of the other points. The South St. Paul market, particularly, has been glutted with pigs and had over half a million applications waiting when its new quota was granted. Therefore, it is doubtful whether South St. Paul can take care of the accumulated applications, without honoring any new ones. This will be true even though it should receive still more additions to its quota.

Piggy sows will still be accepted at any of the authorized markets without permits.

Banking Institute Speaker Says That Bank Failures Followed Business Failures

CHICAGO, Ill. — Many appear to think that failures occur only to banks, but the complete story of business shows that failures of American banks have followed the failure of business enterprises, and have not been a cause of those failures, Dr. Harold Stonier, National Educational Director of the American Bankers Association, declared in a recent address here before the American Institute of Banking.

"It is true that we have had more failures in our banks than in the banks of a number of other countries," he said. "It is also true that we have had more failures in drug stores, grocery stores, railroads, and in every other type of business enterprise. At the same time, it must be said that we still have left after all our failures, more drug stores, more grocery stores, more railroads, and more banks than any other country."

People do not realize, he said, that we have in excess of 103 banks which have been in existence over a century and we have more than 2,000 banks which have been in existence over 50 years.

"In other words, we have more banks over 100 years of age than any other country—we have more banks over 50 years of age than any country in the world," he declared. "The American banking system has not fallen down—it is not in danger of decay. Such failures as it has experienced are due to the price we pay for too rapid development of business enterprises, but that is the American spirit."

Red River Valley Winter Shows Will Be Held in December

Dates for the Twenty-fourth Annual Northwest School Farmers' Week and Red River Valley Winter Shows have been set for the week of December 11 to 15, instead of in February as in former years. As stated by Winter Show officials, the date was moved to the early part of the winter upon recommendation of representatives of the various cooperating organizations who were anxious to avoid the severe weather experienced during the past few years. All departments including the livestock, farm crops and poultry shows, together with the special lectures for the men, the women, the boys and girls, as well as the various judging contests and evening mass meetings will be held as in the past.

Members of the Board of Managers, who will supervise the activities of the week, include Dr. A. A. Dowell, Superintendent of the Northwest School of Agriculture, President of the Board; John Saugstad, Business Manager; W. R. Low, Secretary of the Red River Valley Dairyman's association; F. A. Green, Stephen, Vice President of the Red River Valley Livestock association; C. L. McNelly, District County Agent leader; R. S. Dunham, Secretary of the Red River Valley Crops and Soils Association; C. M. Pesek, Secretary of the Red River Valley Dairymen's association; E. W. Spring, in charge of admissions and H. A. Pflughoeft, district boys' and girls' 4-H club leader.

Mr. and Mrs. F. K. Fredrikson and Mrs. T. Knutson spent Wednesday evening visiting with friends at Middle River.

Advertising Aids Business Revival

NEW YORK.—Aggressive concerns are expanding business by effective advertising despite depressed business conditions, declared A. W. Diller, advertising counsel, at a bankers' conference here recently.

"Is 1933 a good year in which to advertise?" Mr. Diller asked. "Yes, if 1933 is a good year to stay in business, to reinforce the public's confidence in you, to put more business on the books. There is new business to be had today and aggressive companies are getting it. But new business will come in only if you go out for it. Advertising certainly goes out for it.

"Will people read newspaper advertisements these days? They will read anything that interests them. There are plenty of present-day arguments for business."

Advertising Mistakes

A QUESTION before many of us is what change of advertising policy, if any, should be made in view of present financial and business conditions. It is perfectly natural for us to give consideration to some degree of retrenchment, but it is dangerous to let reduction in expenditure be such as to bring about a real gap in the continuity of the advertising. It is a common mistake for some advertisers to think that they can turn advertising on and off, like water from a faucet, and expect it to become immediately effective whenever they are prepared to resume operations. Advertising does not work that way. Temporary conditions should not influence us to make too serious inroads on the program of advertising, which can be wisely conceived only on a long term basis.—Francis H. Sisson, President American Bankers [illegible]

Find Remains of Old Settler

While out hunting on Sunday in the wilderness worthwest of Kuriko Lake, some local sportsmen from Ringbo came upon the remains of a lost trapper whom they figure lost his life there about forty years ago. They found an old type gun, a few old coins and empty shells near what appeared to be the bones of a person.

This spot years ago was covered with heavy timber and has always been a deep wet peat bog. With the past dry seasons it has evaporated out and dried so mach that the big fire which went thru there some time ago, burned the peat clear down to the clay, revealing the hidden remains and relics.

The whole territory around Kuriko lake is now a black and barren waste covered with several inches of ashes.

Safetygrams BY FRED W. BRAUN © The Safety Man

I have often wondered how rural communities select the drivers of school buses. Is this done in a sort of indifferent way and is the job given to anybody?

Every school bus driver should be selected for dependability, good habits, his knowledge of the rules of the road, and a tested ability to drive a bus properly. No driver should be hired below the age of 21 to drive a school bus.

Every driver should be provided with a set of rules which he must observe to the letter. His is a heavy responsibility and the continuance of his employment should depend on his hearty and faithful acceptance of this responsibility.

No bus driver should drive a school bus for more than 10 hours in any 24 hour period. Go slow—be safe.

What Does a Bank Check Say?
It tells among other things:
1. To whom you have paid money.
2. Date paid.
3. Paid for what—by inserting notation on check.
4. A check properly used advertises you to the world as a good credit risk.
5. A systematic file of your checks forms a complete record of your disbursements.

Why is a Check Useful?
1. With a check book in your pocket you always have the exact change.
2. No great amount of money need be kept about the house or in the pocket.
3. It keeps you from being the target for the pickpocket and stickup man.
4. It prevents disputes as to payments.
5. By it a bill can be paid 1,000 miles away.
6. If payment is made in error, payment of check may be stopped at the bank.
7. It is the best evidence in court and elsewhere.
8. A man's checking account is one of the first things investigated when credit is desired.

Let us help you improve your credit standing through our checking account department.

Cuban Radicals Oust De Cespedes, Setting Up Junta Government—"Buy Now" Campaign Organized by NRA—Vermont Votes for Repeal.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

Carlos de Cespedes

SOLDIERS, sailors, students and the radical wing of the ABC revolutionary organization that upset the Machado regime in Cuba decided that the methods and program of President Carlos Manuel de Cespedes were too mild. So they staged a second revolution while the president was far from Havana inspecting hurricane damage and forced De Cespedes and his entire government to step out. The affairs of the island republic were placed in the hands of a commission consisting of the five leaders of the revolt, Sergio Carbo, Ramon Grau San Martin, Guillermo Portela, Porfirio Franco and Jose Miguel Irizarri. This junta announced that the five would serve with equal power except that Portela would be the "nominal president before the diplomatic corps."

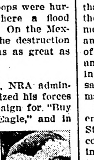
This revolution, the second within a month, was accomplished without bloodshed, but the rebels, after arresting their officers, had posted machine guns at strategic points in Havana and guns from the fortifications were trained on the presidential palace. De Cespedes hurried back to the capital, met the junta members and turned the government over to them after they had rejected as unsatisfactory his explanation that it was impossible to accomplish all the revolutionary aims in twenty-five days.

Ambassador Welles was formally notified of the change, but had nothing to say to the press. The news surprised Secretary of State Hull in Washington and it seemed all the good work of Mr. Welles and Assistant Secretary Caffery was being undone. President Roosevelt immediately ordered four warships to Cuban ports, but this, it was explained, was only to protect American lives and property and did not constitute armed intervention. Privately, however, some officials admitted that intervention under the Platt amendment was nearer than it had been for many years.

Much was made in the newspapers of the fact that Secretary of the Navy Swanson went to Havana just at this time, but it was credibly explained that he was on a previously arranged trip to the Pacific coast and that his call on Ambassador Welles had no connection with the Cuban crisis.

Carbo, one of the junta and a magazine editor and leader of the youth movement, said the overthrow of De Cespedes was determined upon when it was discovered that Mario Menocal, lately returned from exile, was organizing a counter-revolution. The radical leaders, also, were utterly dissatisfied with De Cespedes' appointments to his cabinet, some of his ministers having been too closely identified with former administrations of which the radicals did not approve.

JUST before the revolution Cuba had been swept by a tropic hurricane that took the lives of yet uncounted scores of inhabitants and did vast damage. The storm moved toward the northwest and struck Florida and Texas. In the latter state perhaps a hundred lives were lost and the beautiful lower Rio Grande valley was devastated. The cities of Brownsville, Harlingen and Rio Hondo suffered severely. Relief for the stricken districts was swiftly organized by Governor Ferguson and the federal authorities. Troops were hurried into the valley, where a flood followed the hurricane. On the Mexican side of the river the destruction of life and property was as great as in Texas.



Miss Mary E. Hughes

HUGH S. JOHNSON, NRA administrator, has organized his forces for a nation-wide campaign for "Buy Now Under the Blue Eagle," and in his Labor day address at the World's Fair in Chicago he set September 20 as the date for its starting. He and his numerous aids will endeavor to persuade the people that to buy things at this time is not only a patriotic duty but a prudent use of their money. Indeed, they stress the latter point especially. The women particularly are relied on to make this movement a success and many thousands of them, under the leadership of Miss Mary E. Hughes, are enlisted in the campaign to secure from consumers pledges to support with their custom the manufacturers and merchants who are entitled to display the blue eagle.

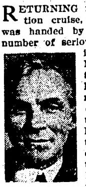
In his Chicago address General Johnson warned his hearers that the process of economic recovery necessarily entailed the raising of prices, but gave assurance that this would be controlled by the government.

Two troubles the recovery administration has run into were described by Mr. Johnson as, first, the failure of some employers to live up to their agreements under the blue eagle, and second, misunderstanding of the codes between employers and workers, with some resultant strikes and lockouts.

"Our chief reliance is in the force of public opinion," he said. "We know that to take away the blue eagle is a more severe penalty than any puny fine. It is, we think, enough, but if it should prove not enough, there are plenty of penalties in the law.

"In stating this plan we have been accused of inciting a boycott. Of course, what people are doing is not a boycott. No willing employer who complies with this great national purpose can live in competition with a chiseler who does not. The whole idea is based on unanimous agreement and action. It is for the benefit of the American people. It is their plan or it is nothing.

"It cannot last a month if a few unwilling or cheating employers are permitted (by the advantage of lower costs) to ruin the business of their willing and honest competitors."



Henry Ford

RETURNING from his short vacation cruise, President Roosevelt was handed by General Johnson a number of serious problems concerning the NRA codes. Most important of these was the deadlock in the soft coal negotiations caused chiefly by the labor union issue; and this labor problem also entered into various other troubling disputes that probably will have to be settled by the President himself. President Green of the American Federation of Labor was determined that the provision in the automobile code, permitting employers to deal with workers on the basis of their individual merit, should not be included in any other agreement, and he promised union labor he would seek its elimination from the automobile code.

Henry Ford was another problem, but it was indicated the government would not take any immediate action in his case. The whole country watched interestedly to see whether he would sign the code within the allotted time, and when he failed to do this and said nothing about his ultimate intentions, Johnson was besieged with questions as to what he would do. Talking to the press in Chicago, it seemed that the administrator was weakening a little in this matter. He said Ford did not have to sign the code, and if he went further than its provisions, that would be all right with the government. The NRA could intervene, he said, only if a group of Ford's employees complained to it of unfair treatment. Johnson did reiterate his opinion that Ford would be brought to time by the force of public opinion.

Dispatches from Detroit said a wage revision was in progress at the Ford plant. No formal announcement of this was made, but officials said it was a gradual process and that about one-fourth of the 40,000 workers had received increases from $4 to $4.80 a day. The code specifies a 43-cent-an-hour minimum wage for the Detroit area. It also specifies a 35-hour week, while Ford employees who are on full time work five eight-hour days a week.

REVERTING to the union labor problem, it is interesting to note that Henry I. Harriman, president of the United States Chamber of Commerce, has issued to all its members an appeal to stand firmly in defense of the open shop and in opposition to an interpretation of the labor clauses in the national recovery act which, he says, would be writing into a law a mandate for a closed shop.

President Harriman asserted that employers throughout the United States had shown a splendid spirit of co-operation in preparing and adopting codes of fair competition. In return, he declared, industry should be given adequate assurance that the recovery program is not to be turned into a vehicle for forcing the closed shop upon the country.

VERMONT, which was one of the few states that the prohibitionists really thought might vote against repeal of the Eighteenth amendment, disappointed them by going for repeal by a vote of more than 2 to 1. This despite the fact that election day was fair and the hopes of the drys were based largely on good weather that would bring out a large rural vote to offset that of the wet cities and towns.

Even though prohibition should be repealed this year Vermont would continue without hard liquor under its present state law. Beer and wine of 3.2 alcoholic content were authorized by the legislature this year, but a state enforcement act prevents anything stronger.

Formal ratification of the repeal amendment was completed by the state conventions of Arizona and Nevada, the vote in each case being unanimous.

TWO deaths marred the otherwise successful international air races held at Glenview, a Chicago suburb. Roy Liggett of Omaha was killed when his plane fell from an altitude of 200 feet at the start of a race, one of the wings breaking off. Miss Florence Klingensmith of Minneapolis, an entry in one of the last final races, was dashed to instant death when fabric on the right wing of her fast plane tore loose and she lost control. Jimmy Wedell of Texas, a self-made aviator, was the star of the meet, for he set a new speed record for land planes. He flashed along a three kilometer course four times at an average of 305.33 miles an hour. The previous record, established by Maj. James H. Doolittle, was 294.38 miles an hour.

MANY famous pilots assembled in Chicago to do honor to the pioneers of the air mail and especially to pay a tribute to the memory of Max Miller, who just fifteen years before landed on the lake front with the first regularly scheduled air mail from New York to Chicago. Many military airplanes took part in the ceremonies, and there was an impressive program at the Century of Progress. Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker was chairman of the day, and beside him were such noted air men as Jimmie Mattern and Bennett Griffin, around the world flyers; Tito Falcone, Italy's stunt ace; Ernest Udet, German war ace; Jimmie Doolittle, Jimmie Hazlip, and Col. Roscoe Turner. Distinguished guests included fifteen of the Early Birds, a group of eighty veterans of aviation.

FIFTEEN hundred delegates to the convention of the National Federation of Post Office Clerks in Chicago adopted a resolution urging congress to put postal employees on a thirty hour week, and a bill to bring this about probably will be introduced in the house next session by Congressman James M. Mead of Buffalo, N. Y., who addressed the convention.

WHAT to do with the Jews is a question that a German Nazi commissioner has been studying, and his report declares Germany must begin international negotiations to help find and set aside a new country, larger than Palestine, where Jews from all parts of the world shall be settled. The report says in part:

"It is of interest to the whole world that the Jewish problem should be settled once and for all, since Jews will remain centers of unrest, constantly creating secret societies which tend toward Bolshevism. To scatter the Jews in all directions will not help. It is best to afford them the possibility of forming a nation, settled in one country. Then they will no longer wander restlessly through the world."

The expert who made the report calculates that 1,800,000 persons should leave Germany to achieve his ideal. This number includes 600,000 Jews, 600,000 Jews who adopted the Christian faith, and an approximate 600,000 descendants of mixed marriages.

Nazi German Christians dominated the Prussian church synod in Berlin and pushed through 20 motions, including one barring non-Aryans or persons marrying non-Aryans from the pulpit and from church offices. Cases in which special services in behalf of the church can be proved were exempted from the non-Aryan rule.

Joseph Paul-Boncour

NOT long ago the League of Nations organized a gendarmerie in the Saar for the purpose of gradually replacing the French troops that have been policing the region that is to determine its nationality by plebiscite in 1935. Dispatches from Paris say the league officials are losing confidence in the new police as a result of a campaign against it by the left press, the assertion being made that it is fast falling under the influence of the German Nazis. Therefore the gendarmerie may be dissolved, although to do this and again charge French troops with maintenance of order would probably increase the Nazi strength in the Saar.

Speaking at the dedication of a monument to Aristide Briand, French Foreign Minister Joseph Paul-Boncour attacked the recent Nazi demonstrations at the Niederwald monument near the French frontier and declared in so many words that France was not intimidated. He said the situation would be grave "if our patience was born of a knowledge of our weakness. But that is not so, for France knows she is strong enough to resist violence."

The foreign minister reaffirmed France's intention not to swerve from a policy of safeguarding Austria's independence and of building a central European economic union.

Chancellor Hitler told 100,000 of his storm troops at the Nuremberg Nazi party convention that Germany was not looking for war.

BECAUSE an engineer did not see or did not heed a flagman's red lantern, 14 persons were killed and 25 injured in a rail disaster at Binghamton, N. Y. The Atlantic express, a Chicago-New York passenger train on the Erie road, stopped by an automatic block signal, was struck in the rear by a milk train and a wooden car was completely telescoped by a steel coach. Most of the dead were residents of Susquehanna, Pa.

News of North Dakota

EVENTS OF THE WEEK THROUGHOUT THE STATE TOLD IN BRIEF FORM

Towner.—John Ekstrom of Towner lost the ring finger on his right hand last Thursday evening while operating an ensilage cutter on his farm.

Anamoose.—Clifford W. Glotzbach of Anamoose was indicted as deputy collector of internal revenue with headquarters in Jamestown. He succeeds M. C. Sandness.

Velva.—By a vote of 186 to 50, Velva voters approved a $10,000 bond issue for the purpose of constructing a swimming pool and improving the water works.

Garrison.—One man was killed and two others injured when a Ford car driven by John Keim of Eureka, S. D., turned over at the turn of highway No. 83 as it leaves Coleharbor.

Willow City.—Leo Dagner, chief of police of Willow City, dropped dead from heart failure just as he had locked up two prisoners in the village jail.

Park River.—Several carloads of potatoes have been shipped from the Hoople district and yields are said to have ranged between 90 and 120 bushels to the acre.

Jamestown.—Announcement that he will make Fargo his permanent home was made by P. W. Lanier, United States district attorney, recently removed to that city from Jamestown where he has practiced law the last eight years.

Williston.—Vernon Sandry and Henry Jang, proprietors of a cafe in this city, were fined $25 and costs in justice court when convicted of having violated the state law governing minimum wages.

Bismarck.—On the 50th anniversary of the laying of the cornerstone of the Dakota territorial capitol here, a new cornerstone for North Dakota's new state house was unveiled at a brief ceremony in which Governor Langer and state officials participated.

Fessenden.—J. J. Youngblood, who went to Chicago last week to take in the World's fair, postcards to relatives here that he was held up and relieved of all his money and valuables, including his return railroad ticket, by Windy City thugs.

Fargo.—North Dakota moved into ninth place among the creamery butter manufacturing states during July, when its creameries made 7,238,000 pounds of butter. This compared to 7,392,200 pounds in June, and 6,237,000 pounds in July, 1932.

Noonan.—Advertisement for bids on installation of waterworks and sewer systems under the provisions of the national public works program has been made here by Alice Olson, city auditor.

Underwood.—Floyd M. Wilson, who received fatal injuries in a mine accident last week, died at the J. O. Henricks home, where he had been taken following the accident in which Buel Henricks was also injured.

Mohall.—That there were discrepancies of approximately $28,000 in the accounts of the Mohall city treasurer, O. C. Soberg, who died of a self-inflicted bullet wound, was the declaration of F. E. Luehe, Minot accountant, who has completed an examination of Soberg's books.

Ray.—Rolled on by his horse when it stumbled and fell, Rudolph Kulczyk, living across the river from Hofflund, suffered a broken arm at the elbow, a crushed hip and ankle. He was taken to Ray for medical treatment.

Stanley.—Stanley has a new acting postmaster, as a result of the office being made vacant following an alleged confession given by Postmaster Ole Tobias Nelson, Jr., at Washington, D. C., that he had taken between $8,000 and $10,000 in postal savings funds.

Minot.—The Ward county commissioners adopted a resolution providing for a special election to be held September 22, on the same date as the state-wide election, to decide the question of issuing not to exceed $100,000 bonds, to provide funds for building a new county jail and sheriff's residence.

Minot.—The suspicion that Olaf Olsen, 48, Illinois transient who was found dead in the Great Northern railroad yards, may have been murdered has been expressed by members of the coroner's jury which conducted an inquest into the man's death, it was announced by Ward County Coroner Dr. E. C. Stone.

Tuttle.—Erling Botnen, 21-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Isak Botnen of south of town, was a victim of a very painful and also serious accident last Thursday when he attempted to oil a windmill that was running. In some manner his clothing became tangled in the gears of the machine, drawing his right hand and arm into the gears. The member was badly mangled before he could release himself.

Edmore.—Snow fell on August 27 in 1887, Charles Botsford, local man, recalls. Botsford said four inches of flakes covered the ground, halting threshing in his neighborhood near Adams, N. D.

New Rockford.—Milton Coulter, 17-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Coulter of New Rockford, was lodged in the city jail in New Rockford after he had stabbed Phil Brady, 18, of that city. The affair was the climax of a freshman initiation, being administered by upperclassmen of the high school.

Current Wit and Humor

HE'D LOST MILLIONS

The girl was very rich, and he was just a poor young man. She liked him, but that was all, and he was well aware of the fact. One evening he grew somewhat tender and at last he said: "You are rich, aren't you, Ethel?"

"Yes, Dick, Dad says I'm worth two million dollars, if things turn out as it now looks."

"Will you marry me, Ethel?" he asked.

"Oh, no, Dick, I couldn't do that," she replied.

"I knew you wouldn't."

"Then why did you ask me?"

"I just wanted to be able to say that I had lost two million dollars."

Reform Effort

"She married him to reform him," said Miss Cayenne.

"Did she succeed?"

"Not precisely. But she added considerably to his material for repentance."

Silver Lining

"My daughter's music lessons are a fortune to me."

"How is that?"

"They enable me to buy the neighbors' houses at half price."

WORTH TRYING

The drama was a thrilling one, but a talkative young man had seen it before. In an audible voice he announced what was coming next and described how funny it would be when it did come. He had a pretty girl with him, and he was trying to amuse her.

At length he said: "Did you ever try listening to a play with your eyes shut? You've no idea how queer it seems."

A middle-aged man sat just in front. He twisted himself in his seat and glared.

"Young man," he said, "did you ever try listening to a play with your mouth shut?"

Wearing It

"Election bet, Joe?"

"This tie was given me for my birthday."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Dear Betty: I'm sorry to hear you're having so much trouble with your washes, but take a tip from mother. Your clothes look gray because you don't get out all the dirt—and it will all come out if you use Fels-Naptha Soap. You're trying to stretch nickels, I know—but to repeat an old saying, "the best is cheapest in the end."

Extra help with your wash—no "left-over dirt" troubles—cleaner whiter clothes! That's what you want on washday and that's why Fels-Naptha is a real bargain. Working together, its good golden soap and plenty of naptha do better work.

—17—

"And you like him, Babbie?"

She looked down at the hand which wore his ring. Dark lashes curtained her eyes.

"Oh yes, Uncle Stephen," she said, the pink in her cheeks deepening to rose.

Why couldn't she tell him all about Bruce? He understood things so nicely. Some time she would, when the visit was over. She couldn't now. There would have to be explanations. It was nicer to keep it a secret.

What was she thinking? Stephen wondered, watching the curve of her lashes against her cheeks. Was she in love with this boy?

"Invite him for Christmas if you like," he said. "There's always plenty of room."

The dark lashes lifted.

"You're nice, Uncle Stephen," she said, giving his hand an affectionate squeeze.

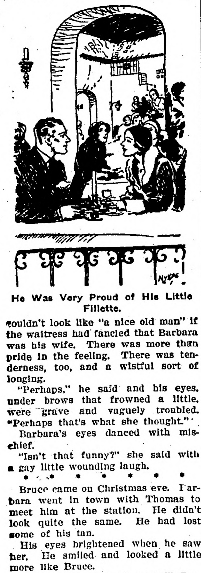
"So are you." Stephen returned the affectionate squeeze. Was she in love with the boy?

"Would you like something else, Madame?" the waitress asked, hovering near the table.

Barbara hesitated between fudge cake and coffee eclaires. When the waitress had gone, she smiled at him across the table.

"Did you hear what she called me?" she asked, amused. "Maybe she thinks I'm your wife."

Stephen had thought that, too. It gave him a feeling of pride. He couldn't look like "a nice old man" if the waitress had fancied that Barbara was his wife. There was more than pride in the feeling. There was tenderness, too, and a wistful sort of longing.



He Was Very Proud of His Little Fillette.

"Perhaps," he said and his eyes, under brows that frowned a little, were grave and vaguely troubled. "Perhaps that's what she thought."

Barbara's eyes danced with mischief.

"Isn't that funny?" she said with a gay little wounding laugh.

* * * * * *

Bruce came on Christmas eve. Barbara went in town with Thomas to meet him at the station. He didn't look quite the same. He had lost some of his tan.

His eyes brightened when he saw her. He smiled and looked a little more like Bruce.

"Did you have a nice trip?" Barbara asked as they walked through the station. That wasn't what she wanted to say. She had a feeling of strangeness. She didn't quite know what to do.

"The train was crowded." Bruce hadn't meant to say that. What had they done to her? This pretty young lady so smartly dressed might have been his Babbie's elder sister.

"They are, at Christmas, I guess." Barbara felt a lump in her throat. He acted so stiff and so very polite.

"Yes," Bruce agreed. "Holidays are bad times to travel." He resented the soft fur jacket she wore, the muff, the smart little frock of honey colored wool. He resented Thomas, in uniform, the big closed car, the air with which Barbara entered it, as though, already, she was accustomed to luxury. She won't want to live in my studio after this, he thought miserably, loving her, feeling that he had lost her.

It was easier in the car when Thomas had turned his back and they drove out the Parkway in the clear frosty twilight. Bruce kissed her and held her in his arms.

"Are you glad to see me?" he asked.

"Oh, Bruce!"

He thought that she was. He felt her small left hand no longer tucked in the muff.

"It's there," she said, knowing the thought that prompted the gesture. She pulled off a soft suede glove and showed him the ring with the small gold heart.

"That makes me feel better," he said, relaxing against the upholstery. "I'll have to get you another," he added after a moment. "That isn't gorgeous enough for an elegant young lady."

"Bruce!" Her voice reproached him. "I love it," she said, nestling close against him. "I don't want any other. I'll wear it as long as I live."

"Darling!" he said, feeling as though he had found her again.

And—

"Darling," she answered, feeling the strangeness vanish.

She hadn't changed, he thought, holding her very close. He gave her the gift he had brought, a bracelet with a golden heart to match the birthday ring.

They were happy together during the short ride out from town. But he felt that he had lost her again when the car turned through the stone gateway and followed the winding drive. The house was a vast dark shape against the deepening twilight. He had not thought it would be so grand.

"I'm frightened," he said, when the car stopped at the entrance and Thomas sprang down to open the door.

"Silly!" she whispered, holding fast to his hand.

The touch of her hand couldn't banish the feeling that he had lost her again. It persisted through the children's noisy welcome, through a dinner which seemed endless to Bruce in spite of Stephen's efforts to make him feel at home. He resented Stephen who looked younger than he had hoped and very much more attractive.

"Isn't he lovely?" Barbara asked as they left the dining room.

"Who?" Bruce asked, though he knew very well whom she meant.

"Uncle Stephen."

Bruce was jealous of the shine in her wide dark eyes.

"It was kind of him to let you invite me," he said stiffly, knowing that he had hurt her, wanting to hurt her because he, himself, was hurt.

He was sorry a moment later but then it was too late. He could not find her again, though she was there beside him, small and very lovely in a frock of golden brown velvet. Bruce hated himself for his jealousy. He could do nothing about it.

It was an unhappy evening for them both. They trimmed a tree for the children in the schoolroom, talking gayly, avoiding each other's eyes. If they might be alone, Bruce thought, wanting to apologize, wanting to find her again.

Stephen watched them and wondered. Bruce was a nice looking boy, he thought, and seemed to be on intimate terms with the Thornes. But Barbara wasn't in love with him. He felt that he would know it if she loved this nice looking boy with the charming manners and somewhat shabby clothes. Stephen, as Aunt Edith observed, had much to learn about women.

When the tree was trimmed, Barbara, Stephen and Bruce sat around the library fire. Stephen was charming to Barbara's guest. If he would leave them alone, Bruce thought, looking at Barbara curled in an armchair beside the fire, wanting to kiss the dimple that woke with her gay little smile.

There was no opportunity to be alone. "Tomorrow," Bruce thought, saying good night to Barbara, being polite to Stephen.

"Tomorrow," Barbara thought, saying good night to them both.

But "tomorrow" was just as bad. There was no opportunity to be alone. The children claimed the early part of the day. There was company for dinner, an elaborate one, which lasted a very long time. When it was over, Barbara and Bruce escaped to the conservatory.

"Are you sure there is no one here?" Bruce asked, pretending to look behind the ferns and under the orange trees.

"No one but the love birds and us." Barbara dimpled and smiled. She loved Bruce when he teased. "Must you go today?" she asked, a wistful expression in her eyes.

"The eight o'clock train," he said.

Already it was growing dark. They had so little time. He held her close, trying to find her again, if only for a moment.

"Come with me, Babbie," he said. She was so small and very dear lying against his heart. . . . "A bird nestles in your hand, yours to keep for always. Open your hand and the bird is lost in the sky." . . . "Couldn't you, Babbie dear?"

"I can't, Bruce." Her eyes were wistful but her chin was very firm. "I can't while the children are here."

She sighed and lifted her head from his shoulder.

Bruce heard the sigh, felt her drawing away from him.

"Don't you want to?" he asked, frightened and hurt by the soft quivering sigh. "Have you changed your mind? Don't you want to marry me, Babbie?"

"I haven't. I do," she assured him.

He felt that the words lacked conviction.

"I can't give you things like this. It would be a come-down to live with me over the fruit store up four flights of dingy stairs."

"You know it's not for me," she said very close to tears. "It's because of the children, Bruce."

He didn't know. He couldn't be sure.

"Are you sure?" he asked, wanting to hurt her because he was being so terribly hurt.

Bruce saw her tremble, he heard a choked little sob. Tenderness conquered the bitter thoughts. She was so small, so very dear, too small and dear to be hurt. He went to her swiftly, drew her into his arms.

"Babbie!" he said brokenly. "I'm sorry. Of course I know. I shouldn't have asked you that question."

She clung to him, sobbing.

"I can't bear it when you don't believe me." She lifted a face damp with tears. "I love you so very much."

WORDS OF LOVE COME EASY NOW

Modern Youth Writes Its Own Ardent Missives.

It is hardly surprising that General Pershing's men fighting in France should have used letters that were not strictly of their own composition. That is what the fathers of many of them had done in their own youth.

In the year 1880 there was copyrighted in the United States a large volume entitled "Gaskell's Compendium of Forms." It was just that, aiming to tell anybody how to do anything that could be put on paper. A section of the work is devoted to letters of love and courtship. The forms presented would scarcely be called ardent by the sob-sister of today assigned to cover divorce proceedings. "Dear Sir" is frequently used in the salutation of a love letter from a lady. A gentleman who declares his love begins right off with "Miss Carrie White." There is not even "To" or "For" in front of the "Miss."

There comes to mind a scene in the back room of a tavern in a college town. At the table is seated a callow freshman, who has decided that the light of his young life must be addressed in verse. Opposite him is an upper class editor of the college magazine. He is reputed to be able to find words that rhyme. For a price fixed at three mugs of ale he turns out a poem. The freshman thrills at being a party to a literary courtship.

Those days are vanishing. Boys and girls are not as far removed from one another as they used to be. And parents, who have found themselves obliged to give in on "dates"—single, double and blind, are much relieved when their offspring devote hours to writing letters. To be sure, the stamps cost something, but the expense is trifling when compared with some of the outlays that youth expects.

Those who rummage in the attics 50 years from now will find love letters that are really worthy of the name. Every postman lugs them daily in his pack. The young people have much to talk over and the superior training given by the modern school encourages real self-expression.—Boston Globe.

POINTED QUESTION

A young mother was suffering with a cold and fearing that little Bobby might catch it, said:

"Don't hug me, Bobby; you might catch my cold."

The little fellow was thoughtful a few minutes and replied, "Who did you hug, mother?"—Exchange.

The Master Timekeepers

THE master clocks of the nation, of which there are three, for safety sake, are encased in a double underground vault at the naval observatory in Washington.

The cases of these clocks are sealed air-tight and are maintained under a constant and uniform temperature and air pressure. The temperature is recorded every seven minutes and is never allowed to change more than one-tenth of a degree Fahrenheit. Obviously, their foundations are as free from vibration as it has been found possible to make them.

Since, clearly, because of their supersensitiveness, better results are obtained by letting them strictly alone. theirs is a peaceful existence. They are never reset or interfered with in any manner whatsoever except as justified for repairs.

Their pendulums are so constructed as to be unaffected by variations in temperature and the form of their escapement is unusual in that the pendulum rod is not directly connected with the escapement, the driving energy being furnished by springs from which the pendulum is suspended.

Observatory officials declare that these clocks display a tendency to run slightly faster as they are in service and that sometimes during the first year after cleaning their daily rate may increase as much as one hundredth of a second per month. These infinitesimal changes do not alarm these officers, however, as long as the rate of change is regular, because the amount of variance can be accurately checked by astronomical observations and the exact time readily determined.

The Floating White House

THE Mayflower, a wooden, coal-burning vessel, was built at Clydebank, Scotland, in 1897, and used as a private yacht by a wealthy New York business man.

During the Spanish-American war it was purchased by Uncle Sam, converted into a gunboat and spent much time in Cuban waters, capturing several prizes. It was returned to the Caribbean sea when trouble broke out in Santo Domingo; later it cruised in European waters, but was returned in time to perform the most interesting service of conveying the special envoys of Russia and Japan to Portsmouth, New Hampshire, when peace terms which ended the Russo-Jap scrap were arranged.

Congress authorized its use as "The Presidential Yacht," in 1907. Five Presidents, Roosevelt, Taft, Wilson, Harding and Coolidge, have trod her decks.

A slim, trim looking craft, the Mayflower is 341 feet long, 36 feet beam, draws about 18 feet of water, makes about 15 miles an hour, now burns oil, carries four six-pound guns and has a crew of 8 officers and 187 men, including 24 marines and a chaplain. It has sleeping quarters for the President, his wife, 14 guests and the crew.

Equipped with reception, smoking and dining rooms, library, piano, graphophone, orchestra and radio, the most luxuriously equipped naval vessel we have, free from military spirit, embodying the private and peaceful atmosphere of a mansion, the Mayflower offers a welcome means of escape from the strains which rest upon our Chief Executive which has been enjoyed more frequently by President and Mrs. Coolidge than either of his predecessors.

Better Breakfasts

BETTER breakfasts mean better coffee, so we take for granted, before suggesting other delicious breakfast foods, that you are using fresh 100-percent-flavor coffee, which is now available to everyone, by buying it vacuum-packed. And what will you serve with it? Let's see.

Something different from the usual ham-and-egg breakfast is most desirable at this season when even the easy-to-please become finicky. Look over your luncheon and dinner recipes and see if you have some light, appetizing dishes which may serve on breakfast menus. Chicken dishes are delicious at breakfast. Fresh mint adds cooling flavor to your fruit dish, ripe tomatoes are an interesting condiment to the main dish—well, suppose you try this menu:

Orange Sections with Chopped Fresh Mint
Ready-to-Eat Cereal
Chicken Hash with Sliced Chilled Tomatoes
Date Muffins
Coffee

Chicken Hash with Sliced Chilled Tomatoes: Cut the contents of a 6-ounce can of chicken up fine, and mix with one cup of cold chopped potatoes. Season with salt and pepper, and add one-fourth cup milk. Brown in a skillet with plenty of fat, fold together like an omelet, and turn out onto a hot platter. Surround with sliced chilled fresh tomatoes.

Date muffins can be made by any good muffin recipe, by simply adding chopped dates to the batter just before putting it into the buttered muffin pans.

Government Buying of Pigs Will Cease September 30

Unless the goverment changes its mind, the purchasing of premium pigs by Uncle Sam at So. St. Paul will be concluded Saturday, September 30, says the regular weekly market bulletin issued by the Central Cooperative Association, in South St. Paul.

By that date, approximately 650,000 lighweight pigs will have been slaughtered at that market under the government premium program, which has been going on since August 23. Late last week, 450,000 had already gone to the shambles with permits outstanding calling for 100,000 additional pigs to arrive the last of the month. Permits issued to farmers up to the present time were dated up to Thursday this week. Packers, however, will continue buying up to Saturday evening in order to clean up the held-overs which arrived earlier in the week.

While this is definate information given out late last week, applications for further permits are being accepted in preparation for any future ncrease that the Corn-Hog Administation officials might possibly make. If there is no changes, these applications, of course, will have been made in vain.

During the first thirty days that the government has been a buyer of pigs, their purchase at twenty of the leading markets amounted to approximately 4,000,000 head. By the end of September, the total is expected to reach near the six million mark.

Believe It Or Not

Years ago where once big steamboats pulled heavy barges laden with grain and found no trouble in drawing all the water needed, you can now walk without shoes and hardly get your silk socks damp.

This is just what has happened to our great Red River of the North; and the place we are talking about is only a few miles north of Oslo on the east river bank in the west end of the county. One farmer in North Dakota who has land on both sides of the river was able to pull his threshing outfit across the river, as the bed was bone dry.

This is the first time in history that the river has been so low, that any threshing outfit could cross without going around by a bridge. The clay fifteen feet below the river bed is powder dry and can hardly be taken up with a post hole digger, according to a farmer who was digging there for water recently.

A GREAT INDUSTRY ...Back to Work

Many have asked—when will we be able to get Golden Grain Belt Beer? Our answer is—within a few short weeks. Brewing in our Great Plant has been in progress on a large scale over a period of months. Previous to that, the Great Brewery was completely modernized — new equipment added—at a cost of several hundred thousand dollars—with an additional large sum to assure spotless cleanliness. The first Brewery to prepare for manufacture in surroundings of snow white purity.

We have not hurried: Time has been taken in our brewing so that our beer will attain a quality of mellow taste satisfaction which every experienced user instantly recognizes. We confidently believe that it will answer completely "the Taste you have Anticipated."

4-H Club Members Held Annual Achievement Day

The Holt 4-H Club with a membership of sixty young boys and girls from this community gathered here on Friday for their annual fall achievement day. The club which is one of the largest in the county, has been very active the past year and, has sponsored several new projects in connection with the regular yearly work which has brought the club many honors and prizes.

The club members and the large crowd which came in on Friday to view the exhibits were entertained at a short program in the Holt High School auditorium early in the afternoon. The program which was enjoyed very much by all, was as follows:

Stunts - by 4-H club members
Song - "In the Valley of the Moon" by Clara Sandberg
Selections - by 4-H club clown band
Talk - by H. F. Harrison
Piano Solo - by H. F. Harrison
Talk - by R. J. Christgau of Crookston.

At the close of the program the local club presented Mr. Harrison with a gift.

After the program at the local school house the entire crowd formed a big parade and marched thru town with the Holt Community band which furnished music while the club members were getting their stock ready for judging.

Several fine club calves both dairy and baby beef were taken into the ring for showmanship and quality showing. There was only one pig shown and that was a purebred gilt shown by Melvin Larson who was awarded first for his achievement in that project. The sheep project was well represented there being many of the older members in on the exhibits.

R. J. Christgau of Crookston judged the stock and the following listing shows the placing he gave them.

Purebred Ewe Lambs
1st, Clifford Jorland
2nd, Paige Jorland

Fat Lamb Class
1st, Kenneth Larson
2nd, Chester Larson

Baby Beef
1st, Lloyd Larson
2nd, Martin Larson
3d, Clifford Moberg
4th, Clifford Larson

Dairy Calf
1st, Gertrude Voth
2nd, Fredrick Voth
3d, Marlan Augustine
4th, Stilaf Anderson.

There were several other projects exhibited such as potatoes, poultry, gardening, sewing, canning and baking. These were not judged here Friday but, instead were taken to Warren on Saturday to be scored at the county achievement day.

The local club, its leaders and others who have worked hard to make this organization a real success are to be congratulated upon their achivement.

At noon on Monday we had one of the biggest rains we have had the pleasure to enjoy this year. Several cisterns that were running low were practically refilled for the winter in case we don't get any more fall rains.

Farmers, Notice!

I will be thru Holt every Wednesday afternoon. If you have any work for me leave word at the Holt Cafe.

Commissioners Inspect Fire Fighting Operations

The fire fighters of the Division of Forestry under the personal direction of Grover M. Conzet, Director, "functioned satisfactorily" in combating the forest and peat fires that have been raging in Northern Minnesota.

This is the gist of a report on a personal inspection made for the Conservation Commission by R. R. Baily, Virginia, and Frank Yetda, Cloquet, members of the commission.

The report states that scores of persons were interviewed on the inspection trip which started at Grand Rapids thru Itasca Park, Middle River, Roseau, Warroad, Baudette, and International Falls and other towns, and which also included an inspection of the Emergency Conservation Work camps.

"The persons interviewed were from all walks of life", the report states, "and in each case the opinion expressed was that the fire fighting work was carried on with dispatch and efficiency.

In speaking of the work at the Conservation camps, the report says: "The boys were doing a wonderful job wherever we went, building roads, dams, bridges, buildings, brushing out highways, cutting out big fire breaks, planting trees, and in addition doing everything they could to assist the state forest fire fighters. There is no project paying better dividends than the Emergency Conservation Work Camps."

County Achievement Day

The majority of the members of the Holt 4-H Club, its leaders and others motored to Warren Saturday to be present at the annual county Achievement Day.

The local club took over four baby beeves, three lambs, one pig, and several crates of poultry. In the projects outside of the live exhibits were: 6 potato, 2 gardening, 2 canning, and several baking and sewing projects entered. These were displayed in a booth.

The Warren Commercial Club had a swell program lined up for entertainment of the 240 county 4-H Club members that were in attendance. After all the judging was done and all trips and prizes awarded, the club members and leaders attended a big banquet given for them.

There are nine trips awarded each fall to the Junior Livestock Show in So. St. Paul to the first nine highest ranking places for baby beef calves and three of these trips were awarded to Holt club boys. They are: Lloyd Larson, Clifford Moberg, and Martin Larson.

Largest Field in County

Often the question is asked as to who has the largest fields in the county. We were out in the west end of the county on Sunday and were informed that Ed Melo, who is farming west of Stephen, had one of the largest fields into crop this year of any individual farmer in the county. He had seventeen hundred acres of flax, which we believe is the biggest single crop that any farmer in the northwest had in. Many a farmer has that many acres in a variety of grains, but very few, if any, have seventeen hundred acres in a single crop.

Mr. Melo seeds on summer fallowed land and his yield went from nine to fourteen bushels per acre. He operates three new tractors night and day and has already seeded seven hundred acres of winter rye this year. He now has a lot of nice land ready for flax in the spring and expects to seed even more than he had in this year.

Safetygrams
BY FRED W. BRAUN
The Safety Man

My attention is frequently called to the "safe driving week" put on by various newspapers throughout this section. The press should be complimented for the fine spirit in undertaking a safe driving week and advancing fine safety principles.

Many pictures have appeared in papers showing the correct signalling of turns by automobile drivers.

A systematic check-up of brakes during the week is a fine feature of the safety program.

The slogan for the week is usually "Drive Carefully, Drive Sensibly, Drive Safely."

The press is a wonderful means to present to the people the need for safe driving, and I will be glad to give such publications the necessary material to launch such a "Safe Driving Week."

The public responds to it and the public needs it.

Minnesota Mines Show Increase in Activities

Shipments of iron ore from Minnesota have increased quite rapidly of late so that by the beginning of September the state had furnished more than 7,570,000 tons of ore as against 860,000 tons for that date one year ago. The state-owned mines in 1932 forwarded 635,000 tons of iron ore during the entire year while as of the first of September, 1933, the tonnage shipped had passed 2,000,000 tons, according to F. A. Wildes, Director of the Division of Lands and Minerals.

Duck Season Opens Sunday

Dates for the opening of the duck hunting season has been set for next Sunday, October 1. The shooting time will be from noon that day to sunset, Nov. 30.

With no water hereabouts it looks as if our local hunters will have to trek to some other parts in order to get a chance to hear the whistle of a ducks wings in flight.

What Does a Bank Check Say?

It tells among other things:

1. To whom you have paid money.
2. Date paid.
3. Paid for what—by inserting notation on check.
4. A check properly used advertises you to the world as a good credit risk.
5. A systematic file of your checks forms a complete record of your disbursements.

Why is a Check Useful?

1. With a check book in your pocket you always have the exact change.
2. No great amount of money need be kept about the house or in the pocket.
3. It keeps you from being the target for the pickpocket and stickup man.
4. It prevents disputes as to payments.
5. By it a bill can be paid 1,000 miles away.
6. If payment is made in error, payment of check may be stopped at the bank.
7. It is the best evidence in court and elsewhere.
8. A man's checking account is one of the first things investigated when credit is desired.

Let us help you improve your credit standing through our checking account department.

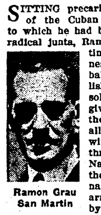
Grau San Martin Tries to Establish Government for Cuba—Four More States for Prohibition Repeal—Blue Eagle Notes.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

SITTING precariously on the edge of the Cuban Presidential chair to which he had been hoisted by the radical junta, Ramon Grau San Martin endeavored earnestly to maintain his balance and to establish a government so solid that it would be given recognition by the United States. On all sides he was beset with difficulties and threats. In the big National hotel were the deposed army and navy officers, heavily armed and supported by the more conservative factions that favored the return to power of De Cespedes whom the radicals had shoved out. In the harbor of Havana and elsewhere about the island were American warships, embodying the possibility of armed intervention by Uncle Sam if conditions became too chaotic. In the capital city and other centers new political and revolutionary factions formed nightly, and various strikes complicated the situation. Money, food and gasoline for the troops that were supporting Grau San Martin were running low, and merchants were refusing credit.



Ramon Grau San Martin

Nevertheless, the President, who is a more forceful figure than De Cespedes, carried on bravely and proceeded to select a cabinet. Posing and speaking for the talkies, he declared: "At last Cuba is again free among civilized nations of the world. Cuba now has a stable government, all that we need for prosperity, and we hope that prosperity will come quickly."

The ousted military officers, who had taken entire possession of the National hotel and were beleaguered there by the radical soldiers, sent Col. Horatio Ferrer, secretary of war and navy under De Cespedes, to the Presidential palace to demand the immediate resignation of Grau San Martin, but he met with no success. Meanwhile the entire staff of the hotel left and the officers were forced to run the place themselves. Ambassador Welles, who had resided in the hotel, also departed, as did most of the Americans who had taken refuge there.

WASHINGTON, of course, was watching the developments in Cuba with deep interest, not to say anxiety, but President Roosevelt was determined to avoid intervention if possible. Through Secretary of State Hull he indicated that he would follow a line of strict neutrality among the island's factions and would permit Cuba to solve her own political problems. Mr. Hull's formal statement was:

"The government of the United States has no interest in behalf of or prejudice against any political group or independent organization which is today active in the political life of Cuba."

Former President Mario G. Menocal, who returned to Cuba after the ousting of Machado, entered into the picture when the military officers invited him to lead their effort to force Grau San Martin out of the Presidency.

FOR several days Spain was without a cabinet, following the ousting of the pro-Socialist government of Premier Manuel Azana, and the situation was critical. However, President Zamora called in Alejandro Lerroux, veteran Republican leader, and charged him to form a coalition cabinet based solely on the Radical party and the independent republicans. This Lerroux accomplished with some difficulty, persuading all the minority republican groups to support him, although two of their leaders, Salvador de Madariaga and Felipe Sanchez Roman, had refused to sign up. Lerroux selected a cabinet that was approved by President Zamora. Of its thirteen members, six are members of the Radical party, which is really the most conservative party in the country, so the government has taken a decided turn to the right. Lerroux and his government may have considerable difficulty in the cortes, for the Socialist left and the monarchist right will be strong in opposition.

Alejandro Lerroux

One thing the Spanish government has to cope with is the great crime wave that is sweeping over the country. Murders, bombings and incendiary fires have been frequent and the police and civil guards so far have been unable to check the outrages. Many of the crimes are attributed to Communists.

FOUR more states fell into line for repeal of the Eighteenth amendment, making twenty-nine that so far have voted, with none in opposition. Only seven more are needed for the ratification of the amendment, and now not even the most confirmed prohibitionists believe the wet wave can be pushed back. It is a moral certainty that repeal will be accomplished before Christmas.

Maine, stronghold of prohibition since 1851, proved her change of heart by voting more than 2 to 1 for repeal. The wets carried every county and their 80 delegates will take formal action in convention on December 6. Then, all in one day, came Maryland, nearly 5 to 1 for repeal; Minnesota, where the wets outnumbered the drys more than 2 to 1; and Colorado, where the repealists won by nearly 3 to 1.

Other states to vote on the repeal amendment this year are: Idaho and New Mexico, September 19; Virginia, October 3; Florida, October 10; Ohio, Pennsylvania, North Carolina, South Carolina, Kentucky and Utah, November 7. The repealists can afford to lose three of these, but probably will not do so.

NEW YORK city staged a huge NRA parade, and as a preliminary Administrator Hugh Johnson, addressing a mass meeting, informed the nation that 85 per cent of the employers in the United States were already enrolled under the blue eagle. He attacked critics of the NRA, which he declared was "not an attempt at regimentation of industry, but a charter of freedom," and asserted the country had been lifted "about one-quarter of the way out of the inky blackness of last March."

While General Johnson was struggling in Washington to formulate a code that would be accepted by the soft coal interests, President Roosevelt was endeavoring, in a conference with the heads of each of the recovery units, to push ahead three of the major parts of his program—expansion of credit, insurance of bank deposits and control of the oil industry.

Aid for the small business man, who still is having trouble with his credit arrangements now is the central question in the government's credit problem, according to Jesse H. Jones, chairman of the Reconstruction Finance corporation, who attended the conference. Large industries are finding accommodations, he said.

Banks in small towns must be convinced that loans are now feasible, according to Mr. Jones. They are still hanging back and not helping the merchants and industries in their communities, Mr. Jones said.

Mr. Jones repeated his threat that the government plans to take over functions of banks through the medium of mortgage corporations, formed among industries for the discounting of paper with the R. F. C. This device, he said, would clear up the remaining credit difficulties in the road of the recovery drive.

Secretary Ickes, after his conference with the President, said that the price fixing provisions would remain in the oil code, but that he would not attempt to regulate prices until such a step became necessary.

In another conference, plans to collect a billion dollars in back taxes due the federal government were laid before President Roosevelt by Guy T. Helvering, commissioner of internal revenue.

Of the total due, $750,000,000 is tied up in litigation which the government is seeking to speed, Helvering explained, because tax payers are seeking to have it refunded to them. Another $250,000,000 has not been paid in. Assured by the President of a sufficient fund to carry on the work, Helvering said he hoped to round up $300,000,000 in the near future without great difficulty. No prosecutions are being planned at present.

ADVOCATES of recognition of the Soviet Russian government by the United States are much encouraged by the appointment of John Van A. MacMurray as minister to Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania. They believe this is a step toward recognition and that Mr. MacMurray will be our ambassador at Moscow before very long. He is a college professor specialist in Russian affairs and history and recently returned from a trip through Russia. In every respect Mr. MacMurray is qualified to represent the United States abroad, for he has held many important posts in the diplomatic service, in Europe and in the Far East. In 1924 he was an assistant secretary of state, and soon after was appointed minister to China.

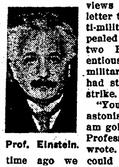
John Van A. MacMurray

It is believed that the next step in the program for Russian recognition will be the establishment of credits amounting to at least $50,000,000 for Russian purchases of copper, cotton and railroad supplies in this country.

IRAQ was in deep mourning for King Feisal, who died suddenly in Berne, Switzerland. His son, Ghazi, twenty-one years old, was declared his successor and took the oath of office at Basrah. He retained his father's cabinet and was expected to follow Feisal's policies.

PEACE for ten years between Greece and Turkey is assured by the pact which was signed at Ankara by Premiers Tsaldaris and Ismet Pasha. The pact guarantees reciprocal frontier security against aggression, a common understanding before deciding on domestic and international questions and mutual representation at international conferences.

CHANCELLOR HITLER and his Nazis have compelled Prof. Albert Einstein to revise in part his long held pacifist attitude. His altered views appeared in a letter to a Belgian anti-militarist who appealed to him to help two Belgian conscientious objectors to military service who had started a hunger strike.



Prof. Einstein.

"You will be very astonished at what I am going to tell you," Professor Einstein wrote. "Only a short time ago we could hope to fight militarism in Europe successfully by individual refusals to do service. But today we are in the presence of altogether different circumstances. There is in the center of Europe a state (Germany) which is publicly preparing for war by all means.

"In these conditions the Latin countries, above all France and Belgium, are in great danger and can only count on their preparedness.

"As far as Belgium is concerned it is obvious that this little country will not make abusive use of its preparation and that it has the greatest need to safeguard its existence.

"Imagine Belgium occupied by present-day Germany! It would undoubtedly be worse than in 1914, even though occupation at that time was terrible. That is why I am telling you in the most direct fashion that if I were a Belgian I would not refuse to do military service under the present circumstances, but on the contrary I would accept it in full conscience with the feeling that I was contributing to save European civilization."

At that time Einstein was in Brussels, but it was reported a Nazi organization had put him on its death list, so he fled to England and hid in a cabin on the east coast provided for him by Commander Oliver Locker-Lampson. Its location was kept secret and he said he would remain there until October, when he was coming to America to lecture.

LOUISIANA'S women have no intention of letting up in their fight to obtain the ousting of Huey Long and John H. Overton from the United States senate. Their organization, headed by Mrs. Hilda Phelps Hammond, sent a long telegram to Senator Connally of Texas, chairman of the senate investigating committee, demanding that the committee conclude its inquiry into the state election that seated Senator Overton. The telegram said in part:

"The evidence of record that was adduced by a competent counsel and skilled investigators conclusively shows that Overton's election from beginning to end was a gigantic fraud designed and perpetrated by Senator Long, Overton's campaign manager, with the knowledge and consent of Mr. Overton, who is the beneficiary.

"Senator Long has openly boasted that word has gone down to lay off of him. We prefer to disbelieve Senator Long's statement, but the attitude of your committee must seem to confirm its truth. In the name of decent citizenry and appealing to a rightful sense of duty as a United States senator, we urge you and your committee to take immediate and energetic action."

BRUISED and footsore after a week of struggling through the forests of Ontario, Ward T. Van Orman and Frank A. Trotter, pilots of a Goodyear balloon in the James Gordon Bennett race from Chicago, were found and brought back to civilization. Caught in a bad squall, they had been forced to land, upside down, in dense woods. Carrying heavy packs, the two men fought their way slowly toward the line of the Ontario Hydroelectric company. Their rescue was made possible by the cutting down of a telephone pole along this line, for James Barrett, lineman, seeking the cause of an interruption in service, found a note written by the aeronauts. Following a course which the note mentioned, the lineman found the Americans in a camp at Tower No. 88, an outpost.

W. T. Van Orman

Though formal announcement had not been made, it appeared the winners of the race were Capt. Franciszek Hynek and Lieut. Zbygniew Burzynski of Poland, who landed near Riviere a Pierre, Quebec, 812 miles from Chicago. Van Orman and Trotter made about 500 miles. Lieutenant Commander T. G. W. Settle and Charles H. Kendall, pilots of the United States navy balloon, landed in Connecticut. They traveled about 750 miles. Balloons representing Germany, Belgium, and France flew shorter distances.

TONY CANZONERI made a gallant effort to regain the lightweight title in New York and failed. For fifteen rounds he battled with Barney Ross of Chicago, the present champion, but in the end the decision was given the younger man who had conquered Tony last June.

News of Minnesota
EVENTS of the week throughout the "State of Ten Thousand Lakes" told in brief form

Minneapolis—The largest crowd ever in the auditorium heard Aimee Semple McPherson give her farewell sermon in the city.

Albert Lea—After four and a half years of the council-manager form of government in Albert Lea, the voters decided or a continuance.

Holland—An abundance of petty thievery has been stirring up this community in recent weeks as many gardens have been raided.

Lake City—Two mail robbery suspects, one critically wounded, were captured after a gun battle, in the baggage room of the depot.

Crosby—Matt Tomlich suffered severe injuries when he cranked his car which was in gear. He was crushed against the end of a building.

Effie—Raymond McMaham, 17-year-old Itasca county boy, walked away with first prize at the State Fair, by his ability to can fruits and vegetables.

Madison—Plans are being made for the annual Red Cross rollcall in Lac qui Parle county. An effort will be made to secure the county's quota of $700.

Le Center—The contract for the steel water tank project here has been awarded and a 150,000 gallon capacity tank will be erected for a bid of $9,369.00.

Minneapolis—Bernie Bierman, University football coach, called first practice and more than 100 candidates turned out. He expects to have a pretty good team.

St. Paul—The state highway department has awarded contracts for highway construction to cost $400,000. The work is to begin at once and will furnish jobs for 400 to 500 men.

Willmar—Kandiyohi county wheat growers are rapidly preparing to take into their own hands the local administration of the wheat allotment plan. Communities already have elected their officers.

Rochester—Unless the city of Rochester secures some outside financial aid it will be unable to take care of its needy and unemployed during the coming winter, Mayor Julius Reiter told the Minnesota public works board.

Stillwater—Sponsored by the Stillwater Association and with its proceeds to go to charity, a harvest festival in which neighboring communites have been invited to participate will be conducted here October 12, 13 and 14.

St. Paul—The open hunting season for waterfowl, coot and jacksnipe in Minnesota will again be limited to a two-month period, from October 1 to November 30, the department of agriculture in Washington ruled. Daily limits have been set at 12 instead of 15.

St. Paul—The state of Minnesota went to the polls and voted two to one for repeal of the eighteenth amendment. St. Paul voted 5 to 1 against retaining the amendment. Volstead's county, Yellow Medicine, went dry, 3 to 1. Twenty-nine states have now favored repeal.

Minneapolis—The county either is going to act as receiver for taxes—or act as receiver for tax-delinquent property. For Hennepin county officials, thumbing through their statute books to seek some remedy for the growing list of payless taxpayers, found a 1927 law that permit them to do just that—have the sheriff collcet revenues on the delinquent property.

St. Paul—Governor Floyd B. Olson has announced the appointment of a state liquor control commission of 66 prominent Minnesotans, asking them to co-operate in working out a plan for legal sale of intoxicating liquor. Their report is to be available for a special session of the legislature, which the Governor is expected to call as soon as repeal of the eighteenth amendment has been voted.

St. Paul—The state land use committee, named by the 1933 legislature to make a study of possible uses of idle lands in the state, held its first meeting. Convening with the group was Gov. Floyd B. Olson's advisory committee on land classifications. The governor's group agreed to act in an advisory capacity for the land use committee. Members of the governor's group are Dr. Raphael Zon, director of the Lake states experiment station John Levin, of St. Paul; E. G. Hall of Minneapolis; Winfield Holmes of Winchell, A. J. Johnson, Beltrami county, W. H. McGinty, Duluth, and Mrs. James Thurston of Minneapolis.

Fairbault—Faribault was Junior Chamber of Commerce headquarters when more than 300 members of junior chambers from Minnesota, eastern North Dakota and northern Iowa gathered here for the Minnesota state convention.

Duluth—The war department at Washington called for bids for dredging Agate Bay harbor for a price of $73,700. The contractor must begin work within 15 days after he is requested to start and complete the project within six and one half working months.

CAP AND BELLS

FORGOT THE EXCUSE

On little James' first day at school he was given a card on which his mother was to write the date of his birth. The following day he arrived late, and without the card.

"James," said the teacher, "you must bring an excuse for being late, and don't forget the card about when you were born."

All out of breath the next day, James rushed in holding a note from his mother. "Teacher," he gasped, "I brought the one about being late but I forgot the excuse for being born."

The Difference

"Did that mule ever kick you?" inquired the stranger.

"Nope," answered the little colored boy, "but a lotta times he's kicked where Ah jest been."

NOT SO POETICAL

Owen was a poet, and, like poets of the younger school, was in arrears with his rent. However, he had promised to pay up as soon as his masterpiece was completed.

A week after he had been threatened with eviction the masterpiece was ready to send to the publishers.

He showed it to his landlady.

"There's the great work," he told her. "'An Ode to a Fisherman,' by Poet Owen."

The landlady sniffed contemptuously.

"And this, Mr. Owen," she said, tapping a bundle of bills, "is called 'Owed to a Landlady,' by the same author."

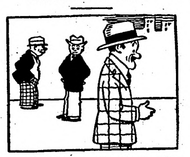
Words Are Cheap

"Yes, my dear, the woman called yesterday, and I said to her: 'You're nothing but a stupid, mean-faced, stuck-up swindler, madam,' I said. 'Get out!'"

"You called her 'madam?'"

"Oh, well, politeness costs nothing."—Frankfurter Illustrierte.

FINANCIAL COUP



"I saved twenty dollars this afternoon."

"How was that?"

"Jones wanted to borrow twenty-five and I lent him only five."

GRANDMA'S PART IN CHILD LIFE

Her Influence Important, if She Avoids Worry.

Some one asked me what part grandmothers should play in a child's life. What I thought about interference. Did I think they should be unhappy about the mistakes (or what they think are mistakes) of young parents in regard to training and management?

A grandma is a necessary person in a child's life and the child who hasn't one misses something very sweet and fine.

After bringing up her own family she has done her duty as far as responsibility and training go.

She won't bother about a dirty face or rumpled clothes. She won't shudder at a slang word. She won't run and get the wax can every time a toe or a wagon wheel scores the best chair or sofa.

If Joan isn't getting enough spinach or Jimmy should be drinking more milk, she might say a mild word to her daughter, but she needn't worry about it.

There are more things to worry grandma than to upset a mother, if she permits it.

This is natural enough, for as we age we grow more susceptible to worry.

This very fact is the answer to it all, and the very reason why women of an older generation would do well to cultivate philosophy about their grandchildren.

The best way to enjoy grandchildren is to make fine friends with them. I know one set of grandchildren who call their grandmother "Mable." She is still a young woman and they love her to death. She plays jokes on them and they on her. She takes them everywhere and sneaks them sodas and balloons and movies. To her they are not problems, but real pals and friends.

Perhaps her way is not every grandmother's idea of enjoying the youngsters, but even so there is a lesson in it, I think. A grandmother has more influence as a friend than as a worrier.—Olive Roberts Barton, in the New York World-Telegram.

—18—

"I know." Bruce wiped away the tears. "I didn't really doubt you. But I've wanted you so. And this house. It's just that I've been so afraid of losing you. Will you forgive me, sweet?"

The wide brown eyes forgave him.

"Quarreling has its advantages," she said, standing on tiptoe to press her cheek against his. "It's so much fun to make up."

* * * * * * *

Emily and Stephen sat before the library fire. They were alone except for the little professor, pottering among the books at the other end of the room. Emily had looked forward all day to this interval with Stephen. She had tried not to be disappointed because his gift to her had been books. She would have liked something more personal. She kept hearing Barbara's voice . . . "Uncle Stephen! Don't you know that you shouldn't have given me seventeen Christmas presents! . . ."

The interval alone with Stephen was not proving to be all that she had hoped for. She found it increasingly difficult to find subjects for conversation that were of mutual interest. She had never experienced that difficulty before— Well, yes,—before the children came. Conversation with Stephen had been easy and delightful. Now nothing seemed to interest him except the children. Emily was heartily sick of the Thornes. But because that was the only way to hold his attention, she spoke of them kindly with a show of humorous affection.

"Is this young Mr. MacLain a special friend of Barbara's?" she asked, hoping that such was the case.

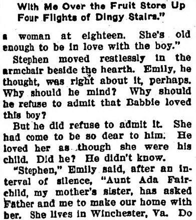
The question coincided with the question in Stephen's mind.

"They are all fond of him," he said, resenting the curiosity in Emily's low voice. "He has spent his summers in Provincetown. He was their father's friend."

"It wouldn't be surprising if he was interested in Barbara," Emily said, wanting to please Stephen and hold his attention. "She is a very pretty girl."

"Barbara is a child," he said with a note of impatience in his voice. "She's just past eighteen."

"But, Stephen," Emily said, nettled by the impatient tone, "a girl may be a woman at eighteen. She's old enough to be in love with the boy."



"It Would Be a Come-Down to Live With Me Over the Fruit Store Up Four Flights of Dingy Stairs."

Stephen moved restlessly in the armchair beside the hearth. Emily, he thought, was right about it, perhaps. Why should he mind? Why should he refuse to admit that Babbie loved this boy?

But he did refuse to admit it. She had come to be so dear to him. He loved her as though she were his child. Did he? He didn't know.

"Stephen," Emily said, after an interval of silence, "Aunt Ada Fairchild, my mother's sister, has asked Father and me to make our home with her. She lives in Winchester, Va. Do you think it would be a sensible plan?"

"Excellent," Stephen said, before he had considered what might lie behind the question.

Emily looked down at her hands folded quietly in her lap. Stinging tears filled her eyes. She had hoped that the suggestion would make him realize that he wanted to keep her here. It wasn't working that way.

"Would you be happy there?" Stephen then asked, feeling that his immediate reaction to the suggestion had not been what she had hoped. His conscience troubled him vaguely. What had Emily expected? How far had he gone that evening in the conservatory before the children came? He had never been quite sure.

She forced back the tears to save her pride.

"'Shady Lawn' is a lovely old place," she said trying to sound enthusiastic. She painted, for Stephen, a lovely picture of "Shady Lawn." He should know that she had ancestors, too.

Her gallantry was entirely wasted on Stephen. He believed in the picture of "Shady Lawn." He thought it would be an excellent idea. His conscience ceased to trouble him. Emily seemed to be delighted with the arrangements. Too delighted. He felt a little hurt as well as greatly relieved.

"I'll miss you," he said so gently that the tears spilled over her cheeks.

The tears distressed him. He felt guilty and embarrassed. He knew, all at once, what she had expected him to say. Pity for her lay like a weight on his heart.

"Don't decide at once," he said, watching her fingers twist a long string of crystal beads. "Take a little time. I'm not sure that we can spare you."

The gratitude in her eyes increased his feeling of guilt. Why didn't he ask her to marry him? He had wanted to once. The children, soon, would be gone. He didn't suppose that he had changed fundamentally. Emily loved him. That was obvious. People expected it. Why didn't he do the decent thing?

There was a moment when he might have asked her the question she ached to hear. But the moment passed. Barbara, her cheeks nipped pink by the frosty air, her eyes shining like stars, came into the room.

"Bruce told me to thank you again," she said, "for being so nice to him."

"That's all right," Stephen said, happy at the thought of her pleasure. He did not look at Emily. He looked at Barbara's vivid face framed in tendrils of soft brown hair.

"I thank you, too," she said. "You're nice, Uncle Stephen."

There was a rattling sound. Emily's chain had snapped. The crystal beads, like small bright tears, scampered across the floor.

* * * * * * *

Christmas was over and Kit was well. Stephen no longer had an excuse for keeping Barbara and the children. But he was reluctant to send them away. He did not like to think of missing that hour before dinner in the schoolroom. All of life seemed savorless when he thought of sending the children away.

But he realized, as the January days passed, that he must do something about them. The children should be in school. He looked up schools for Gay and Jamie. Kit should have a tutor at home and go in to art school twice a week. He had not made up his mind to keep them. But it gave him a certain satisfaction to be thinking of schools and tutors and music lessons. He wondered if, after all, he had been meant for a family man.

Did he want to become responsible for them? That was a question he asked himself many times without finding a satisfactory answer. There were times when it seemed absurd, when he went home in the evening determined to pack them off the next day. He never succeeded. Seeing them, hearing their voices, feeling the warmth of their affection, he knew that he could not do it then. "Tomorrow," he would think. "Tomorrow" never came.

Aunt Edith expected Stephen to do something about the children. She did not speak of it because, as she told her friend Mrs. Beach, it was Stephen's house and she had made it a rule not to meddle in his affairs. But Stephen felt her disapproval.

The children wondered and waited. Would Uncle Stephen let them stay? They invented a game which they called "Straws to Show Which Way the Wind Blows," from one of Martha's sayings.

"He had a school catalogue in his overcoat pocket," Gay would report at a secret conference in the schoolroom. "It was a girl's school. I guess that means me."

Or Kit would tell them, his eyes bright with excitement, "He asked me if I'd like to go to art school. Wouldn't I! Gee!"

"Uncle Stephen thinks boys' camps are a good idea," Jamie reported one evening. "We talked about them this afternoon. Do you suppose dogs are allowed?"

Barbara said Uncle Stephen had asked her if Gay ought to join a dancing class or was it more important to concentrate on the spelling?

"Dancing class!" Gay squealed, bouncing up and down on the sagging springs of the sofa.

"Spelling!" Kit decreed, looking sternly at Gay.

"A little of both, I think," Barbara said with an air amusingly maternal. "If Uncle Stephen will let us stay."

There were straws to show an unfavorable wind as well.

"Uncle Stephen says I can take his 'Moby Dick' when I go," Kit was obliged to report.

"He told his Aunt Edith he wants us to be happy while we're here," Gay said on another occasion.

"He said he'd send me a toboggan," Jamie reported, "when I told him how much snow there is in Maine."

"But he hasn't really decided," Barbara comforted them. "I can tell by the way he frowns when he looks at us sometimes."

So they swung between hope and despair, never entirely sure which way the wind was going to blow. If Uncle Stephen would keep them, was the beginning or the end of every waking thought.

Fruits in Order for Daily Menus

Furnish Vitamin Supplies, Specially Important, at Small Cost.

A new interest is being shown by housekeepers in the relation of food value and cost. Foods are being chosen not only by taste, not only in regard to food value, but in regard to the relation of cost to these other factors.

One of the bright spots in the life of the woman who considers all these things is the fact that fruit has been and is at an unusually low price. Fruits contribute largely to our supply of minerals and vitamins.

The fruits that are used most often in our daily life are probably oranges, bananas and apples, all of which are now staple in our markets. While all of us like a variety in our foods, we can safely choose our fruits with reference to price, as far as food value and taste are concerned. If, for instance, you find a bargain in bananas, which are now at a particularly low price, you use them as your principal fruit for the week, if you use such vegetables as cabbage or lettuce as well. The same is true of apples.

A very interesting comparison of fruits commonly used has been made recently by Doctor Eddy of Columbia university. Fruits are compared in reference to the important mineral content to the content of vitamins A-B-C, the best known vitamins. (B has been divided into two parts—one known as G—but these parts are usually found together in various proportions.) You will note how these vary. You will not depend, for instance, upon prunes for Vitamin C, but you can get a large amount of Vitamin A from them. Next in A content comes bananas, which also supply some units of B and C.

It is only recently that we have been able to confine the vitamin content of food in units. For a long time comparison was made much more generally by checks one, two and three. Of course not all foods have yet been tested by units, but work is continuing in this respect.

In checking cost of food in comparison to food value at the prices indicated, oranges would be the cheapest source of Vitamin C; prunes and bananas the cheapest sources of Vitamin A. If raw cabbage was used for salad to furnish Vitamin C, your diet would be balanced both for cost and vitamin.

The banana, it is interesting to note, has arrived at a new standing in this dietary in the past few years. It has always been a favorite treat for children, but had been considered not too easy of digestion until it was discovered that a ripe and an unripe banana were completely different as far as digestion was concerned. The ripe banana is now being used in infant feeding. The crushed pulp is given a a very early age. For best digestion, either for old or young, bananas whose skins are slightly flecked with brown should be used for eating raw. If bananas are to be cooked, it makes no difference whether they are ripe or unripe. Baked, sauted and broiled bananas are used often now as dessert or as a meat accompaniment. They are also used as apples are in the preparation of such desserts as brown betty.

Bananas With Bacon.

6 bananas
¼ pound bacon

Roll half lengths of peeled bananas in strips of bacon. Secure with toothpick, if necessary. Broil under flame; or bake in oven-proof dish in a hot oven, 40 degrees Fahrenheit, about 15 minutes, or until bananas are tender and bacon is crisp. Baste at least once during the baking. Whole bananas may be wrapped in bacon and cooked in the same way.

Fried Carrots and Apples.

4 medium-sized carrots
4 tart apples
2 tablespoons butter
1 tablespoon sugar
¼ teaspoon salt

Scrape the carrots and cut them lengthwise into thin slices. Core apples but do not pare and cut into slices about ¼ of an inch thick. Place a single layer of the apples and the carrots in a large skillet with the butter, cover tightly and cook until well browned, turn, and brown the other side. Just before the cooking is finished sprinkle with the sugar and salt.

Banana and Apple Brown Betty.

3 cups bread
3 tablespoons butter
2 apples
3 bananas
¾ cup sugar
⅛ teaspoon cinnamon

Cut bread into dice and saute with butter until brown. Peel apples and bananas, cut very thin. Dredge with sugar mixed with cinnamon. Cover bottom of baking dish with the bread, then add fruit and remaining bread in alternate layers, saving a few of the crumbs to put on top. Bake one-half hour, covered, and the last fifteen minutes uncovered, in a moderate oven, 375 degrees Fahrenheit.

Realization

Some of us women became much excited thinking that we were going to receive more pay and less work, but then, tucked away toward the end of a discussion of the working code, was the announcement that it did not apply to household labor. We might have known. I guess we shall have to wait for heaven, after all.—Indianapolis News.

If you want to GET RID of Constipation worries—

Science says Today use a LIQUID Laxative

1. Control intestinal action exactly—no "purging"
2. Measure to suit your individual needs to the drop
3. Banish Bowel Fatigue and the laxative habit

Here's Why:

Any hospital offers evidence of the harm done by harsh laxatives that drain the system, weaken the bowel muscles, and in some cases even affect the liver and kidneys.

A doctor will tell you that the unwise choice of laxatives is a common cause of chronic constipation.

Fortunately, the public is fast returning to the use of laxatives in liquid form.

A properly prepared liquid laxative brings a perfect movement. There is no discomfort at the time and no weakness after. You don't have to take "a double dose" a day or two later.

In buying any laxative, always read the label. Not the claims, but the contents. If it contains one doubtful drug, don't take it.

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is a prescriptional preparation in which there are no mineral drugs. Its ingredients are on the label. By using it, you avoid danger of bowel strain. You can keep the bowels regular, and comfortable; you can make constipated spells as rare as colds.

The liquid test:

This test has proved to many men and women that their trouble was not "weak bowels", but strong cathartics:

First. Select a good liquid laxative. 2. Take the dose you find is suited to your system. 3. Gradually reduce the dose until bowels are moving regularly without any need of stimulation.

Syrup pepsin has the highest standing among liquid laxatives, and is the one generally used. It contains senna, a natural laxative which is perfectly safe for the youngest child. Your druggist has Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin.

Make 'Em Cut the Hay!

Do you know that some hunters told us that up in the northwest corner of the county there are several sections of nice low prairie land on which stand thousands of tons of good hay and not a mower in sight.

Why don't some of the farmers cut it? We were led to believe that the state was going to see that all available hay was cut this year. They may send someone out at once to investigate and see for themselves.

The hunters said it was worth cutting and saving even now.

The chicken hunting season is over and if we are to judge the big hunt by the number of birds we see left alive, we say that only ten per cent of the crop was harvested.

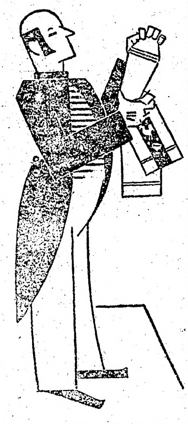
Cocktail and Friendships



COCKTAILS cement friendships, even fruit cocktails—and you'll find them pretty good at holding together mere acquaintances, if they are served out on the porch these warm afternoons along with plenty of cracked-ice and sparkling conversation.

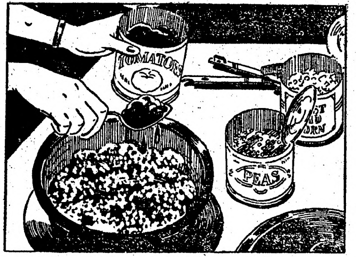
So get out the tall glasses, the smart new trays and the new Scotch plaid cocktail napkins—and here's looking at you over some really good mixtures:

Iced Pineapple Cocktail: Combine the contents of one No. 2 can of pineapple juice, one-half cup honey and two cups of sweet cider. Chill well and put a green mint cherry in each tall slim glass, filled with crushed ice. Pour in the cocktail, and top with a sprig of fresh mint. This makes from eight to ten glasses.

New Deal Cocktail: Chill thoroughly the contents of a 9½-ounce can of tomato juice and the contents of an 11-ounce can of grapefruit juice separately. Combine, and add one-fourth cup lemon juice and two tablespoons of sugar. Serve in small glasses.

Combination Cocktail: Dissolve one cup honey in two and one-half cups water which has been brought to boiling; add two and one-half cups more of water and chill. Add one quart of orange juice, one-half cup lemon juice and the contents of a No. 2 can of grapefruit juice. Chill thoroughly before serving. This fills twenty-four cocktail glasses.*

Keep Them In the Can



THERE are still a few housewives who have inherited belief in the old wives' tale that it is not safe to leave canned foods in the can after it is opened. Perhaps the assurance of two such eminent scientists as Dr. J. C. Geiger, Director of Public Health of the City and County of San Francisco, and Dr. E. V. McCollum, Ph.D., Sc.D., of Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore will help to dispel this mistaken idea.

"Quite a number of inquiries have come to this department," said Dr. Geiger, "relative to commercially canned foods. The canned food, as canned today, is one of the safest foods available. One point that disturbs most people is that they are afraid to allow food to remain in the can after opened. It is much safer to leave the food in the can if properly protected, since ordinarily this food is free of germs and quite often the housewife thinking she is doing the right thing, takes the food from the germ free can and transfers it to a not germ free plate. Furthermore, poisoning from tin is quite unknown in America."

Remain In Better Condition

Dr. McCollum recently wrote in McCall's Magazine about this fallacy:

"This is not true. In general, foods remain in better condition until eaten if the unused portion is kept in the can. Spoilage results from exposure to dust, air and insects, and to the bacteria with which any dish may be covered. There is nothing about the can which will contribute to the spoilage of foods."*

Drive Huskies To Fair

Weiberg and daughter from The Pas, Manitoba, Canada, passed thru here on Monday evening on their way home after a trip to the World's Fair at Chicago. They left their home in Canada early in the summer and spent seventy-two night on the trip to the fair city making the trip with a dog team of three northern huskies.

They traveled nights so the pavement would not be so hot for the dogs to walk on. They used canvas boots on the dogs' feet to protect them from getting sore feet Mr. Weiberg said. The homeward trip was made in an old Ford they had bought and the whole party seemed to enjoy the ride.

IN MEMORIAM

For Mrs. A. L. Sagstuen who passed away two years ago on September 24.

God took her home he wanted her in heaven
He wished to spare her more of pain or care
He called her home to a better land in heaven
And now she is waiting for us over there
We loved her so we find it hard to miss her
She always had a ready smile and cheer
And all about us seems less bright without her
Her loving help we needed so much here
But over there in love and perfect beauty
She lives anew in faith and hope and duty
That we may ready be for God's last call
No parting there--no sorrow, pain or sadness
No heavy hearts, no tears, no broken ties
There by her Grace in reunited gladness
Will meet again because God's ways are wise
Then let her rest as one who is but sleeping
A little while to be awakened glad
Our souls content although our eyes be weeping
Our soul content although our hearts are sad.

Dear beloved Mother

Many Auto Mishaps

While driving home on Thursday afternoon of last week, Mr. and Mrs. H. Moberg and Lednard Larson and son got into an automobile smashup. The Moberg's were driving east on the main highway and had got to the Hans Knutson corner when Mr. Larson, who was returning from Thief River Falls, came north on the range line. Being a blind corner on the road there from the south it appears that neither party saw the other coming, the result being that the Moberg car hit the Larson car as it crossed over the main road going east.

Both cars were damaged quite badly, but the Ford sedan driven by Larson got the worst of it as rolled off of the grade and hit a telephone pole. None of the occupants of either car were hurt.

Oliver Grondahl was hurt bad one day last week when his own car ran over him. He had gone out in the evening to run his car in the garage on the farm when it happened as he cranked the car while it was in gear.

Mr. Grondahl received some bad bruises on his shoulders and a ten inch scalp wound which was cut in a circle about his head. He was rushed to the St. Lukes hospital where he is reported as getting along pretty well.

Roger and Connolly Skoglund, sons of Mr. and Mrs. C. Skoglund had a little automobile topside down-side bottom-side upside on Saturday evening. They had borrowed their father's car and had drove to the Christianson home and got Miss Delores Christianson and were bound for Mud Lake when the car skidded off of one of the sharp turns on the air line and rolled down the grade into the dry river bed.

The car got a few twisted up fenders and some broken windows but otherwise was in good shape after the spill. The three occupants were all together and only received some bumps and a hair-raising scare.

While driving to her home at Gatzke on Saturday evening, Miss Caroline Aspelien, stenographer at the bank here, skidded off of a high slippery grade and nosed her chev coach head first into a dry ten foot ditch. Miss Aspelien was not hurt and the only damage done to the car was a broken front bumper.

Dutch Schenkey, son of Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Schenkey of Middle River lost his new chev car Saturday evening. He was returning home from Strandquist when he failed to make a sharp turn in the road and, his car shidded, upset in the ditch and burned.

Schenkey and a companion riding with him escaped unhurt.

Kuriko Lake Goes Dry

Last week we mentioned the fact that the Red River was so dry that it could be crossed with a threshing outfit now where at one time a big ferry operated. Well now we can give you the sad news that our local Kuriko Lake has evaporated itself out and is no more.

Several local hunters whom went to the old lake on Sunday to hunt ducks reported that they walked across the dry sun-baked mud bottom of the lake. At one time it was figured that this old lake had no bottom as measuring poles up to 90 feet long had been pushed thru holes in the ice in the early days and reports are that they never hit bottom.

Now an explanation can be offered to this case. As it looks the fine muck in the bottom of the lake was, when it was full of water, disolved to a depth of probably several hundred feet and into which a pole would sink easy, and when pulled up again, the clean surface water would wash off the silt leaving one with the impression that the lake was a bottomless pit full of dark drink that looked, tasted and acted like kuriko.

If you seem to have any trouble to understand this, (forstaar de va vi mener) then just come hopping right in for a free consultation for $1.50 and we will also send you the News for a year in which you can read all the particulars about your case.

The Imperial Valley

THE Imperial valley, comprising several hundred thousand acres of land, is located in the southwest corner county of California. It is lower than the Colorado river and its climate is "bone dry"—the rain fall averaging only about four and one-half inches per annum.

It long was a barren waste where neither man nor beast could well exist and scarcely more than locally known. But, one day in 1904 the Colorado river went on a rampage, poured over the valley and into a dried-up salt bed until a lake sixty miles long and now known as the Salton sea—the bottom of which is 287 feet below sea level, was formed.

Uncle Sam went to the rescue. He made his river behave. The combat between them created nation-wide interest and thus the world learned of the Imperial valley.

The overflowing river had covered the land with silt which made a good soil. Irrigation followed. Abundant crops of alfalfa, grain and other products appeared. Now hundreds of miles of canals and ditches carry the water from the river to many thousands of these thirsting acres which required only this life-giving fluid to transform this dried-up waste into one of the outstanding valleys of the world and startle the nation with their productiveness.

Fruits, vegetables, bees, poultry, dairying and live stock followed alfalfa and grain and millions of dollars' worth of crops are produced yearly where nothing of value grew before—all because of the overflow of the river which threatened to be a disaster but turned out to be a boon in disguise.

Minnesota's Tax Levy Is Highest In State's History

The highest state tax rate in Minnesota's history, payable next year for 1933, was announced last Friday by State Auditor Stafford King.

The new levy, an increase of nearly three mills over the 1932 figure, will be 11.06 mills in all parts of the state except in Minneapolis, St. Paul and Duluth, where it is fixed at 10.92 mills.

King ascribed the higher rate to the decrease in the assessed valuation of real and personal property, and to increased relief work.

He said the state tax is lower in the three largest cities because a levy of .14 mill for the public school teachers retirement fund was not applied. These cities have their own teachers retirement fund.

Iver Engebretson and family whom have been living in the old hotel here have now moved out to live in one of the houses on the late A. L. Sagstuen farm.

What Does a Bank Check Say?

It tells among other things:
1. To whom you have paid money.
2. Date paid.
3. Paid for what—by inserting notation on check.
4. A check properly used advertises you to the world as a good credit risk.
5. A systematic file of your checks forms a complete record of your disbursements.

Why is a Check Useful?

1. With a check book in your pocket you always have the exact change.
2. No great amount of money need be kept about the house or in the pocket.
3. It keeps you from being the target for the pickpocket and stickup man.
4. It prevents disputes as to payments.
5. By it a bill can be paid 1,000 miles away.
6. If payment is made in error, payment of check may be stopped at the bank.
7. It is the best evidence in court and elsewhere.
8. A man's checking account is one of the first things investigated when credit is desired.

Let us help you improve your credit standing through our checking account department.

News Review of Current Events the World Over

Demand for Monetary Inflation Voiced by Senator Harrison—Soft Coal Code Accepted—Grau San Martin's Troubles in Cuba.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

BANKERS, business men and many other persons, especially southern politicians, believe inflation soon will be here in full force. The financiers are trying to guess when and in what form it will come, and the southern senators and congressmen are urging straight-out currency inflation, which latter President Roosevelt has seemed desirous of avoiding as long as possible. Of course, we already have a degree of inflation, shown by the declining price of the dollar on foreign exchanges—a few days ago it reached the lowest level in fifty years—but this is not enough for the down-right inflationists. Great pressure was being brought on the President, the leaders in this being Senator Pat Harrison of Mississippi, chairman of the senate finance committee; Senator Fletcher of Florida, of the banking and currency committee; Senator Thomas of Oklahoma, and Representative Byrns of Tennessee, house majority leader.

Senator Pat Harrison

Harrison predicted adoption of a new administration monetary policy in the near future, indicating it would be in full swing by mid-October when the movement of cotton from the farms reaches its peak.

Declaring that the dollar is too high and the price of gold too low, the Mississippian proposed an inflation program that would include some or all of these methods:

1. Issue treasury notes.
2. Raise the price of gold in the domestic market.
3. Purchase silver and issue treasury notes against it, regardless whether French and British co-operation could be obtained.
4. Create a dollar stabilization fund to force the value of the dollar down and to keep it there.

President Roosevelt maintained silence on the matter of inflation, but was especially concerned about the welfare of the farmer. By his direction the Reconstruction Finance corporation made available to the federal land banks another $150,000,000 to assist in the immediate refinancing of farm mortgages held by banks whose operations have been restricted by heavy portfolios of such paper. This step, it was believed, would help toward boosting prices for farm produce.

The administration's other plans for credit expansion included:

Open market operations by the federal reserve banks through which members are piling up credits available for commercial loans.

The Reconstruction Finance corporation plan making $1,000,000,000 available to the banks for relending to industry in aiding the recovery drive.

Cash expenditures by the public works administration out of its $3,300,000,000 fund.

Federal loans through such agencies as the farm credit administration and the home loan bank system.

Cash advances to farmers by the agricultural adjustment administration.

Plans of the Deposit Guaranty corporation and other agencies to reopen closed or restricted banks not hopelessly insolvent.

ADMINISTRATOR JOHNSON and his co-laborers finally succeeded in producing a code for the bituminous coal industry that was accepted by all the operators except two small groups and by the miners' unions and was approved by President Roosevelt. The principal points in this code are:

Provides for fixing of minimum prices; prescribes a maximum 40-hour work week.

Sets basic minimum wages for underground workers ranging from $3.75 to $5.63 in 16 districts.

Recognizes right of miners to organize.

Creates regional and national boards to govern the industry and settle labor disputes.

The sale of coal at less than "fair market prices" is forbidden, and these prices are to be determined by regional marketing agencies and subject to government review. The labor provisions prescribed by the NRA are contained intact in the code. Also the workers are given the right to elect their own check weighmen, and are not to be required by their employers to live in company rented houses or to trade in company stores. There is little change in the prevailing wage rates.

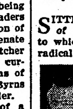
ORGANIZED labor may be well within its rights in seeking for itself every advantage to be obtained from the NRA—certainly other groups are doing the same—but employers are not happy over the latest manifesto of William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor. Setting forth the outlook for the labor convention that opens in Washington October 2, Mr. Green asserts that the federation intends to organize all unorganized labor in the country and will not be stopped in this campaign. Summing up the objectives of the convention, he says:

"Our main attention will be centered upon the recovery act, in an effort to strengthen its operation so as to produce more employment and more purchasing power.

"Not only are we concerned as to reduction of work hours per week to a level lower than the average thus far fixed in codes, and as to higher wage levels than the average thus far established, but we are concerned about the question of adequate representation of labor in machinery created under codes."

That phrase concerning fewer working hours and higher wages than are thus far fixed in the codes is ominous, and many may think that in this respect organized labor is not doing "its part."

SITTING precariously on the edge of the Cuban Presidential chair to which he had been hoisted by the radical junta, Ramon Grau San Martin endeavored earnestly to maintain his balance and to establish a government so solid that it would be given recognition by the United States. On all sides he was beset with difficulties and threats. In the big National hotel were the deposed army and navy officers, heavily armed and supported by the more conservative factions that favored the return to power of Des Cespedes whom the radicals had shoved out. In the harbor of Havana and elsewhere about the island were American warships, embodying the possibility of armed intervention by Uncle Sam if conditions became too chaotic. In the capital city and other centers new political and revolutionary factions formed nightly, and various strikes complicated the situation. Money, food and gasoline for the troops that were supporting Grau San Martin were running low, and merchants were refusing credit to the government.



Ramon Grau San Martin

In a general conference of all factions the old school politicians and representatives of various opposition revolutionary groups demanded the immediate resignation of Grau San Martin. He refused and made the counter proposal that he retain the presidency and change his cabinet so as to give representation to all groups. No decision was reached at that time, and the peril of American intervention increased hourly for there was disorder all over the island.

Then the opposition leaders held another meeting and announced that they had agreed to a truce and to give temporary support to Grau San Martin until some proposal for a harmonized provisional government should be accepted. This plan, reduced to writing, was handed to the Rotary club, serving as mediator, and by it transmitted to the President. The opposition had not receded from its position that Grau San Martin and his government must resign.

WASHINGTON, of course was watching the developments in Cuba with deep interest, not to say anxiety, but President Roosevelt was determined to avoid intervention if possible. Through Secretary of State Hull he indicated that he would follow a line of strict neutrality among the island's factions and would permit Cuba to solve her own political problems. Mr. Hull's formal statement was:

"The government of the United States has no interest in behalf of or prejudice against any political group or independent organization which is today active in the political life of Cuba."

SECRETARY of the Treasury Woodin, resuming his duties after two months' absence due to a throat infection, was surprisingly optimistic concerning the government's financial condition, asserting that he believed the treasury might show a surplus for the period from January 1 to June 30 next.

"We are getting in a lot of money," Woodin said. "Receipts are rising rapidly and will go a long way toward balancing the budget."

NEW YORK city's new high tax rates may drive the Stock Exchange out of the metropolis and to Newark, N. J. Already incorporation papers have been filed in Trenton for the "National Stock Exchange," the incorporators being members of the New York exchange. Col. William Freiday, its president, said:

"This move was made after much deliberation and a series of conferences among members. The new city tax of $4 per 100 shares moved in stock transactions is supposed to be effective for six months only, but the same tax imposed by the state recently was extended a year and the members are skeptical that this city levy will be lifted at the end of six months."

THOSE who have been postponing their trips to Chicago to see A Century of Progress with the intention of seeing it next year are laying up disappointment for themselves. The exposition will close, definitely and finally, on October 31. This is official, and all reports that the fair will reopen next spring are unfounded. There has been a lot of talk in Chicago about establishing a permanent exposition and summer amusement place on the ground occupied by the World's fair, and this project may be carried out; but this will not be A Century of Progress, nor anything resembling it. On November 1 that great exposition will be no more.

BERLIN was full of reports that there had been a split between Chancellor Hitler and his right-hand man, Capt. Herman Wilhelm Goering, premier of Prussia. These rumors were given body by the fact that Hitler did not attend the ceremony at which Goering installed in office the new Prussian state council in the Berlin university.

Capt. Goering

The 71 counselors who took the oath in unison included leaders of the Nazi storm troops, the army, navy, church, art, commerce, industry, and also the former ruling houses—Prince August Wilhelm Hohenzollern and Prince Philipp of Hesse. The impressive ceremony was witnessed by the crown prince and crown princess of Italy, the papal nuncio, Msgr. Orsenigo; Ambassador William E. Dodd of the United States, and other members of the diplomatic corps; but both President Von Hindenberg and Chancellor Hitler were absent, and the latter did not attend the gala opera performance that was the day's climax.

The new council is merely a consultative body, having no voting powers, because, as Goering explained, "that is a relic of parliamentarism," which he declared had been destroyed by Nazism, together with pacificism.

The same day Foreign Minister Von Neurath expressed Germany's determination to obtain security and equality in weapons of defense or withdraw from the arms conference.

In Paris the representatives of the United States, Great Britain and France held conversations preliminary to the resumption of the disarmament conference, the main topic being France's proposal for rigid and permanent control of arms which must be tried over a period of years before she will consent to disarm.

COMPLETE accord between France and Russia, especially in trade relations, is coming nearer daily. Former Premier Herriot recently made an unofficial trip to the Soviet republic and was warmly received, and the other day French Air Minister Pierre Cot and eleven associates flew to Moscow on invitation to "sell" French commercial aviation to the Soviets. This was followed by a nonstop flight from Paris to Moscow by Codos and Rossi in the plane in which they recently established their new distance record from New York to Rayak, Syria.

Correspondents who were permitted to travel through much of Russia without supervision report that the starvation danger there is passing, that the crops of grain appear to be unusually large and that there seemed to be no shortage of food. The gathering and transportation of the harvest is, as always, a tremendous problem.

ADVOCATES of recognition of the Soviet Russian government by the United States are much encouraged by the appointment of John Van A. MacMurray as minister to Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania. They believe this is a step toward recognition and that Mr. MacMurray will be our ambassador at Moscow before very long. He is a college professor specialist in Russian affairs and history and recently returned from a trip through Russia. In every respect Mr. MacMurray is qualified to represent the United States abroad, for he has held many important posts in the diplomatic service, in Europe and in the Far East. In 1924 he was an assistant secretary of state and soon after was appointed minister to China.

John Van A. MacMurray

It is believed that the next step in the program for Russian recognition will be the establishment of credits amounting to at least $50,000,000 for Russian purchases of copper, cotton and railroad supplies in this country.

IRAQ was in deep mourning for King Feisal, who died suddenly in Berne, Switzerland. His son, Ghazi, twenty-one years old, was declared his successor and took the oath of office at Basrah. He retained his father's cabinet and was expected to follow Feisal's policies.

LOUISIANA'S women have no intention of letting up in their fight to obtain the ousting of Huey Long and John H. Overton from the United States senate. Their organization, headed by Mrs. Hilda Phelps Hammond, sent a long telegram to Senator Connally of Texas, chairman of the senate investigating committee, demanding that the committee conclude its inquiry into the state election that seated Senator Overton.

News of North Dakota

EVENTS OF THE WEEK THROUGHOUT THE STATE TOLD IN BRIEF FORM

Fargo.—Air express traffic into and out of Fargo stepped up 1300 per cent for August this year over July, states a dispatch from J. H. Butler of the Railway Express Agency, Inc.

Leal.—Plans are going forward for the annual Achievement day celebration and banquet the first part of October. Co-operating in the presentation are the Leal Livestock club.

Wahpeton.—Six automatic rifles, 10 45-caliber automatic pistols, 200 rounds of ammunition, and two field glasses were stolen from the gun room of Company I armory here. The thieves are believed to be local parties.

Bowman.—While flying over the city in a cabin airplane piloted by S. J. Sagmiller, Eddy Kazmarek and Lawrence Anderson, both of Bowman, were married, the ceremony performed by Rev. Smierciak.

Grand Forks.—Rural students coming to the University of North Dakota this fall may pay their registration fees with farm produce if they so desire, J. W. Wilkerson, university business manager, announced.

Upham.—Bennie Kitzman, mail carrier, of Upham, was accidentally shot while on his duties. The accident occurred while he was climbing into his car, when in some manner he discharged a high powered rifle. The bullet pierced his heart, Kitzman dying instantly.

Fargo.—The Fargo Country club house was recently destroyed by fire. The club house was constructed 16 years ago and the loss is estimated at about $12,500, with $10,000 insurance. Mr. and Mrs. August Bjorhus, caretakers, sleeping in an upstairs room, narrowly escaped.

Wishek.—Daniel de Paitte, 29, Kewanee, Ill., confessed gasoline station robber, was in custody of Ashley officers awaiting hearing on charges of robbing a Wishek filling station recently. dePaitte with his wife and two-year-old child were arrested at Aberdeen.

Devils Lake—Charred bones thought to be a woman were found on the Henry Minnette farm, west of Webster. John Minnette was plowing and noticed a straw pile he intended to use for stock this winter had been burned. Upon investigation he discovered the bones.

Williston.—A truckload of beer consigned to a Montana destination was seized by four men four miles south of Alamo. The driver, V. R. Landers, Williston, was bound and left by the roadside but finally succeeded in loosening his bonds and made his way to Alamo.

Grafton.—The beet harvest is in full swing in Walsh, Pembina, and Grand Forks counties in the district supervised by A. G. Quamme of Grafton. This district has beet fields of 5,860 acres and 180 growers and eight stations with loading equipment. It is estimated that the crop in this district will bring in at least $270,000 in cash.

Fryburg.—S. S. Sutherland, who ranches out in the Badlands northwest of Fryburg, has a perfect melon patch. It consists of about 10 acres of muskmelons and watermelons. These are of the large variety and very sweet, and this proves that more than rattlesnakes and bugs grow in the Fryburg country.

Edgeley.—Two brothers were united for the first time in 63 years when C. A. Tayler and Mrs. Tayler arrived here from Meltham, England, for a visit with J. Tayler, an Edgeley resident. Two days before the arrival of the Taylers, Mr. Tayler was taken seriously ill and his condition is quite critical.

Langdon.—More than 300 of the best dogs in the United States passed through Langdon recently. One section of it paused in Langdon for almost a day. John H. Parker of Neosho Falls, Kans., who had worked 15 dogs at the field trials in Gainesborough, Sask., stopped for car repairs and to rest the dogs and visit his brother, G. G. Parker.

Kenmare.—A high wind took an empty boxcar in the Soo Line yards at Hurd down the track, gaining speed as it went. A farmer saw the car and jumped into his car and hurried to the next crossing, where he then caught hold of the car, climbing to the top, and with much difficulty applied the brakes, bringing the car to a standstill at Eckman.

Fargo.—C. C. Finnegan and Bob Lowe, Bison coaches of the N. D. A. C., lost a valuable player on their squad this season when William Gove, who held the all-important fullback position, had two bones in his left leg broken after being tackled in the last scrimmage session prior to the opening of the season against Concordia's Cobbers. September 29 the Bison play the St. Thomas Tommies at Fargo.

Harvey.—County Commissioner John F. Strauss received official notification of his appointment as acting postmaster at the Harvey office and will take over his new duties October 1. C. A. Revell's term expires on that date.

Mandan.—Search instituted by Morton county authorities for S. H. Davis in Duluth turned to Minneapolis after failing to locate anyone by that name in Duluth. Davis is alleged to have written a worthless check for $500, 10 days ago, for hides sold by the Mandan Meat Market

Howe About:

A Voter's Lobby
The Human Body
The Circuit Rider

By ED HOWE

I HAVE made many recommendations, and later admitted myself they were foolish. But I still believe one of them has merit, to-wit: That every time a man votes he be compelled to pay a dollar for the privilege, the money so collected to be used for the employment of capable lobbyists to represent the people in congress, state legislatures, city councils, etc. Our public affairs go wrong because various minority groups employ lobbyists to advance their interests, and the people have no lobbyists to oppose them. In the big cities there are certain lawyers famous over the country for smartness. Men of this type should be employed to oppose lobbyists. A fund raised as I propose would result in a large sum, and, honestly managed by capable men, might give the people the control of the country they have long lacked.

One of the most noted of the scientists, a teacher in the world's greatest university, says he finds nothing more wonderful and interesting than the human body. Nothing affords him more interest or profit than studying himself: profit because if he takes care of his health, he feels better, is able to do better work easier, and find it a less wearying task. Yet how ignorant most of us are about our bodies! We charge that God and the rich do not treat us well, yet we do not treat ourselves well. The business of caring for our bodies is as simple as firing a boiler, which careless men do properly every day because of fear of an explosion, but few of us fear a bodily explosion that may result in a cold, typhoid, cancer or consumption. How all of us talk incessantly of great subjects like inflation and religion, of which we know little or nothing, to the neglect of simple subjects in which we are vitally interested and may know all there is to know about them!

I lately read a book written by a circuit rider telling of his experiences in the rural sections of many states. I liked the book, as the author seemed a kindly and intelligent man, but remarked one peculiar thing: In noting the hundreds of church services held, the author nearly always mentioned the collections, or the hospitable manner in which he was entertained in various homes, but in no place did he mention spiritual growth, or increase in membership of congregations; on the contrary, there were frequent notes of discouragement in these respects.

• • •

A disgusted gentleman lately retired as mayor of a town of twelve thousand people, and printed a card in the newspapers telling of the agonies he is quitting. The honorable gentleman specially mentioned one citizen who had constantly opposed the administration, charging it had done nothing for him or for anyone. The mayor proves from the records that the complaining citizen had, within a few weeks, received $129.42 in cash from a sewer pay roll specially inaugurated by the city to provide employment; 19 50-pound sacks of flour; fuel of the value of $16.33 at wholesale prices; 20 pounds of lard per month, and numerous gifts of clothing, canned goods, blankets, quilts, etc. In addition, the complainant called on the mayor nearly every day to state his wrongs, and the mayor gave him frequent gifts of money. The poor man had five children. The retiring mayor cites also that they were provided with free schooling, lunches, dramatic, athletic and musical entertainments, and the free services of dentists, district nurses, etc. . . . When congress gets around to investigating the various relief programs of the past few years, I shall be glad to supply the name of this witness.

It is a common saying that the woman pays and pays, and the man owes it. . . . There should be no such saying, for it isn't true. A few months ago a Missouri young man of twenty began "going with" a girl of nineteen, and their association soon became so serious that the girl demanded that he marry her, which he did under violent protest. Later he murdered her. Now he is being transferred from jail to jail, to prevent lynching; if a mob doesn't get him the hangman will, so that in this case the blame, the suffering and joy balance . . . I have been a participant in the love scene many years and send out another warning to men that half such penalty as there is they must shoulder.

What we need now is not more rugged courage, but more intelligent timidity. A courageous fool at a critical time usually gets into worse trouble than a timid one.

• • •

When a man writes or talks, and I do not understand him, he does not himself know what he is talking about, or he would be able to make me understand.

• • •

Why do I so firmly believe the people are generally dunces? . . . I am one of them, and a dunce. Nothing discourages me more than triumphantly proving the people are a bad lot, and then realizing I am little, if any better; indeed, that many of them are my superiors in thinking and efficiency.

Puzzles of Spelling Common to All Minds

Nearly everybody has fallen in with the custom of making it "Pierce City," Mo., instead of the "Peirce City," which was dedicated and platted 60 years ago. No dedication, platting or determination is sufficient to block a natural inclination in spelling. The great majority felt it ought to be Pierce City, and Pierce City it will be, no matter if the man whose name the town sought to follow did spell it the other way.

There is no end of trouble about this "ie" or "ei" business. An old rule embodied an effort to simplify it in this way:

It is i before e, except after c,
Or when sounded as a, as in neighbor and weigh.

But that simplifies too much. For the rule does not hold in one of the most commonly used words, "seize." Nor does it hold with "seismograph" or with "seignior," although it must be contended that the latter is not a fully Anglicized word. Even "cieling" is given in Webster's New International as a variant of "ceiling," but the latter is by far the commoner form.

Puzzles of spelling do not end with such examples. There might be a discourse on words ending in "ible" and "able," for instance, along with many other teasers. Rules are difficult. An observant eye, a good memory and a recognized authority ready at hand will avail best.—Kansas City Times.

Why Liquid Laxatives are Back in Favor

The public is fast returning to the use of liquid laxatives. People have learned that the properly prepared liquid laxative will bring a perfect movement without any discomfort at the time, or after.

The dose of a liquid laxative can be varied to suit the needs of the individual. The action can thus be regulated. A child is easily given the right dose. And mild liquid laxatives do not irritate the kidneys.

Doctors are generally agreed that senna is the best laxative for everybody. Senna is a natural laxative. It does not drain the system like the cathartics that leave you so thirsty. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is a liquid laxative which relies on senna for its laxative action. It has the average person's bowels as regular as clockwork in a few weeks' time.

You can always get Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin at any drugstore, ready for use. Member N. R. A.

BEDTIME STORY FOR CHILDREN

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

OLD MAN COYOTE'S MOUTH WATERS

SPLASH into the Smiling Pool fell Jerry Muskrat, and if ever there was a thankful Muskrat in all the Great World that one was Jerry. He didn't mind his torn coat at all. Indeed, he was thankful that it had torn. If it had held he would now be on his way to the stomach of Hooty the Owl. Despite his fright and the smart of the wounds made by Hooty's claws, Jerry couldn't help a feeble grin as he heard Hooty's scream of rage and disappointment.

Now, of all that had happened to Jerry Muskrat there had been a witness. A witness, you know, is one who sees whatever is going on. Jerry Muskrat didn't know that any one had seen what had happened to him. Hooty the Owl didn't know it. But all the time a pair of the keenest eyes on all the Green Meadows or in all the Green Forest had been watching. They were the eyes of Old Man Coyote.

Splash Fell Jerry Right in Front of Him.

There is very little goes on that Old Man Coyote doesn't know about. He had discovered what Jerry Muskrat was about, and more than one night he had been craftily stretched out back of the bulrushes at a place where he hoped Jerry would come for roots and climb out on the foundation walls of his new house and had watched him fall a-dreaming. He had even thought of trying to wade out and surprise Jerry, but had been too shrewd to try it. He knew he couldn't possibly do it without frightening Jerry.

Then he had seen Hooty the Owl drift like a shadow out across the Smiling Pool right over Jerry and clutch at him with great cruel claws. His crafty eyes snapped as he saw that Hooty had Jerry only by his coat and that he didn't have a good hold at that.

"He won't fly far that way," thought Old Man Coyote. "He'll come down to the ground to get a better hold just as soon as he is across the Smiling Pool, and when he does Old Man Coyote is going to be right there. It is very fortunate that I am on this side of the Smiling Pool instead of on the other. Hooty is going to pass right straight over me and he is flying so low that I believe if I jump suddenly I can snatch Jerry Muskrat right out of his claws."

A fierce yellow light leaped up in the eyes of Old Man Coyote, and his mouth began to water. He crouched very flat and very still on the bank of the Smiling Pool and watched Hooty the Owl draw nearer and nearer with helpless Jerry hanging from his claws. There wasn't a shadow of a doubt in the mind of Old Man Coyote that in one little minute more he would have a muskrat dinner.

And then, right then, when he was so absolutely sure, he saw Hooty lose his grip with one foot and Jerry began to struggle. It was on the tip of Old Man Coyote's tongue to cry "Hang on to him, Hooty! Hang on to him just a minute longer!" But, of course, he didn't do anything like that. Instead he held his breath and quivered all over and his mouth watered more than ever. It was plain to see that Hooty wasn't going to be able to hold on to Jerry Muskrat long, and if only he would drop him on dry land Old Man Coyote would ask no more.

And then right at the very edge of the Smiling Pool Jerry tore loose and fell. He was so near that Old Man Coyote could almost touch him by reaching out. Had the water been shallow there this story never would have been written. But it was deep. It was so deep that Old Man Coyote had to stay on the bank. Splash fell Jerry right in front of him, and as he leaned over the bank ready to grab Jerry if he came up the water was actually dashed in his face. But Jerry didn't come up. He dived deep down and swam to one of his private little tunnels in the bank and crept up this to the safety of a snug little room where there was soft grass.

And so Jerry never knew how near he came to falling from trouble into worse trouble, nor how Old Man Coyote's mouth had watered in vain, and two people instead of one had been disappointed in a dinner they had counted as already as good as theirs.

GRAPHIC GOLF

KEEPS HIT INSIDE OUT.

USE THAT LEFT

EMPLOYING the right hand and arm alone in the downswing robs the golfer not only of considerable force but also of a full use of a wider arc. With the left employed and the muscles of the back adding body force to the blow, a backhand swing of considerable strength can be utilized. One need only to experiment by using the right alone and see how ineffectively that member develops the speed of the clubhead. Coupled with the left side and arm, however, not only a forceful, speedy blow is developed but also considerable leverage caused by the action of the two combining to transmit force from the center of the body. This coordination results in greater length. Another feature of the backhand left is that it enables one to swing from the inside out, a stroke advocated by the pros as the one most conducive of success.

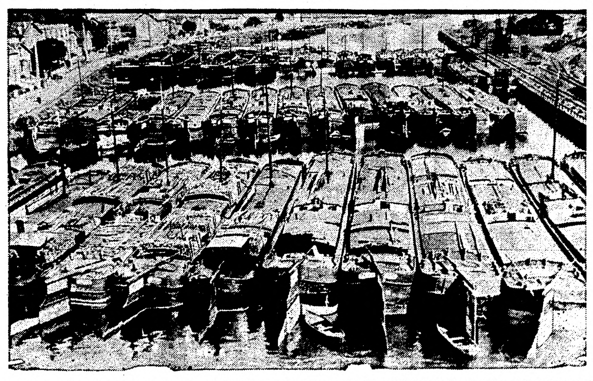
How Striking Bargemen Block the River Seine



HERE'S one of the blockades that French bargemen set up across the River Seine near the juncture of that river and the Oise when they went on strike. Things looked pretty serious until somebody thought up the bright idea of giving the strikers a dose of cold water to dampen their ardor. Accordingly a flotilla of tugboats quietly approached the blockade and let fly a veritable cloudburst from high-pressure hoses. The bargemen surrendered.

PASSING STRANGE

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

THIS life is something passing strange,
And full of change, yet passing change,
The minutes pass, the days, the years,
Joys pass, and yet so do our tears.
Yes, passing strange this life of ours,
But winters pass as well as flowers.
We pass through pain, we pass through strife,
Pass through it all, and pass through life.

Yet, passing by, we much can do
To pass the worst, in passing through;
Consider evil past and gone,
But, knowing kindness, pass it on.
Old friendships pass, yet you and I
May make new friends of passers-by.
When friendship passes, why revile?
Still pass the old friends with a smile.

This life is passing strange, we say;
Some even claim we pass away;
And yet the sun that passes west
Tomorrow passes yonder crest.
Some pass through life and think, no doubt,
Man passes through and passes out;
Yet life is but a passing phase,
And we pass on to brighter days.

SCHOOL LUNCHES

THIS is the time of the year when the children are back at school and the ceaseless round of lunches to put up begins. Active children burn up enormous amounts of energy during the day and must be amply provided with the proper fuel to keep their bodies in the best of health, to build good bodies and good minds.

Such foods as pie, rich cake, heavy meats and fried foods should be given rarely or not at all. After a lunch which gorges the stomach and is hard to digest, the child is dull and lazy the rest of the day. Such foods, too, are not well balanced, nor do they give the correct elements. Fresh fruits, salads, vegetables, milk, fruit juices such as orange or lemon not only supply sufficient nourishment with good whole wheat bread and butter, but supply the vitamins necessary for growth.

An apple, an orange, a pear, or, lacking the fresh fruits, a handful of figs, dates, prunes or raisins will give the child an appetite for the more substantial foods. They are the best known sources for the vitamin C which builds good bone and tooth structure.

The citrus fruits are richer in vitamins and keep the body in ideal condition. With plenty of milk and the heartier foods of cereals, bread and butter, fresh vegetables and a small amount of meat, the child should have normal weight and health.

OUR CHILDREN

By ANGELO PATRI

THE LONG AND SHORT

IT TAKES a nice sense of discrimination to know when to encourage a child to independent action and when to restrain him. The aim of all our teaching is to make the children self-helpful. The great problem is to know when it is safe to send them out on their own. One is never sure.

It is certain that we cannot bring up a child to the post adolescent stage as a dependent child and on his birthday anniversary, turn him loose with the idea that he can take care of himself. Self-direction is not an overnight matter. It is a slow growth fed by experiences. Some of these experiences must come in infancy, the others following along in their appointed places.

The infant is dependent upon us for his very life, but if we continue to keep him so he will, he must, continue to be an infant. We cannot ignore the various stages of growth and expect them to mature. Without use, the budding powers wither and die. Good training involves understanding of the various phases of child growth so that they may be developed in turn and at the high tide of their powers.

Self help begins when the baby can hold his own bottle, or help to hold it, and it continues as long as there is strength in his body, even down to old age. The span in between is one of steady progress, adjustment, mastery. How soon a child can be freed of home supervision depends upon the sort of child he is, the kind of training he has, the sort of environment he meets in his daily experiences. As soon as you see that a child can complete a job without your supervision, praise him and tell him so. He will master physical tasks first. Make a lot of his success. Know that the spiritual victories come later and their roots are in these first tasks.

There comes a difficult time when children feel grown up. To themselves they are able to go anywhere, face any situation, carry any responsibility. To us who know them, who have followed every stage of their growth, they are not able to go alone. They are long on one side and short on another. It won't do to make them infants, it won't do to make them adults. We have to piece out their short sides and help them along until both sides balance.

There is no easy way. One steps along gingerly, living a day at a time, moving a snail's pace. By and by the miracle works and the child is a man, a woman, in his own right. One just gropes and prays and comforts and counsels until then.

• • •

WHAT OF IT?

MUCH of our complaining about the children is of no account. Many of our sharp criticisms are unnecessary. We have the picture of our ideal of a child in mind and when the actual child differs from the dream we are troubled, or annoyed, and attempt to make the child conform to our notion. Most of the friction in families is caused by this mistaken attitude.

If a child is born with a pug nose and the family likes straight ones better, if he has freckles and mother prides herself on her clear skin, if he has big hands and feet and father has dainty ones, if he is reticent and the family loquacious, what of it? What can he do about it? Or you, for that matter?

The child was born with characteristic physical features, with certain strong traits and tendencies. Are you going to make his life miserable because you fancied a different set for him? Or are you going to accept him good humoredly and do your best to help him grow to his own advantage?

Next time you feel tempted to suffer because your child has some annoying characteristic, one that is not truly fundamental to his mental and physical health, just ask yourself, "What of it?" Keep asking until the answer comes to you. "Just nothing at all." This child is going to make his way in the world in spite of his red hair, or his awkwardness or his weight. What counts is his mind. If that is strong, it is beautiful, and mental beauty illuminates the body with a radiance that wipes out all crudities.

If a child is made to feel unfit, his mind suffers. I am against mental suffering for children—adults, too, for that matter. I believe that it is our duty to save children from mental distress whenever we can. We ought to be on the alert to prevent it. That means we should not make remarks about a child's personal characteristics in a way that wounds his spirit.

If a child is awkward, study how to help him grow in grace, remembering all young things are clumsy at the start. If hair is straight when curls would be lovelier, if it is a difficult color, dress it to advantage. No healthy child ever had ugly hair. If he has a blemish or a defect that you can help, help it. If it can't be helped, what of it?

I don't believe children grow their own feelings of inferiority. I believe they are made for them by mistaken adults. If a child is taken as he is, with good humored affection, he isn't going to look for something to worry himself about. He will say as you say, "What of it?"

POULTRY

WORMS WILL CHECK HENS' PRODUCTION

All Fowls Are Susceptible in Warm Weather.

A flock of hens infested with worms will not lay nearly so many eggs as a similar flock free from these parasites. As a rule, worms do not affect chickens until they are two or three months old, but from then on all fowls are susceptible to them, particularly in warm weather. It is easier to prevent chickens becoming infested with worms than it is to eradicate them later.

The first and most important step in the prevention of worms, notes a writer in the Montreal Herald, is to practice strict sanitation in the poultry houses as well as in the poultry yards. Poultry yards should be spread at least twice a year with lime, then spaded or plowed. The poultry houses should be cleaned thoroughly at least once a week. Not only should droppings boards and roosts be scraped, but they should also be disinfected with a good disinfectant. Feeders and fountains should be washed and disinfected at the same time. If possible, young stock should be on ground on which chickens have not been for two years.

It is not enough, however, to practice sanitation on your poultry plant and then just take it for granted that your birds are not afflicted with worms. If the laying flock is producing poorly, if the birds look tired, have sharp breast bones and pale combs, or if the young stock looks unthrifty and is thin, with lifeless plumage, it is quite likely they have worms. The only thing to do then is to cut open one or two of the worst looking birds and perform a post-mortem operation, slitting the intestines their entire length. If you find worms, you can be pretty sure that the rest of the flock is also infested.

Hopper Feeding of Both Grain and Mash Is O. K'd

Hopper feeding of both grain and mash the year round seems to be increasing. Several experiment stations have found it to be satisfactory, particularly so for the special laying breeds. It seems to be doubtful whether it works as well for the meat type of birds. Many poultry men are hopper feeding corn and oats, but not wheat, for the reason that when wheat is fed with corn and oats, the birds generally consume a greater percentage of wheat than of the other grains. In that event, because wheat brings the highest price of common grains, the tendency would be to increase the feed cost.

To obviate this difficulty, wheat is not hopper fed; from four to six pounds of this grain is fed daily in the litter, per hundred birds. Hopper feeding of grain, except wheat, is liked for several reasons. It simplifies the feeding problem and it is more sanitary. Reducing labor cost is something upon which everybody is concentrating, and may perhaps be the main reason why hopper feeding of grain is gradually gaining in popularity.

Cost to Produce Eggs

The cost of producing a dozen eggs on 211 Ohio farms the past year ranged from 11.1 to 25.8 cents, according to statistics collected by the state extension department. These eggs sold for an average price of 23½ cents a dozen. Thus the 20 farms, where the egg cost was 25.8 cents, lost approximately 2 cents a dozen; while the most efficient flocks on 65 farms, where the cost was 11.1 cents, returned a profit of 12.4 cents a dozen.

Wholesale Culling

There are at least two periods when wholesale culling is in order. The first, observes a writer in Successful Farming, is just prior to housing the pullets in their winter quarters; the second is in midsummer just as the hens are completing the year's production. In the culling of pullets many authorities state that usually as high as 15 per cent of those raised to maturity should be marketed rather than held as prospective layers.

Small Bird, Small Egg

With the price of eggs remaining low, but with the price of feed higher, there is a tendency to allow the pullets on range to get along the best they can. It has been well proven that within the breed the smaller the bird the smaller the egg. If pullets come into production next fall small in body size, you will have more than your share of small eggs. Young birds on the range, pullets especially, should not be allowed to shift for themselves.—Indiana Farmers' Guide.

Packing and Grading

Use good cases, cup flats and fillers, advises a writer in the Ohio Farmer. Use excelsior pads or cup flats on the bottom and top of the case. Place eggs in the case with small ends down. Grade eggs into large, medium, and small size and pack each size together (in a single case or in separate cases if more than one case is marketed). Both white and brown eggs may be packed in same case but all eggs of same colors should always be together.

—19—

"Sometimes I think he will," Barbara wrote to Bruce. "Wouldn't that be lovely? But sometimes I don't know. It's a very distracting feeling, like being in a lion's cage and not knowing whether the lion will chew your head off or not. But I think he will more than I think he won't. Only I wish he would decide. I'd feel the same way about the lion. . . ."

And then it was decided. Stephen came home one evening looking tired and pleased and a little uneasy as well. He had presents for the children and some very important news.

"I saw Aunt Josephine," he said, when the boisterous welcome had subsided and the presents had been admired.

"Our Aunt Josephine?" The color paled from Barbara's face. Her eyes were wide and startled.

"Is she a crotchety old lady?" Stephen asked, pretending to be puzzled.

Barbara nodded.

"Does she wear diamond ear drops and black silk dresses and white net collars with points that stick up under her ears?"

Barbara nodded again.

"Does she live in a house with urns and elm trees on the lawn and carpets with roses inside?"

Again Barbara nodded.

"Then I guess it was your Aunt Josephine," Stephen said with a smile.

"What did she say?" the children chorused and then were very still.

"She said you've been badly brought up." Stephen looked at Barbara, at Kit and Gay and Jamie. "She said you had no idea of gratitude. She said I was either very brave or utterly a fool."

"But why, Uncle Stephen?" Barbara's hands clasped each other tightly.

"Because," Stephen told them, "I asked her if I might keep you."

"You mean we're to live with you?" Gay asked, ready to bounce on the sofa springs.

"Yes," he answered, rumpling her bright brown curls.

"All of us?" That was Kit, a flush in his thin dark cheeks, his hazel eyes very bright.

"All of you."

"'Chips,' too?" Jamie asked, preparing to let out a whoop.

"What would we do without 'Chips'?"

The whoop was worthy of a feathered brave on the warpath. It broke the breathless suspense. The children fell upon Stephen with joyous shouts. The springs of the old red sofa creaked in a threatening way. The windows rattled. The coals seemed to dance in the grate.

"Aunt Josephine was right," Stephen said when he had emerged, somewhat rumpled, from the lusty strangling embraces. "You're a tribe of little savages. You have no proper respect for your elders."

"Do you want us to be respectful?" Barbara asked, watching the performance with a happy shine in her eyes.

"I like little savages."

Stephen had surrendered himself to the charms of the four Thornes.

CHAPTER XI

Aunt Edith did not button her lips when Stephen told her he had decided to keep the children. He was accepting a grave responsibility, she said. Rearing children was not an obligation to be so lightly assumed. It was neither wise nor necessary. The children's relatives were able and willing to care for them. Had he considered the possible complications?

"Complications?" Stephen asked. "I want the children. They want to stay. It all seems fairly simple."

"Of course they want to stay. Has it occurred to you that Barbara might have known in advance that you could give them every luxury and advantage?"

Stephen halted midway between the canopied bed and a chaise-longue upholstered in mauve brocade.

"You mean," he asked, "has it occurred to me that she might have looked up my financial rating?"

"Exactly."

Stephen laughed.

"She doesn't know there are such things," he said.

"I'm not so sure." The laugh did not improve the state of Aunt Edith's mind.

"I am," Stephen said curtly.

"It's possible that she might have." He needn't be so touchy, she thought. She was thinking only of him. It would be disturbing for her, of course, to have the children here. But it would be worse for Stephen. Why hadn't he married Emily? She would have been willing to endure the little professor. That would have been a dignified arrangement, at least. Poor Stephen! Why couldn't the children have stayed where they belonged?

"Not Babbie," Stephen said. "She's an impulsive child. She came to me because there was no one else. She thought only of keeping the children together."

"She isn't a child." The expression in Stephen's eyes alarmed Aunt Edith. "I was married," she said with great dignity, "when I was just past eighteen."

"She's a very dear little girl."

"Really, Stephen—"

"She sees people so clearly," Stephen said, thinking of Barbara, wanting to defend her. "She knows it is best for the children to let them grow up together. She's right about it, too. Babbie trusts me. I can't let her down. She's so small and plucky and helpless."

His voice was gentle. Aunt Edith looked up.

"You're in love with her, Stephen," she said. She had not meant to put the thought into words. But Stephen exasperated her beyond endurance, being so foolish about the girl.

"That's absurd!" Stephen frowned, his brows drawn down over his angry eyes.

"It has happened before." It was true, she thought. Stephen had not escaped. Forty, she had heard, was a very dangerous age.

"Do you think that?" he asked, looking at her from under darkly scowling brows.

"I do, indeed." No use contradicting herself, Aunt Edith thought. "There must be some reason why you should want to keep these children, a reason other than kindness and a desire to make them happy."

"You haven't a high opinion of me, have you, Aunt Edith?" Stephen asked quietly. "You make me feel as though I had taken advantage of the confidence of a child."

"A child? Well, really, Stephen—"

"Do you think that, Aunt Edith?"

"I have known you for some time, my dear," Aunt Edith said. "I can't think that you would completely disorganize your life unless there was a reason."

There was a reason, of course. He might have told Aunt Edith that he had loved Barbara's mother. But he did not want to tell her. He was tired of explanations. He said "Good night" and walked out of the room.

Aunt Edith sat in the puffy armchair, thinking, rippling the cards with a sound like a lingering sigh. Then she pushed back the card table and walked across the room to her desk. When she returned to the chair, she spread out on the table a variety of tourist catalogues and time-tables and folders. With a small gold pencil she traced a leisurely journey across the continent. She made notations and added rows of figures. At intervals, she unbuttoned her lips to sigh.

Stephen told Natalie the story the next afternoon. She sat beside the library fire when he returned from the office. He suspected that Aunt Edith had sent for Natalie and had told her the distressing news. What did Natalie think about it all? Was he in for another unpleasant interview?

He found, to his great relief, that he wasn't. Natalie smiled at him lazily, the smoke from her cigarette curling in rings above her sleek dark head.

"Where are the children?" Stephen asked.

"Bob took them to the zoo," she answered. "They ought to be back pretty soon."

"May I have some tea?"

"You look tired, Stephen. Was Aunt Edith very unpleasant?"

"Rather," he said, returning her lazy smile.

"There was an old woman who lived in a shoe," Natalie teased affectionately. "Poor, poor Stephen!"

Stephen relaxed in a soft deep chair. He needed to talk to someone. Natalie was intelligent. She saw things clearly, he thought.

He felt soothed and rested. The fire, the gathering twilight invited confidences.

"Aunt Edith thinks I'm in love with Barbara," Stephen said, breaking a comfortable silence.

Natalie looked at him, an amused little smile curving the corners of her lips but she said nothing.

"She thinks," Stephen continued, "that I could have no other possible reason for wanting to keep the children. It makes me feel as though I have taken advantage of a child."

"A child, Stephen? Barbara is eighteen." Natalie remembered that, at eighteen, she hadn't considered herself a child.

"Of course in some ways she isn't," Stephen admitted, his eyes troubled and grave. "She's never had time to be really young. Aunt Edith shouldn't leap to conclusions, though. Babbie thinks I'm a nice old man. I think she's a dear little girl. Anything else is absurd."

"Are you in love with her, Stephen?" Natalie asked quietly.

He told her the story, then. He told her about the Barbara he had loved a very long time ago.

"So you see," he said when he had finished, "if you and Aunt Edith must have one, there is a reason why I can't let the children go."

"A very good reason," Natalie said gently. It was strange to think that Stephen, always so quiet and reserved, should have been capable of romance.

"It isn't only that," Stephen added, a little embarrassed at having told the story. "It's the children themselves. They're nice youngsters. They'll keep me from getting too stodgy. I like having a family, although it is distracting at times."

"Poor Stephen!" Natalie crossed swiftly to his chair, rumpled his hair in a lazy caress, lightly kissed his cheek. "I'm for you and the children," she said. "I have just discovered that you are rather a dear."

Small but Powerful Engine

A new kind of 12-cylinder engine is only 16 inches high, and therefore can be fitted beneath the floor of a motor bus as a space saver.

Wall Torn Down to Free Trapped Cat

Oceanside, Calif.—"Kitty kitty, kitty," called Frederick Delfelder when he heard the frantic cries of a cat high up in the walls of the Ranch and Garden store at Vista, but no cat appeared. After much coaxing, and still no cat, a carpenter was called to tear out a section of the walls to liberate the pet, which had climbed high up between the walls. The family put the cat in a cupboard while it attended a celebration. The cat had gone exploring but found it impossible to get back.

POISON BOOZE IS FATAL TO TWELVE

Two Negro Boys Are Blamed for Distribution.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Twelve men are dead and two others are blind, victims, police believe, of poison liquor found by two negro boys in a vacant house in West Philadelphia.

Five of those who died are white and seven negroes. One man died in his car, parked in front of his home. Another died at his home after complaining to his wife that he was ill. Others died in hospitals.

Police have issued a warning against purchasing illicit liquor in any part of the city. They have arrested James Marshall and Don Louis, both negroes and both fourteen. The boys, police say, admitted finding a 20-gallon keg of liquor in a vacant house and draining it into five gallon cans, other tin receptacles and jars.

James Witten, twenty-nine, and William Proud, twenty-eight, both white, confessed, according to police, that they bought the liquor from the boys.

Persons in the section of West Philadelphia where most of the victims lived said negroes have been selling liquor there recently for 25 cents a pint.

One woman was at first believed to have been a victim of the poison liquor. She was found by a neighbor, prostrate on her parlor floor. The hospital records show she died of heart trouble, although detectives still insist her death was superinduced by bad liquor.

Captivity Breaks Hearts of Many Wild Horses

Monmouth, Ore. — Capturing wild horses has its thrills, but in some ways it's a sorry business, says W. R. Adams, rodeo promoter, who has brought many untamed broncos from the deserts of eastern Oregon.

"Wild horses when frightened and excited give snorts which can be heard a long way," Adams said. "They sort of whistle."

Adams recently captured 20 wild horses for exhibition at rodeos in western Oregon.

"Four of our twenty died on the trip down," he said. "Not from the truck journey. They died from heartbreak. Couldn't stand the shackles of captivity. One was a beautiful stallion about eleven years old. The loss of his freedom meant death to him."

Sea Lion Wins Battle With Giant Octopus

DePoe Bay, Ore.—A death struggle between a huge octopus and a sea lion, won by the latter, presented a thrilling spectacle to visitors at DePoe Bay recently.

The battle took place near the shore and veracity of the story was backed by scores of witnesses. The sea lion disabled his adversary by tearing off its tentacles, later devouring it at leisure.

Five-Day-Old Baby Has Two Teeth Extracted

Howell, Mich.—Anna Jean, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. E. Squires, acquired the distinction of being a dental patient at the age of five days when Dr. E. A. Collacott extracted two well-developed teeth at the front of her lower jaw. The teeth, which prevented the child from getting proper nourishment, were practically without roots.

Rooster-Head Chicken Lays Egg, Then Crows

Bloomington, Ind.—A chicken which lays an egg and then does not cackle, but crows, has been brought to a poultry house. The fowl has a head like a rooster, with a large, jaunty comb and the body of a hen. It is of White Leghorn stock and weighs six and one-half pounds.

Pigtails Puzzle Shippers

Galveston, Texas.—Many queer shipments have moved through this gulf port, but shippers still are talking about the consignment of 25 tons of pigtails. The pigtails were billed to Liverpool. What they will be used for has not been disclosed.

Man Wed to Four Alices

Cairo, Ill.—Willard Potts, fifty-seven years old, has been married four times, each time to girls whose first name was Alice. "It's a pretty name," he said in applying for a license to marry Mrs. Alice Browning, the No. 4.

Cat Has Litter in Tree

Woodbury, N. J.—Esmeralda's a cat, but she acts much like a cat-bird. High in an aged maple tree, she picked a spot for a nest and now has five kittens with her.

Exeter Cathedral Is 800 Years Old

Site Was Once Occupied by Saxon Churches.

Washington.—Exeter, ancient capital of England's southwest, and county town of Devon, is celebrating the eight hundredth anniversary of the consecration of her famous cathedral.

"Even older than the cathedral is the Bishopric of Devon and Cornwall, which was transferred to Exeter by Edward I in 1050," says a bulletin from the National Geographic society. "The building of the cathedral was begun sixty years later under William the Conqueror. The site chosen had already been twice occupied by Saxon churches, the first built by Athelstan, the second by Canute.

"All that remains today of the original Norman structure are two low massive towers at either end of the transept. The rest of the cathedral was completely rebuilt during the Fourteenth century in the rich style of Decorated Gothic.

"Walter de Stapeldon, bishop of Exeter, and one of the foremost patrons of English art and letters during the early Fourteenth century, had a large share in this transformation. It was Stapeldon also who in 1314 founded Exeter college, Oxford; and in 1332, Exeter grammar school.

Impressive Edifice.

"Upon entering the cathedral one receives an impression of great length and remarkable symmetry of design. Each part is balanced; and the long, low effect increased by an unbroken roofline extending through nave and choir. On the wall of the north transept is a great clock which has ticked since the days of Edward II in the Fourteenth century. It has two dials, one showing the hours and the moon's phases, the other recording the minutes. In the library is the ancient Codex Exoniensus, a Ninth century collection of Anglo-Saxon poetry, which has been in the possession of the cathedral since the Eleventh century.

"All the history and loyal, independent spirit of the west country is concentrated in Exeter, Queen Elizabeth's 'ever faithful city.' As a Roman town, Isca Damnoniorum, it is a little younger than Paris and as old as London. When the Romans left it in the Fifth century it became the Caer Isc of the Britons and the Exancestre of the Saxons.

"During succeeding centuries it endured countless sieges; Saxons, Britons, Danes, and Normans fought to enter the walls. Later the loyal townsmen staunchly upheld their king in many a revolt. Exeter still remembers the time that Edward the Confessor spent Christmas there; and the day when William of Orange entered the gates in state.

"Modern Exeter occupies a broad ridge of land on the left bank of the River Exe. At the head of this ridge, hidden by ivy, and set in a wide shaded park, are the ruins of Rougemont castle, built by William the Conqueror.

Mol's Coffee House.

"Narrow, stone-paved streets wind between ancient timbered houses, crumbling chapels, and fine old churches. Exeter is a veritable city of churches. In the time of William the Conqueror she possessed no less than twenty-nine! Across the square from the cathedral stands Mol's coffee house, favorite meeting place of those gay adventurers of Devon—Drake, Hawkins, Gilbert, and Raleigh.

"The Guildhall with its overhanging facade, is said to be the oldest municipal building in Great Britain. Here the wealthy merchants of the city transacted their business in the time of Queen Elizabeth, when Exeter was noted for the manufacture of woolens. It was also during Elizabeth's reign that the Exeter ship canal was built—the first canal in England to permit sea-going vessels to reach an inland port.

"Exeter today has a population of over 59,000, and is an important center of agricultural trade. Its various industries include brewing, paper making, and iron founding. Tourist traffic during the summer season is very heavy, especially since it is well located as a base for tours of the west country. Daily motor busses leave the huge city terminal for all parts of Devon and Cornwall."

Planning Their New Magazine

Prof. Raymond Moley, who resigned as assistant secretary of state, confers with his new associates regarding the launching of their new national political weekly. The publication is to be founded by Vincent Astor and is described as an "adventure in independent political journalism." Left to right: Vincent Astor, Professor Moley and W. Averell Harriman, who will be associated with the publisher.

Napoleonic Relics in Paris Enriched by Gifts

Paris.—Two important gifts this year enriched the already important Napoleonic collections of the Malmaison museum.

The French philanthropists, M. and Mme. Jeffe, recently purchased for the museum the complete library of Empress Marie Louise which had been offered at auction in Berlin.

The other recent gift is a collection of coins and medals covering the period of the consulate and the first empire which was collected by Capt. Gaston Geradot, who recently died at Sermoise, France. The captain's family presented the collection, numbering over 2,000 objects in gold, silver, copper and bronze, to the Malmaison museum.

Reports on Lumber Show Industry Is Recovering

Portland, Ore.—Encouraging signs of the revival in lumbering—major Northwest industry—were seen in the recent tonnage reports of the Columbia river.

Shipments reached a higher figure last month than any time since September, 1931. Foreign and domestic port shipments totaled 88,632,644 board feet as compared to 53,060,101 feet in the same month in 1932.

The year's record thus far is 356,685,733 board feet as compared to 299,288,372 feet in the same period of 1932.

It is estimated that 3,500 men have returned to work in Northwest lumber plants and logging crews in the last month.

Rare Mice Discovered by California Expert

Sequoia National Park, Calif.—A rare species of mice, equipped with pockets in which they carry food, was discovered here by Prof. Joseph Dixon, University of California mammalogist.

Professor Dixon found the little animals on Yucca Point at an altitude considerably above that normally sought by mice.

He described them as part of one of the most interesting "triangles" in nature. Seeds of the yucca plant are scattered by white Yucca moths, picked up by the pocket mice and carried to their burrows, where, forgotten, they take root and grow.

Officials Run Town From Prison Cells

Boston.—The entire town government of Wendell, a municipality in the western part of the state with a population of 353 persons, is in jail, but conducts the town government just the same.

The three officials not only serve as selectmen but fulfill the functions also of the board of public welfare and the registrars of voters. They were convicted many months ago of having unlawfully left off the voting list the names of three persons, a husband, wife and daughter, thus depriving them of their voting rights.

They lost their appeal, and a Superior court judge, in spite of a petition in their behalf signed by 180 registered voters of the town, sentenced them to three months in the county house of correction.

Take Yanks in Opium Scandal

Brought to Light by Raid of Peiping Police.

Peiping.—A raid on the Hotel Middle Kingdom staged by Chinese police, troops and Japanese troops, in which a score or more Chinese and Koreans were arrested for drug dealing, served to draw foreign attention to the use of opium in Peiping. The normal American resident, while aware that the drug can be had easily, generally lets it go at that.

However, in the discussion, it appeared that young Americans, girls as well as boys, who came to China for a few weeks have begun to take a whirl with the opium pipe. These youths bear names very often of well-known and highly respected American families and their actions decidedly shock the community of Peiping.

In some cases they request Chinese servants to provide the drug and pipes. The former in disgust have been known to quit rather than oblige. One American resident was dragged into the opium scandal unwittingly when the police discovered that the servants' quarters housed an opium salesroom.

Opium figures very largely in the news from almost every section of China. Officials are either honestly endeavoring to suppress the drug or else they are conniving in its distribution. At Hangchow four high officials were executed for dealing in the nefarious trade.

Kaifeng, capital of Honan province, celebrated Opium Prohibition day when the city was festooned with flags and a mass meeting held presided over by the governor.

The opium prohibition inspector publicly reported that poppies were still being grown in fifty-nine counties, but a systematic campaign was being waged to end such production. He asked for six years in which to completely stamp out opium growing, sales, and smoking within the province. He is already enforcing his plan by sending out soldiers who lop off the poppy flowers with their big swords as their rifles swing from the other shoulder.

ICKES' RIGHT HAND

Col. Henry M. Waite, who was selected by Secretary of Interior Ickes as deputy public works administrator, assumes much of the responsibility for properly administering the government's $3,300,000,000 construction program. Although Ickes holds the title of public works administrator, Mr. Waite's duties parallel those of Gen. Hugh S. Johnson in the administration of the industrial recovery law. Sixty-four years old, Waite first come into prominence as city manager of Dayton, Ohio, back in 1914.

Utah Cave May Contain Secret of Ancient Race

Kanab, Utah.—Far back into the mystic shrines of Monument valley, in northern Arizona and southern Utah, there are untold proofs of civilization existing as early as 500 A. D., yet untouched by savants, T. R. Kelley, field director of a group of Arizona and California scientists, who recently explored the 2,000-mile square area, is certain.

Robert Branstead, a member of Kelley's party, challenged great danger and death to slide down a 40-foot rope from the crest to a cave. It was located deep in the solitude of Monument valley, into which no white man has dared to wander because of evil repute among natives.

There he found what Kelley believes were two pieces of pottery of the basketmaker type, known to have been made about 500 A. D. The room he discovered was bored into almost solid rock, much in the manner known to have been used at that prehistoric date. No tools or implements were found, however. The entrance to the cave was blocked almost completely by great boulders that had dropped into position and wedged tightly.

The cave evidently had been the resting place for animals during past centuries. Many bones littered the floor, and here and there was scattered evidence of a death battle between great beasts of early days.

HUNTER'S STRATEGY

Two men were out shooting when suddenly a policeman popped up and demanded to see their licenses. One immediately took to his heels and the cop rushed off in a pursuit which continued for ten minutes before the man was caught. The latter surprised his captor by fishing a hunting license out of his pocket and presenting it.

"Why the dickens did you bolt when you had a license?" queried the cop.

"Well, you see, officer," was the calm reply, "the other chap hadn't."—Boston Transcript.

The author and his wife were enjoying the comfort of their parlor, she engrossed in a novel, when suddenly she heard him slapping his brow.

"Oh, Arthur," she queried, looking up quickly, "an inspiration?"

"No, dear," he answered sadly, "a mosquito."

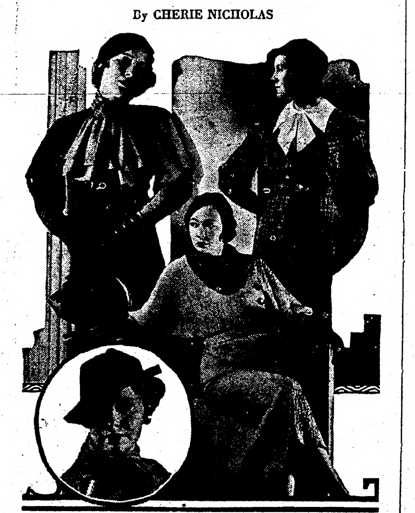
Style-Wise College Girl's Wardrobe

By CHERIE NICHOLAS



FOR enlightenment as to what is to be in the way of smart fashions, watch the style-wise college-going girl. She knows. It is almost uncanny the way these young sophisticates manage to wrest advance information from style centers almost before the public at large gets an inkling as to what's going on.

Which is why the going-away-to-school wardrobes of young moderns are so revealing as to future style trends. So, on the theory that what's chic for the college girl is chic for the rest of us, let's take a peep at some of the fashion choices which these school-faring enthusiasts are making for the coming autumn and winter.

Of course, the logical thing to begin with is practical daytime clothes, but we are so excited about the perfectly lovely formal we saw in a college-girl outfit we can't wait to tell about it. The fact that it is made of white bengaline is what intrigued our fancy. Which is the same as saying that the swankiest thing on the boards in the way of new fabric for party frocks is heavy ribbed silk. It is quite like the weave which was so fashionable in the long, long ago, and now it is "in" again.

In studying the trend of styles-collegiate comes now another thrill in that fashion bids fair to go Chinese. The simplicity of this oriental styling lends itself admirably to youthful effects. Take it in the matter of the new, little round tight turbans, with their close-up cuffs and their pert little peaks at the very tip-top of their crowns, they say "Chinese" at a glance. Tilted over placid young brows, they look delightfully school-girlish. The newest coats which are cut a la mandarin because of the absolute simplicity of their lines, also tune in perfectly with the picture of youth. These coats fasten authentically Chinese, in that one side is brought way over to the other to close either with buttons or some sort of a tricky metal contrivance. The little inch-high collars on these coats look properly prim.

Kimona sleeves are good style not only for coats, but for dresses as well. For a college-girl choice we would call attention to the stunning rough crepe frock on the girl seated in the picture. It is decidedly new because of its tunic blouse which has wide-at-the-armhole sleeves, the deep ridged silk crepe which fashions it and because it is in one of the notably voguish vibrant blues. The collar is black satin with Persian lamb border.

Every college lassie should have a tailored plaid wool day-time dress, now that plaids are a "last word" from Paris. The model pictured at the right to the top in this group is typically collegiate. The belt is green suede. However, the plaid story does not finish with gay woolens, for the most scrumptious plaid velvets have arrived. They are being made up into striking blouses—look wonderful with monotone velvet skirts.

Two fashion tips gleaned from the brown crepe dress with its orange-colored scarf (pictured to the left) is the mass shirring which decorates the sleeves, the scarf and the belt, and the fact that the skirt is sheath-fitting according to latest fashion dictates. Glimpse the bracelets, for massive bracelets are necessary luxuries which college maidens simply must have.

Below is one of those swagger new soft felt hats which look like a man's fedora. Our college girls like them immensely.

BLACK FOUNDATION OF FALL WARDROBE

Deserting the bright colors of midsummer, the smart Parisienne has returned to her favorite black for morning, afternoon and evening. In a recent interview a French woman whose name is synonymous with chic on two continents, outlined a typical Paris wardrobe. For daytime, her choice is a lightweight black wool coat, cut with wide shoulders and trim fitted waistline. This she wears over a black sheer wool frock.

Her afternoon dresses include a yellow and black printed crepe, worn with black gloves and a small draped turban of black velvet. This she alternates with a black satin jacket suit, with white satin blouse.

For informal dining she wears a simple black crepe frock, whose long slender lines are accentuated by panels of pale blue at the sides.

New Back-Flare Coat Is Going to See Many Uses

The new back-flare coats which Molyneux of Paris is designing at the very moment are going to have a far-reaching effect on future styles. Made in silk or chiffon, they can be used for evening coats as well as for swagger sports coats, with gloves, hat and shoes to match. There is a yoke at the shoulders, beneath which gathers fall in full sway. The length of the coat is slightly shorter than three-quarters and the sleeves are straight and come to the wrist. There is no fastening unless it be a button or bow tie at the throat, the vest of the coat flopping open to show the dress underneath.

Plaid Taffeta Girdles

Plaid taffeta makes girdles on some of the most striking evening frocks this season. A white organdie dance frock with ruffles running from the hem to the knees is trimmed with a wide belt and long sash ends of blue, red and white taffeta ribbon.

SWISHING SKIRTS

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Enter on the stage of fashion the lady with the swish-swish silken skirt which is floor length, yea, even trails about in sweeping lines. Formal winter fashions are just like that. This, because we have gone back to the Edwardian age so designs tell us, for our style inspiration. The handsome black taffeta dinner gown pictured is typical of the new movement.

Use Zippers on Cardigan to Replace Seven Buttons

Cardigan sweaters, jackets, sports shirts—all those wardrobe items which open all the way down the front—may now be found with zip fastenings. For, as you know, a slide fastener has been perfected which, when opened, may be separated at the bottom. And to operate one is certainly speedier than fastening the seven buttons which are the average number on a fall cardigan.

HOME WAS DIFFERENT

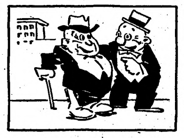
Young Eric was invited to a tea party.

The following day his mother learned that he had been the best-behaved child at the table. He was, in fact, regarded as a model of good behavior for other children to follow.

"I was very pleased to hear that you were a good boy at the party," mother informed him.

"Oh, mother," murmured the boy. "I needn't behave like that at home, need I?"

DISTINCTLY CLUBLIKE



"How are things at the wife's club?"

"All right. Everything they undertake is thoroughly misunderstood and disagreed upon."

It's Pa Who Pays

Binx—I thought you said your wife was going to give you a ruby scarf-pin for a birthday present?

Jinx—She was, but I couldn't afford it this year.

WAS HIS FACE RED!

The reporter had just submitted his manuscript to the editor. Leaving the editorial room, he began to reflect upon what he had written, and decided to go back and change something in it.

"I have a few changes to make in that copy I submitted," he said.

The editor reached into the waste-paper basket and fished out the great work.

"All right, but make it snappy; the waste-paper baskets will be emptied in five minute."—Kansas City Star.

Some Consolation

She—Mabel has invited us to her fourth wedding, and that means another present for her.

He—Well, thank goodness we at least don't also have to give her one every time she gets a divorce.

AT LEAST

Miss Print—Then you won't have a garden wedding?

Miss Prune—No; I'll take no chances on having my wedding called on account of rain.

Unquestionable Influence

"Have women helped politics?"

"I won't try to say," answered Miss Cayenne. "In any event you've got to admit that they have made it a whole lot more interesting."

Two of my children are boys, and I have tremendous washes. Those youngsters just will sit on the bed with their shoes on, they leave grime on face towels, they play in dirt all day. I could never get the clothes clean. They looked so grey I was ashamed to hang them out. Then I tried Fels-Naptha Soap and what a surprise! My clothes were whiter and sweeter each time they came from the tub.

You bet it's easier to wash clothes clean with Fels-Naptha Soap. It brings two dirt-looseners to the job—good golden soap and so much naptha you can smell it! Together, they give you extra help—they loosen the grimiest dirt—without hard rubbing.

THE NEW TURKEY

Woman Nomad of Southern Anatolia.

Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

TURKEY, the former "sick man" of Europe, has taken a new lease on life in Asia. There on the bleak, windswept Anatolian plateau, the erstwhile Ottoman empire has set about the task of building up a new state and a new social order, looking to the West for a pattern.

Progress is slow in some phases of its development, for the Anatolian peasant is fundamentally a conservative of conservatives and has proved acquiescent rather than enthusiastic in accepting reforms. However, more change probably has come into his life during the last decade than in any century that has gone before.

He no longer owes allegiance to a sultan of the house of Osman, but serves the Turkish republic. By government order he doesn't wear a fez any more. Not that there was anything economically unsound about a fez, but because the leaders who ordained its departure were keen psychologists, and realized that their countrymen could not compete as well with representatives of the Western world while they wore a headgear that set them off as distinctly different.

In accord with another official promulgation, a Latin alphabet has replaced the beautiful but cumbersome Arabic script. Every one set about learning this new method of written expression. Only a very small percentage of the population could read or write the difficult Arabic characters, and even these found the alphabet a handicap in commercial dealings with foreigners.

When the Turkish republic came into being, in 1923, it took over an empty treasury. Turkey is not lacking in natural resources, however. Copper, silver, zinc, chrome ore, manganese, meerschaum, borax, emery, some coal, and a little iron make up its mineral treasure chest. There are also approximately 21,000,000 acres of timberland and a considerable amount of unharnessed water power.

Only about 2 per cent of the population is engaged in manufacturing. Perhaps the most important articles produced are carpets, the weaving and coloring of which require some degree of skill. Fig-packing, plants, ginneries, textile and sugar mills also assume prominent places in the nation's rather meager industrial life.

Anatolia Mostly Agricultural.

A vast majority of the people of Anatolia have always derived a living from the soil or from their flocks, but the methods used are only just beginning to develop past the primitive.

Many peasants still break the ground for planting with flint-tipped wooden plows drawn by oxen or buffalo or, perhaps, if there are no animals available, by daughter or wife. However, steel plows are beginning to make their appearance here and there, and near the coast cities tractors are coming into use.

Eleven years of almost constant warfare immediately preceded the establishment of the republic and culminated in a decisive victory over the Greeks at the Sakarya river, in August, 1921, and a heroic defense of the medieval citadel of Gazi antep, near the Syrian frontier. This period of conflict left Turkey sadly depleted of farm animals, seeds and agricultural implements, as well as able-bodied man-power.

But these Anatolian peasants are a tenacious race and, at the disbanding of the armies, back to their despoiled farms they went—those who were physically able—and, with such equipment as could be scraped together, began again to cultivate the soil.

There was no money for farm machinery. Grain was thrashed by the primitive method of rolling it out under a heavy log set with sharp stones, and was converted into flour between two heavy stones manipulated by the women of the farm household. Now the new government is operating agricultural schools which teach the advantages that accrue from the use of modern farm machinery.

Among the more important crops raised are cereals, figs, olives, fruits for drying, tobacco and cotton. Smyrna figs and Samsun tobacco have long been famous in the markets of the world, and of recent years cotton from the region about Adana has begun to attract international attention.

There are about 12,000,000 sheep in Turkey and nearly as many goats. The former yield a rather coarse wool which is admirably suited to carpet manufacture. The hair of the goats, many of which are of the Angora variety, supplies the material for the manufacture of mohair.

Savage dogs, their throats protected from wolves by heavy spiked collars, guard the flocks, and some shepherds would almost rather lose a child than one of these watchdogs.

Women Are Conservative.

Although official freedom has come to the Anatolian peasant women, they have not experienced practical emancipation to the same degree as their city sisters. They cling to their veils, resent the government liquor stores, are shocked by the semi-nudities of the new periodicals, see in the motor car a terror to their beasts, and dread the railways, for whose coming the men are eager. They do much of the hard work about the farms, and in addition spin out the wool which their sheep give, and weave it to make clothes for all the family.

The Ottoman Turks first appeared in their present homeland early in the Thirteenth century, when a few thousand of them, driven from Central Asia by Mongol invasion, settled near the present Ankara. Sixty-eight years later the Osman dynasty established itself and eventually conquered a large territory extending into Europe and Africa, as well as Asia.

Through the succeeding centuries unsuccessful wars followed the earlier victorious campaigns, with the result that the far-flung empire was reduced to the limits of the present republic. But in some respects the shrinking process was a disguised blessing, for it eliminated many of Turkey's polyglot racial problems.

There are still within the country minority groups of Circassians, Armenians, Arabs, Kurds and Turkomans; but, with the possible exception of the Kurds, who are fairly numerous and intensely nationalistic, these people do not present grave difficulties. The Turkomans, who live near the western borders, are a nomadic people and subsist almost entirely on their flocks.

Ten years ago there were approximately 3,000,000 Greeks living in Anatolia and eastern Thrace, but those who survived the war of 1919-22 were removed to Greece in exchange for about 500,000 Turks living there.

Turkey's only large city is Istanbul (Constantinople), and since it has been shorn of its importance as the seat of government, many of its palaces are empty and in disrepair, and the bazaars, while still wonderful, have not the variety of attractions for which they once were noted. The only feature which has not changed is the matchless beauty of the Golden Horn and the Bosporus, as their blue waters reflect mosque and minaret and crumbling fortress tower.

Ankara Full of Energy.

Ankara, awkward adolescent, throbs with energy. Call the new Turkish capital An-go-ra and you relate it to Angora cats and Angora goats. Call it Ankara, as the Turks do, and its name suggests the anchor, paradoxical emblem of an inland city, which marked its ancient coins.

Between the railway and the city, what was a malarial swamp has become a sports field, resort of fashion. On the main street, up which big buses climb to a shoulder of Citadel hill, are crowded schools. Near the Museum, happily conceived and magnificently placed, is an equestrian statue of the first and present president of the republic, Mustafa Kemal Pasha, confidently scanning the West.

Anatolia still colors the life of its capital. Bright-shirted peasants throng the market place. Flocks of turkeys wander about, fattening themselves for sale. Carts with solid wooden wheels and drawn by sluggish water buffaloes poke solemn fun at the speed-suggestive red helmet and arm band of an ultra-modern traffic policeman.

Izmir (Smyrna), Adana, Konya and Bursa are other important cities. The last named is a veritable dream city, charmingly located on the gorge-gashed lap of the Mysian Olympus, not far inland from the Sea of Marmora.

Many elements in Bursa life make it a potential center of difficulties in the new Turkish republic. It owed much of the prosperity that made it a beautiful city to Greeks, Armenians and Protestant Christians who were engaged there in silk manufacture before the World war. One of the republic's largest cities, and long a capital and cultural center under the Osman [illegible] has at times felt [illegible]

DISCONTENT OF USE TO WORLD

Man Wholly Satisfied Makes Little Progress.

"All of us some of the time, and some of us all of the time, I suspect, no matter what may be our circumstances, have a feeling that we have not had that share of the world's good fortune to which we are entitled," said Mr. Cato Ninetails. "Those who are graced with some modesty and discretion do not proclaim such a feeling to the public, because they know better; but those who are more self-centered than modest or discreet do a good deal of talking about it, and so create the opinion among their reluctant hearers that they've had a good deal more than they deserve.

"Whether or not it be a question of deserts, it is certain that some people are endowed with more blessings—material, or immaterial, or both—than other people. Why this is so, nobody has ever been able to explain, but there is no doubt that it not only is so, but that as far as anybody is able to foresee it always will be so, notwithstanding the usually well-meant, but generally footless, proceedings of the reformers. The condition is so invariable that it must seem to many of us that it is as much a part of the intentional way of the world as the nights and days, and the heat and cold, and the storm and calm.

"All this does not seem to be so much the effect of competence or incompetence as of inexplicable circumstances. Competence and incompetence have a powerful influence, to be sure, and go far toward determining how, when and where many of us will do our part of the world's chores, and what will be the reward of our labor; but, on the other hand, others of us manage to make our way through life as round pegs in square holes with more or less success and comfort; and still others of us, through a combination of circumstances, muddle along without ever being called on to show whether we have any ability or not.

"Whether the world has been generous to us or not, whether we live on the sunny side of Easy street or in the gloom of Toil valley, we cannot ease our situation by complainingly mentally or orally of its injustice. Comparisons here as elsewhere are odious. The defects that we see in our neighbor that should preclude his prosperity may be there or may be only in our imagination; and it might be worth while to consider that he may see even greater defects in us that should make our place in the world less desirable than it is. So while toiling upward through the night it is well to make the climb as unenviously as possible; for it is not at all improbable that making the best of a bad job will make it a better job. There is undoubtedly too much discontent in the world, but the evils of discontent result from its quantity, quality and distribution, and not from itself. Its complete elimination would be a misfortune because it has no small part in making the world move forward and get better. Buck works hard, serves his patients well and is unable to collect a considerable percentage of his bills for medical attention. I wondered how he felt about it.

"'Buck,' I asked him, 'are you contented?'

"'I should hope not!' he exclaimed. 'I should hope not, even at my age, for a man quits accomplishing anything when he quits being discontented.'"—Indianapolis News.

"O. K., BIG CHIEF!"

Behold the effect of American films overseas! The other day an Ulster friend of St. John Irvine's asked a child to step out of the way.

"O. K. Big Chief!" said the child.

Writing in the London Observer, Mr. Irvine comments, "If the talkies are changing our tongue, heaven knows what they will change it to, but perhaps the new locutions will turn out, like many 'Americanisms,' to be old locutions that have been 'lying in retirement.'"

Mr. Irvine continues, "Some professor may yet discover that 'O. K. Chief!' was first lisped by children dressed in wood, and who knows that Ethelred the Unready was not accustomed to remark, 'Hello, big boy!' or 'I get you, baby!' to his friends?"

HOW would you like to open your mail box some morning and find a check for $1,000? Enough to put your child through school; to pay up your mortgage, and leave some over for a brand-new fur coat or a lovely rug, perhaps!

Well then, just write a few simple words telling us what you think is the biggest reason so many women are changing from other kinds of laundry soaps to Oxydol. You may win a thousand dollars in cash or any one of 487 other big cash prizes!

Five minutes at your desk may do this for you. For this is a new and simple and Amazingly Different kind of contest. You don't have to pore over the dictionary; you don't have to make up words; you don't have to wrack your brains for trick advertising slogans.

If you ever washed clothes, you have a perfect chance to win money in this contest. Writing, spelling, grammar are not important—as a matter of fact, they don't count at all! To win, just tell us in your own words what you think is the biggest reason for so many thousands of women discarding bar soaps, flakes, chips and old-style granulated soaps in favor of Oxydol! Here is a description of Oxydol that will help you.

What Oxydol Is—How It Works

Oxydol is a new-type granulated soap. The latest, improved scientific discovery of Procter & Gamble experts. It cuts washing time 25% to 40%. And thus saves hours of labor.

It works without back-breaking rubbing, without scrubbing. For it works by dissolving dirt.

It makes clothes 4 to 5 shades whiter than old ways. Yet it cannot fade or injure either fabric or color.

It is as kind to the hands as the finest toilet soap. For it is created by America's largest soap makers—the makers of gentle "Ivory."

What You Do To Win

Nothing could be simpler or easier than this Oxydol Soap Contest. You write your letter, telling why you think so many women are changing to Oxydol. Write one just as short, simple, and direct as the samples printed above. Then put the letter in an envelope with an Oxydol box top (or a reasonably exact facsimile thereof) on which you've written both your own and your grocer's name and address. Address the envelope to Oxydol, P. O. Box 1801, Cincinnati, O., and drop it in the mail box by October 14th. That's all there is to it. And you may win any one of the 488 Cash Prizes!

Enter Contest Now —Wash With Oxydol

Enter this $10,000 contest now. Remember, a housewife is the one who will win. Society women and college professors won't know how. A phrase written in lead pencil on tablet paper is just as good as one that's typewritten or on dollar stationery. So write without delay. You may win $1,000 in CASH. Or—one of 487 other CASH prizes.

And—you'll find in Oxydol a far easier, far safer and far surer way of getting perfect laundry results. When your wash is on the line and you see how fresh and white it looks, that alone will make you feel it's worth while asking for Oxydol every time!

Eyes Examined -:- Glasses Fitted

Do not wait longer if you wish to benefit by present low prices. Come in and inquire. You will be pleasantly surprised.

Have the children's eyes examined now. They may, or may not, need glasses, unknown to their parents. Know—don't guess. Good grades depend on good eyesight. Give your child an equal chance with other children. If the eyes are weakening, both the eyes and general health will benefit from wearing properly fitted glasses for a time. Have them fitted with glasses now if they need them, before they break down from eyestrain.

Partridge and Pheasant Season Opens Oct. 21

Dates for the opening of the partridge and pheasant season at noon October 21 was set by the Minnesota conservation commission recently. Some of the sportsmen here will be delighted to know that the regulations were so fixed that a short open season has been allowed on partridge in Marshall county and that pheasants can be hunted in some of our neighboring counties which are: Pennington, Beltrami and Polk. The time of season set for pheasant shooting in these counties is October 21-24.

Some of the other counties the season runs from three and one half days to fifteen days. In order to be within the law on the season one must be sure what county he is hunting in.

The partridge season in Marshall county is only open for four and a half days starting at noon on October 21 and ending sunset Oct. 25. You are allowed 5 birds a day with ten in possession. Roseau county has a ten days season.

County Graveling Road

The county has ordered the road west from the C. L. Heinze farm graveled and this week Emil Peterson of Middle River who was hired to do the job, put a crew of men and trucks to work. They are taking the gravel for this project in the pit on the Mrs. P. A. Risberg property in the south end of town.

According to O. J. Johnson, county commission in this district, they putting on a coat of 800 yards of gravel on the first mile and 600 yards on the next one in this township and 300 on the first mile in Newfolden township. This project is an added improvement to this community as this piece of road was all heavy clay and was used as a rural mail route and school bus route.

Carl Sorenson is checking the gravel for the county.

Mrs. Berget is having the interior of the P. O. redecorated. Hartley Peterson is the artist.

Cooperative Progress Day Will Be Observed Oct. 21

A fall festival in the form of a co-operative progress day, sponsored by Districts 14 and 17 of the Land O'Lakes Creameries organization, will be held in Thief River Falls Saturday, October 21, it was announced following a joint session of the two groups last Thursday,

The purpose of the festival, as set forth by General Chairman B. O. Norby, manager of the Land O'Lakes poultry plant in Thief River Falls, is to call to public attention and pay tribute to the progress made by co-operative institutions in Northwestern Minnesota, with special reference to cooperatively conducted creameries, livestock shipping associations, wool growers associations, and similar groups.

The sponsors of the event intend in this manner to emphasize the fact that this section of the state has taken the lead in the establishment of co-operative enterprises and that farmers in this region have given them their whole-hearted support.

The day's events will open with an impressive parade in the morning that is expected to be one of the most impressive in the history of the northwest. It will also be thoroly representative, since the district Land O' Lakes boards and fieldmen are taking steps to secure representation in the parade by virtually every creamery in the district, either by floats or by automobiles carrying pioneer patrons and bearing banners testifying to the growth of each institution.

Another group of floats prepared under the direction of the parade committee will call attention to progress made in recent years in the marketing of turkeys, poultry, butter, and eggs.

The principal feature of the afternoon program will be an address by John Brandt, president of the Land O'Lakes Creameries, recognized thruout the nation as an outstanding authority on the marketing of farm products. Mr. Brandt has recently been in close contact with the efforts of the federal government to raise prices on farm commodities, and will have a message of special interest to northwest farmers.

Another event scheduled for the day is the distribution to more than 500 creditors of the defunct Thief River Valley Cooperative Poultry association of approximately $3,000 in cash, representing the final payment on debts of the organization liquidated thru Land O'Lakes creameries.

Serving with Chairman Norby on the committee in charge of general arrangements are P. L. Anderson, fieldman is District 14; Ben Ommodt, fieldman in District 17; Stuart McLeod of Thief River Falls, and E. O. Melsness of Erskine, district directors; and W. E. Dahlquist, Morris Bye, and Robert J. Lund of the Thief River Falls Civic and Commerce Association.

Chairmen of subcommittees are: Parade, Stuart McLeod; program, Ben Ommodt; publicity, W. E. Dahlquist; and finance, E. O. Melsness.

Farmers, Notice!

I will be thru Holt every Wednesday afternoon. If you have any work for me leave word at the Holt Cafe.

Dr. L. R. Twete, Veterinarian.

Minnesota Was Allotted 930,000 Lbs. of Pork

Minnesota in the next few weeks will receive 930,000 pounds of processed pork from the federal emergency relief administration as a result of the federal government's emergency hog-purchasing program. It will be distributed under the direction of Frank Rarig, Jr., federal relief-director of Minnesota.

The pork will be received in four allotments, the first available to Minnesota needy about this week, the second, Nov. 1, according to information received by Mr. Rarig from Washington.

Detailed plans for distributing the pork have not been made, Mr. Rarig said, but he pointed out that it will be easy to handle. The meat will come in 100-pound cases, packed in 6-pound cuts. The pork is dry-cured with salt and requires no refrigeration.

Red River Freezes Over

Week-end weather that dropped to a low point of 7 degrees below freezing caused a thin film of ice to form across the entire width of the Red river at Lincoln park early Monday, according to residents of that vicinity. Several said they had never seen this occur before at this time of the year. It was painted out by city officials that the slow motion of the river due to low water and the Riverside park dam probably contributed to the formation of the ice. The ice melted quickly as the sun's rays became stronger Monday morning.—Grand Forks Herald.

Tony Peterson Has Fire Loss

Tony Peterson who is farming the old Olaus Rodahl farm east of the river reports that he lost a lot of property by fire on Monday afternoon. He had gone out into the big well house on the place and shut down the pump engine which he had noticed was getting hot and went back in the house to have lunch. When he came out again he saw the building all ablaze and was unable to do a thing to stop it as the pump house was quite a large building and made a big fire.

Besides the loss of the pump engine, pump and jack, Mr. Peterson also lost a good cream separator, scale, tools and many other little items he had stored in the building.

School Closed a Few Days

The school here was closed here yesterday and is also closed today while the entire faculty is taking time off for to attend the Minnesota Educational Association district meetings. All except one of the local teachers will go to Moorhead to take in the meeting, the one goes over to Bemidji.

Oscar Bottem and family who have been living on the old T. E. Ellestad farm north of town the past year, have this week moved onto the old Reierson farm southeast of town.

The Weather

The weather has been on the turning point the past week. It could not decide it seems as to whether it wanted to turn into cold and rain or hold out for a few days more of Indian summer weather.

Cow and Car Die

While driving home late Saturday night from Thief River Falls Tjollai Gilbertsen had the misfortune to run into one of Ludvik Sagstuen's cows which had gotten out on the highway near the farm a mile south of town. Both the car and cow died. The ford was banged up in the front end pretty much and passed out first, and was taken to a car hospital later for treatments which put it back in serviceable order.

The cow did not have much to say as she had a broken hind leg and bad cuts. She was tapped on the head with an ax and had a hole cut in her throat, and when all the wind had leaked out of her she turned up her toes and passed into the big yard where rests the remains of the mighty Buffalo.

Mrs. Arthur Mitchell and her little daughter who have been living in the Haarstad residence in town have now moved out to the Ellestad farm north of town.

Livestock Moving Now

A big shipment of stock and sheep were loaded out here on Saturday for So. St. Paul when four cars were shipped. It was estimated that seven hundred head of sheep were loaded here.

Ole Backlund, Anton Rodahl, Reier Reierson and Oscar Moe accompanied the cars to the big market.

What would you do in case you happened upon a serious automobile accident and found one or several occupants bleeding profusely from cuts? Most people would rush to call an ambulance or a doctor, or hurry the injured to a hospital.

But, how about those precious moments when you are waiting for the doctor or the hospital. Are you capable of administering first aid and stop the bleeding? Many, many precious lives could have been saved if someone at the time of the accident had been familiar with the simple method of stopping bleeding by applying pressure with the fingers at certain points of the body, depending upon the location of the injury. You can get pamphlets or or bulletins on this subject from your local drug store, library, Boy Scout Leader, or from your insurance company.

What Does a Bank Check Say?

It tells among other things:
1. To whom you have paid money.
2. Date paid.
3. Paid for what—by inserting notation on check.
4. A check properly used advertises you to the world as a good credit risk.
5. A systematic file of your checks forms a complete record of your disbursements.

Why is a Check Useful?

1. With a check book in your pocket you always have the exact change.
2. No great amount of money need be kept about the house or in the pocket.
3. It keeps you from being the target for the pickpocket and stickup man.
4. It prevents disputes as to payments.
5. By it a bill can be paid 1,000 miles away.
6. If payment is made in error, payment of check may be stopped at the bank.
7. It is the best evidence in court and elsewhere.
8. A man's checking account is one of the first things investigated when credit is desired.

Let us help you improve your credit standing through our checking account department.

A Little Bit Humorous

PESSIMISTIC OPINION

"They say that in order to be happy," said the young woman who reads a great deal, "a man ought to be a fool or a philosopher."

"Yes," answered Miss Cayenne. "If a man is a fool he can't get a woman to accept him. And if he is as wise as philosophers are credited with being he won't propose."

Horrible Details

"Yesterday I confessed my past to my sweetheart."

"What did he say?"

"He didn't say anything. He went to the mirror and combed his hair. It was standing on end."—Cologne Lustige Kolner Zeitung.

Another Way

Wife—You don't give me such nice presents as you used to.

Husband—No, but I settle for those you give yourself.—Boston Transcript.

THE NEEDS OF REFLECTION

"Do you always think twice before you speak?" said the friend.

"It all depends," said Senator Sorghum. "If you are talking business you want to think several times. But if you are merely addressing remarks to an assembled multitude you can simply tumble the words out and let them take care of themselves."

His Status

Pretty Patient—Guess who I met yesterday, doctor.

Doctor—I'm afraid I'm not a good guesser.

Patient—Oh, you're too modest. I heard another doctor say you were the best guesser in the profession.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Still More Improvement

"Gassoway's speeches have improved a lot since he got somebody else to write them for him."

"Yes, and they'd be improved a lot more if he could get somebody else to deliver them for him."

Times Had Changed

Wife—Before we were married you used to send round a dozen roses every week.

Husband—Roses are easy. This week I'm going to send round two tons of coal and a roast of beef.

Matter of Fact

Boob—Everything that's bought goes to the buyer, doesn't it?

Simp—No. Some things, such as coal, go to the cellar.

Yes, ma'am—greasy dirt sticks. But you get an added grease-loosener in Fels-Naptha—naptha. Working hand-in-hand, the good golden soap and naptha give you a sweet, snowy wash—without hard rubbing. And Fels-Naptha is gentle to hands.

"A mutual discovery." He smiled and pressed her hand.

They had no opportunity for further talk. The front door opened. There were sounds of footsteps in the hall and shouts for "Uncle Stephen." The children and Barbara burst into the room, laughing, eyes bright, their cheeks nipped pink by the cold. The quiet was broken by gay excited voices.

"The elephant had a baby, Uncle Stephen! Its name is Annabelle."

"Aren't the monkeys lovely? They look like weazened old men."

"Will a snake's back break, Uncle Stephen, if you make it walk in a straight line? Kit says—"

"What makes bears smell so dreadfully? Don't they ever take baths?"

"Aren't zebras silly looking? Like mules all painted with stripes!"

Stephen was lovely with the children, Natalie thought, watching them surround him like a swarm of chirping locusts. Did she imagine that his eyes turned most frequently to Barbara, sitting demurely amused in the big chair? Stephen was right. She was a child. A lovely child. Stephen was more than twice her age. She felt, all at once, close to Stephen, afraid for him. There was something in his eyes. She didn't want him to be hurt.

"Aunt Edith started something," she said to Bob as they drove home after dinner. "She told Stephen that he is in love with Barbara."

"Is he?"

"I'm not quite sure." Her voice was troubled. "Yes," she added, "I think he is."

"Don't blame him. So am I. She is a sweet kid, Nat."

"But Stephen is twice her age."

"Worried about it?"

"A little worried, Bob. Aunt Edith says Stephen failed to do his obvious duty."

"Swell! Too much obvious duty has wrecked many a good man's life. . . . They're nice kids, Nat."

"Yes," she agreed. "I hope Stephen isn't in love with Barbara, though."

* * * * * * *

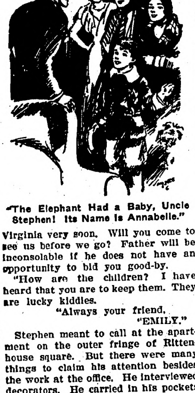
The postman, one morning, brought a note to Stephen from Emily—

"Dear Stephen,

"I have decided to take your advice. We are packing up and will leave for Virginia very soon. Will you come to see us before we go? Father will be inconsolable if he does not have an opportunity to bid you good-by.

"How are the children? I have heard that you are to keep them. They are lucky kiddies.

"Always your friend,
"EMILY."



"The Elephant Had a Baby, Uncle Stephen! Its Name Is Annabelle."

Stephen meant to call at the apartment on the outer fringe of Rittenhouse square. But there were many things to claim his attention besides the work at the office. He interviewed decorators. He carried in his pockets samples of chintz and wall paper, which fell out at unexpected moments. He shopped with Gay and Barbara. It was amusing. It consumed a great deal of time.

And then there were the relatives. He dictated to Miss Finch soothing letters to Uncle Herbert and Aunt Lola and Cousin Julia in Maine. He felt that, on the whole, they were relieved.

Aunt Lola wrote plaintive letters to Gay. But Gay liked being at Uncle Stephen's. Aunt Lola's letters made no impression.

Then, too, there was Aunt Edith. She let him feel daily the weight of her disapproval. If it hadn't been for Barbara, Stephen thought, she would have accepted the situation. She was fond of the children, especially fond of Gay. But she resented Barbara. She told him that she planned to visit her friend Fanny Poole in California as soon as arrangements could be made.

Stephen felt guilty about Aunt Edith. He brought her gifts. He tried to interest her in his plans for the children. Aunt Edith did not relent.

So the busy days passed and Stephen did not visit the apartment on the outer fringe of Rittenhouse square. Then, one day, a branch of white lilacs in a florist's window reminded him of Emily. He watched the clerk pack it into a box with layers of paper. He walked out of the shop and hailed a cab.

But the apartment was vacant. A neat "To Let" card was tucked in the frame of one of the dusty windows.

That evening when Miss Finch reached her sister's home she carried under her arm a slim white florist's box.

CHAPTER XII

"Thornhedge,
"February 15th.

"Darling Bruce,

"It's so odd to think we are going to stay. I can't make it seem real at all. But we are. Isn't Uncle Stephen lovely? Gay and Jamie are going to school. Gay goes to Miss Carey's and Jamie to a boys' school, sort of in the country not far from here. Thomas takes them every morning and goes for them in the afternoon.

"Kit is going to art school in the city and he's so happy that it makes me want to cry. I hope Mother knows about us. And Father, too. We can't be grateful enough to Uncle Stephen if we all live for a hundred years and try as hard as we can.

"I loved your Valentine. Where did you ever find such a quaint one with lace paper and rosebuds and that cunning silver arrow? But I must make a confession. I slept with it under my pillow last night and now it's all crumpled. Will you forgive me? It was because I wanted so much to see you.

"Your Babbie,
"who loves you very much."

"Thornhedge,
"February 20th.

"Bruce, darling,

"No, I haven't told Uncle Stephen about us yet. It wouldn't be considerate. He's had so many things to bother him. His Aunt Edith has gone to California with three trunks and Bessie her maid and I'm sure it was because of us, though Uncle Stephen pretends it wasn't.

"I must say it's a relief to have her gone. She didn't like me very well. Or any of us, except Gay. But it's hard for Uncle Stephen, because she is his aunt and she has lived here ever since his father and mother died. Now I sit at the head of the table and pour Uncle Stephen's coffee and remind the children of their manners and ring the bell for Henry. I do my hair up now. I simply couldn't sit at the head of Uncle Stephen's table with it all tumbling around my shoulders.

"And something else has happened to bother Uncle Stephen. Miss Trent and her father have gone to Virginia to live. Uncle Stephen isn't going to marry her, after all, I guess, and that's because of us, too. If you don't care for children (and I'm sure Miss Trent doesn't) and they come anyway, you 'fold your tents like the Arabs and silently steal away.' That's what Miss Emily and her father did. I think it bothered Uncle Stephen. He never acted very 'loverish' to Miss Emily but I guess older people don't and he's probably 'grieving in silence,' so that we won't feel bad.

"So you see, darling, I can't tell him about us just yet. He depends on me for everything about the children. It wouldn't be fair to run away and leave him, especially since it's my fault that we're here and his Aunt Edith has gone to California and he has lost his love.

"When having a family isn't so new and strange and his Aunt Edith comes home or he finds somebody else to marry who likes children, I'll tell him. You do understand, don't you, darling? You do know that I love you.

"BABBIE."

"Thornhedge,
"March 1st.

"Dear Bruce,

"Please don't consider writing to me a duty. I know that you are busy and can't be expected to answer three letters in a row.

"Gay is to be 'Celia,' own cousin to 'Rosalind' in 'As You Like It' which the girls at Miss Carey's are going to present in May. She's so excited about it that she can't sleep at night. Uncle Stephen took Gay and me to the theater last night to see 'Hamlet.' He was a very gloomy person, wasn't he? No wonder Ophelia went crazy. He's going to take us to see 'As You Like It' Saturday afternoon so Gay can get some pointers.

"I hope you are well. Don't work too hard.

"Your friend,
"BARBARA THORNE."

"Atlantic City,
March 3rd.

"Darling Bruce,

"Can you ever forgive me for writing such a snippy letter? But I hadn't heard from you for more than a week and I was worried and hurt and dreadfully unhappy. You imagine all sorts of things when you wait for letters which never come and, besides, I haven't a nice disposition.

"You should have had measles long ago. They aren't one of the pleasures to be reserved for old age. And to think of them putting you in the children's ward at the hospital!

"I felt so mean when your letter came. I wanted to fly to New York and sit by your bed and feed you things with a spoon. But we were just leaving for Atlantic City and so I couldn't very well. Uncle Stephen had to come on business and he brought Gay and me because Gay was so disappointed about missing 'As You Like It' and Uncle Stephen thought I looked sort of pale. That was because I'd been worrying about you. But I didn't tell him that. I said it was 'growing pains' because, you know, Bruce, I am growing up. I can feel it.

BRIEF LIFE OF 'CATCHY' TERMS

Few Slang Phrases Achieve Lasting Popularity.

[From the Literary Digest.]

People ask where slang comes from.

Perhaps the best authority is Gelett Burgess, who has invented a few, such as "goup," "bromide," "blurb" and "varm."

He credits Will Irwin with "highbrow"; the opposite must have followed naturally.

Many vaudeville performers invent new slang in cold blood, he says. "Hot cha-cha" is associated with Jimmie Durante. "A sedate college professor could read Variety all through and not understand half its merry talk," he writes in the New York American.

He distinguishes two kinds:

"One sort is metaphorical, and merely twists a well-known word like 'flop' or an old phrase like 'up against it' into a new meaning. It may even defy syntax like 'I should worry' or 'ain't we got fun?' The other sort of slang is neologistic; it concocts absolutely new words to enrich the language."

Then Mr. Burgess sweeps around a wide circle:

"The Elizabethan dramatists reveled in such creations. What could be more expressive of a sneaky rogue than the word 'scroyl' or 'dabchick'—what we call a 'flapper?'

"The most famous of modern word coiners was Lewis Carroll. But, despite the immortal popularity of his 'jabberwocky' poem and the felicity of 'frabjous' and 'slithy' and 'mimsy,' of all the words he made up only 'galumph' and 'chortle' have really survived.

"That's the queer thing about slang. Every Paris dressmaker, you know, presents, every season, some dozen or so new gowns. But of them all only one or two models ever achieve a vogue. It's the same way with slang. Some few words catch on and gain a permanent place in the language, like the good old 'chestnut,' which has never been replaced, and 'tightwad.' Some are permuted, like 'peach' to 'pippin,' or 'goat' to 'nanny,' and the many synonymous changes that have been run on the word 'tipsy'—'soused,' 'spiffed,' 'pie-eyed,' etc., a new one every year.

"But most disappear utterly, like the 'skedaddle' of the Civil war and that inimitable word 'dude,' gone with the tight trousers and high collars!

"'Where is the slang of yesterday?' might be the refrain of a good Villonesque ballade. What does the present generation know of 'daisy' and 'tony' and 'spooning?' Wallace Irwin once wrote the 'Love Sonnets of a Hoodlum,' but it would need a lexicon now to translate it. I doubt if ten years from now 'sweet sixteen' will even understand what a 'bootlegger' was.

"The choice of letters has a great deal to do with the coining of striking words. Comparatively little-used letters give novelty to any such inventions. Note such words as 'jinx,' 'kibitzer,' 'kaboodle,' 'vamp' and 'nix.'"

This Civilized Time

The popular color scheme is henna hair, orange painted cheeks, red painted lips and vermillion finger nails.—Florida Times-Union.

MYSTERY OF THE SKIES

The birth of a new world is one of the greatest mysteries in astronomy. And the worst of it is that probably the most significant part of the life of a new star is the very short time spent in getting brighter. It is during those few hours that most of the enigma lies.

As with so many of the striking celestial phenomena, the earliest recorded observations of new stars, or "novae" as the astronomers call them, date back to the Chinese. Unfortunately, their descriptions are often very vague. Translated in the language of the modern constellations such Chinese observations might read: "Three days after the first full moon after the harvest a star as bright as Venus was seen near the left eye of the Scorpion," etc.

MAN'S SPIRITUAL NEEDS

Thomas Carlyle, in his translation of Goethe's "Wilhelm Meister's Apprenticeship," Book V. Chapter 1, page 2, records these beautiful thoughts:

"Men are so inclined to content themselves with what is commonest; the spirit and the senses so easily grow dead to the impressions of the beautiful and perfect, that every one should study, by all methods, to nourish in his mind the faculty of feeling these things. For no man can bear to be entirely deprived of such enjoyments: It is only because they are not used to taste of what is excellent that the generality of people take delight in silly and insipid things, provided they be new. For this reason, one ought, every day at least, to hear a little song, read a good poem, see a fine picture, and, if it were possible, to speak a few reasonable words."

Why Hospitals Use a Liquid Laxative

Hospitals and doctors have always used liquid laxatives. And the public is fast returning to laxatives in liquid form. Do you know the reasons?

The dose of a liquid laxative can be measured. The action can be controlled. It forms no habit; you need not take a "double dose" a day or two later. Nor will a mild liquid laxative irritate the kidneys.

The right liquid laxative brings a perfect movement, and there is no discomfort at the time, or after.

The wrong cathartic may keep you constipated as long as you keep on using it! And the habitual use of irritating salts, or of powerful drugs in the highly concentrated form of pills and tablets may prove injurious.

A week with a properly prepared liquid laxative like Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin will tell you a lot. A few weeks' time, and your bowels can be "as regular as clockwork." Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is an approved liquid laxative which all druggists keep ready for use. It makes an ideal family laxative; effective for all ages, and may be given the youngest child. There is ONLY ONE Super-X

There can be only one—for Super-X is the shotgun load with Short Shot String—an exclusive Western development that enables you to pull down ducks and geese 15 to 20 yards beyond the range of ordinary loads.

Through the use of an ingenious, patented instrument, the Flightometer, the time of flight of each pellet in a shotgun load, from gun muzzle to target, is accurately measured. Guesswork is eliminated. With this instrument as a guide, the shot column of Super-X is held in a more compact mass as it flies through the air instead of stringing out like this.

News of North Dakota

EVENTS OF THE WEEK THROUGHOUT THE STATE TOLD IN BRIEF FORM

Devils Lake.—The charred, burned bones of a young woman found in a burned straw pile east of Webster still remains a mystery. The victim was between 18 and 25 years of age, and was about 5 feet, 2 inches tall.

Leal.—Bernice Carlson, 16, was badly burned about the face when a pan of paraffin with which she was sealing jelly, caught fire. Carrying the pan outside, the wind blew the flames into her face.

Valley City.—A larger enrollment is expected at Valley City State Teachers college this year than last. With a total enrollment of 588 students registered this year to date, compared with 593 last year.

Garrison.—Dr. Frank G. Beardsley, pastor of the Congregational church in Minot, was elected moderator of the Northwestern Association of Congregational Churches at the third annual meeting which was held here.

Charbonneau.—Mrs. Sadie Olen, postmistress, and Mrs. Annie Miller, assistant postmistress, both of Charbonneau, were served with warrants charging them with making false entries in the books of the postoffice.

Williston.—Paul Stephens, Frank Stack, and Jim Lund pleaded guilty to the charge of having stolen saddles. Stephens and Stack received prison terms and Lund being committed to the state training school.

Bismarck.—A contract for 1,000 feet of fire hose and 250 feet of chemical hose was awarded to the Eureka Fire Hose company, Minneapolis, by the Bismarck city commission on a bid of approximately $1,300.

Cavalier.—William K. Walper, 79, prominent Cavalier citizen, was injured fatally when he was assisting in putting the separator in a shed for the winter and accidentally fell beneath the wheel.

Grand Forks.—The average football player on the University of North Dakota starting eleven is six feet, one inch tall, and weighs 192 pounds. This gives the Nodaks one of the biggest teams in its history.

Minot.—Fire, which started from an unknown origin, destroyed the Woolworth store in Minot and caused considerable damage to Fauchald's and Kresge's stores from water and smoke, causing a loss estimated at $100,000.

Hillsboro.—An unusually large acreage of rye is being seeded in this vicinity this year, due to farmers who signed the federal wheat allotment plan, now have to divert a portion of the fields to other crops and have turned to rye seeding.

Wahpeton.—Construction work has started on the new dam by the water and light departments of Breckenridge and Wahpeton and the Great Northern railway. The dam is being built just north of the Wilkin county poor farm buildings.

Fargo.—Roman Meyers of Milford, Iowa, given all-American mention as an end in 1932, has been named to captain the North Dakota State college football team for 1933. C. C. Finnegan, Bison athletic director and head football coach, announced.

Belfield.—Opening of a new 100-bushel capacity flour mill here by the Belfield Milling company culminated a summer building campaign which opened May 8 with a ground-breaking. The mill opens up a new service to Stark county and western North Dakota.

Grand Forks.—Rev. O. Nilson, 89, retired Lutheran minister, died here after an illness of more than a week. Rev. Nilson formerly was editor of the Luthersk Borneblad, a church paper, and recent years devoted himself to writing articles and editing the Hallingen.

Rolla.—The Fred C. Wagner post, American Legion, will now proceed with the selection of a lot and laying of foundation for a log cabin club room in Rolla. The plan is to build a cabin about 20 x 40 feet in size, using Turtle Mountain logs for the walls.

Jamestown.—Jamestown welcomed Mrs. Kate Hughes of Fargo to the golden jubilee celebration in grand style. Mrs. Hughes returned by airplane to the city which she called home 56 years ago. An ardent aviation fan, she went back to her early residence, 100 miles distant, in about an hour's time by a Northwest Airways ship.

Fargo.—The Red River Valley Council of the Boy Scouts of America, with headquarters in Fargo, will act as host council at the regional convention in Fargo, October 23 and 24. James E. West, chief scout executive, and Ray Wyland, national director of scouting education, both of New York, Paul H. Love, regional scout executive, and Charles L. Sommers, regional chairman, of St. Paul, will be among the nationally known guests.

Grand Forks.—Richard Black of Grand Forks, civil engineer, left for Boston where he will join Admiral Richard E. Byrd on his second trip to the Antarctic. Black is a graduate of the University of North Dakota and has been doing work in California in connection with the Los Angeles aqueduct.

Enderlin.—Enderlin business and professional men will sponsor their ninth annual corn show Friday, October 6. In addition it will also be achievement day for Homemakers and 4-H clubs.

Covered Bridge Era Passing

Requirements of Modern Transportation Doom Picturesque Old Structures So Long Landmarks in Vermont; Many Date From Revolution.

Well in the foreground of the rugged scenic beauty of Vermont are the covered bridges, which lead many roadways over turbulent streams and link the Green mountain past with modern transportation. Thousands of motorists who have passed through the state will remember the rumble from floor planks which echoed into the roofed spans, as they passed from sunshine into gloom, then out again into the sunlight. These quaint structures often served as landmarks, some dating back to days of the Revolutionary war.

Previous to 1927 there were between 500 and 600 bridges of the covered type in Vermont. The flood of that year, however, destroyed more than half of them. Today there are only 240 remaining. Approximately fifty have been replaced with modern structures during the last six years.

The Vermont department of highways, being aware not only of the picturesque appeal of these ancient structures, but of the sentiment attached to them, has shaped a policy to retain as many as practical from an engineering standpoint. However increasing volumes of travel and mounting traffic speed have necessitated the removal of some of these spans, especially those on main-line highways.

Almost all of the covered bridges have exceptionally strong trusses, but the floor systems are usually too weak for heavy motor traffic, it has been reported in state-wide surveys. Often times new floor systems may be installed without great expenditure, it has been found, but the chief locations of serious disintegration are at the ends of the structures, where wood supports have been in contact with earth. In a number of cases, it has been discovered, that disintegration has progressed to such an extent that the bridges must be rebuilt. These structures are, of course, very old and as time goes on more and more of them will become unsound.

The principal reason stressed for the replacing with modern, open structures is the guarding of traffic safety. The old bridges were built during times when traffic was light and slow. In almost every instance they were constructed at right angles to the streams which they crossed, with the result that dangerous, sharp-angle turns existed at each end of the structures. This together with the fact they were narrow and often low-arched, made many unfit to meet the requirements of modern travel.

Pride in these covered bridges has become deep rooted in the state, however, and when safety requirements are fulfilled the spans are not replaced unless the expense connected with necessary repairs or maintenance becomes prohibitive or location or design cause traffic hazards which cannot be remedied.

An important move toward the preservation of the bridges was made by the Vermont legislative assembly this year, when a law was enacted which specified that the state might pay two-thirds the cost of maintenance on state aid roads.

Although there is distinctive attractiveness to the covered bridges, traffic experts now declare that their days are numbered. According to unofficial figures motor travel in Vermont this year has established a new peak, and an increasing interest has been evinced by motor vacationists throughout the nation to tour the Green mountain territory. With these facts in mind, road builders have asserted that in order to meet ever-mounting traffic conditions, main-line covered bridges will have to be replaced in the futile. Yet there will be a great many on secondary and town roads which will continue to support traffic and which will be preserved as long as possible. However as no covered wooden bridges are now being built, there will come a day when these types of structures will become extinct, as far as Vermont is concerned.

Skyscraper Found to Have Its Disadvantages

The aimless way in which skyscrapers have been crowded together, not only in New York, but in other cities, is causing much congestion. For that reason, in the opinion of Flavel Shurtleff, secretary of the national conference on city planning, the skyscraper is having the fight of its life to justify the enormous cost with which it has burdened the taxpayers for traffic facilities.

"Skyscrapers have been generally accepted on this side of the Atlantic as both necessary and desirable," writes Mr. Shurtleff in Progress Magazine. "Theoretically, the height of buildings is immaterial, except that height is deprecated when it creates excessive bulk in relation to the traffic capacity of the area.

"Even in Texas, where land is so abundant and cheap that ten acres are allotted to one steer for pasturage, at least four cities boast home-made sky lines, which are assumed to be the hallmark of metropolitan distinction. Houston's skyline includes five buildings of more than twenty stories in height, housing thousands of tenants on less ground than would suffice to nourish one steer elsewhere in the state."

Aye, That's the Rub

"How much would you give for hair like mine?"

"How much did you give?"

Inspiration to All in Really Spiritual Life

Something was said in my meditations a few weeks ago of the art of living, of which so many people know so little, a writer in the Indianapolis News comments. It is one of the greatest of the arts, and also one of the most difficult. Strong, clean, pure, beautiful and self-denying living is a supreme work of art and, as such, an inspiration to all who come, and especially those who live within the sphere of its influence. Delight as we may, and should, in a superb literary style, it is after all, the superb life—and it may be superb, no matter how humble—that exerts the greater influence. Is this also "the gift of God"? Very obviously not. Such a life is the expression of character, and character is the fruit of self-culture, self-renunciation and self-discipline. Its cost of production, measured in pain, sacrifice, suffering and hard work, is enormous and yet so great is the result—character—as to be worth all it costs. Perhaps there are few of us who have not known people who lived nobly, seriously and yet joyously, unaware of their own goodness. We have also known people who were selfish, flighty, without dignity, devoid of any sense of responsibility for the outcome of their own life or the lives of others. The first class is made up of serious artists in the difficult art of living. In the second class are the botchers—and there are many of them. The most hopeless folk are those who would and do divorce beauty and morality and hold that they are natural enemies. Such misguided and misguiding souls know little or nothing of "the beauty of holiness."

7,000,000 Acres To Go Back To State

Almost 7,000,000 acres of land will revert to the state in 1935 because of tax delinquencies unless the legislature takes further relief action or the owners pay back taxes according to a survey completed by the state tax commission.

The land would have reverted to the state this year except for action of the last legislature granting owners two years more in which to pay back taxes.

The survey shows there were 6,989,268 acres of land, especially in northern Minnesota, on which no taxes were paid in 1926, 1927, 1928 or subsequently. The law provides that at the end of five years the land reverts to the state unless reclaimed during that time by the owner.

Counties and the number of acres which would revert to the state include:

Clearwater, 138,690; Kittson, 103,120; Mahnomen, 99,843; Marshall, 249,341; Norman, 39,987; Pennington, 49,872, Polk, 69,638; Red Lake, 48,230.

Oscar Nohre, Page Jarland, Selmer Sorter and Chester Larson, who are attending school in Crookston, attended the 4-H Club meeting here Friday evening.

Do you know that in our estimation the Great Northern branch line from Crookston to Warroad is one of the best feeder lines that the company has got when you figure the average shipping for the year. We will soon give you the figures on carloads shipped in and out of Holt in the past few months.

Getting Too Dry

Axel Nelson of Alsen, No. D, was here over the week end visiting with old time friends. He was out scouting around for a new location for a place to start a blacksmith shop. Mr. Nelson reported that the conditions in Dakota are not so hot as in his line business there is good for about only two months out of the year and a family man can't stand a ten months vacation without pay as the earnings from the two months at blacksmithing do not run in the same column as that of a Senator.

Well! we can say this that our old Minnesota invites you back.

Mud Lake Bluuuuues

Schemes and methods oft remind us
That we farmers have no chance.
The more we work, there grows behind us
Bigger patches on our pants.
Once our pants were new and dressy,
Now they've stripes of different hue,
Just because we don't get paid
For anything we have to do.
Now let's up and altogether:
Ride the schemer for a fall;
Or when soon comes winter weather,
We won't have no pants at all.

Big Game Season Will Be On For Five Days In November

There is a possibility that our Minnesota hunters will be able to legally hunt big game this fall through favorable action by the Conservation Commission. The Commission recommended to Governor Olson that he issue an executive order opening the deer season in the state for five days late in November.

The Commission acted upon the recommendation of W. D. Stewart, Director of the Division of Game and Fish, who has conducted a survey covering big game conditions in the northern part of the state. The survey discloses a large deer population. Leading sportsmen and conservationists point out the danger of inbreeding and of disease affecting the large herd because of over-population.

An opinion by the attorney general's office states that it is legal for the establishment of an open season by execetive order. It is doubtful at this time if any county will be opened for the legal taking of moose. Whether deer will be limited to bucks only is also problematical now. A definite decision will be reached by Governor Olson within a short time after further study of big game conditions has been made.

Home from Hospital

The Time of the Stars

NAVAL observatory time is taken from the stars, usually two or three times a week, for the simple reason that this method affords the most accurate standard of time measurement known to modern time scientists.

In taking the time, observers use small telescopes. Stars which cross the meridian at a point directly overhead in Washington are selected for observation. The exact time at which each selected star will cross is definitely known through previous calculations made from astronomical records.

A micrometric mechanism produces breaks in an electrical current as the star being observed passes certain points in the field under observation. These interruptions are recorded by a chronograph on a sheet of paper. The same sheet of paper carries a record of standard clock ticks.

By certain measurements made on this sheet the exact time, according to the clock, at which the stars crossed the center of the field viewed by the observer through the telescope may be determined with surprising accuracy. It follows, therefore, that the difference between the time at which the stars are known to cross the meridian and the time at which the stars are thus found to cross the meridian, according to the clock, represents the period of time that the clock is in error.

As it has been found to be inadvisable, because of their extreme sensitiveness, to disturb the master clocks by resetting, the day to day error in their time is carefully computed and carried forward, the proper allowance being made when observatory time is transmitted.

Hit By Hit-and-Run Driver

While walking home late Saturday evening, Anton Sagstuen was hit and run over by a car about a mile north of town on the big highway. The driver of the car never stopped and Mr. Sagstuen who was all but killed in the mixup, was left alone in the dark in a dazed and injured condition. A neighbor came along and picked him up and took him home where he checked his injuries which consisted of bad bruised about his legs and shoulders and scalp wounds.

Someone must have felt guilty about the deal as on Sunday afternoon when he was away a strange car had pulled into the yard at his home and asked if Mr. Sagstuen was in the hospital. He is still looking for the fellow and says he will make him stop if he finds him.

The Marshall County Rural School Teachers' Institute will be held in Warren on Friday, October 27, according to an announcement made by Nels M. Engen, county superintendent of schools. Mrs. Agnes Pyne, institute instructor from the Minnesota Department of Education, will be the instructor at the institute. The institute will feature "The New 7th and 8th Grade Course of Study."

Gust Williams and family of Greenbush visited with relatives here Sunday.

Leonard Peterson of Pontiac, Mich., arrived here on Saturday for a visit. Mrs. Peterson who has spent the summer here at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. O. B. Johnson, will return to Michigan with him.

Mr. and Mrs. H. O. Hanson and son Milton, Mrs. O. Nohre and daughters Gertrude and Ethel spent Saturday down at Moorhead where they visited with Harold Nohre who is attending Concordia college and also took in the Concordia college and Macalester college northwest conference football game.

Steal Flax from Granary

Some party whom evidently had a crop fiailure as far as his flax crop was concerned, refused to be without some and so according to reports reaching the News, had one night last week gone out to S. H. Nohre farm and helped themselves to some of the flax in the granary.

Mr. Nohre was not at home but his family were and they knew nothing of the robbery until the next morning when they saw car tracks in the yard near the barn. The thieves had been sneaky enough to drive in thru a lane in the pasture where the woods would shield them from view and had parked back of the big barn on the farm.

Mrs. George Nordgren, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Martin, and Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Taves, of Hunter, N. D., visited at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ben Elliott southwest of town, last week. Mrs. Nordgren remained until Sunday, when she was accompanied on her home trip by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Elliott.

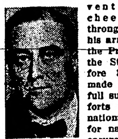
President Roosevelt Addresses American Legion Convention in Chicago—Direct Federal Aid for the Needy Is Planned.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD



President Roosevelt

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT made a hurried trip to Chicago and delivered a stirring speech at the opening session of the American Legion convention. Wildly cheered by vast throngs of citizens on his arrival in the city the President sped to the Stadium and before 80,000 veterans made his appeal for full support of his efforts to bring about national recovery, and for national unity to ensure national safety and credit. Mr. Roosevelt said in part:

"Industry cannot be restored, people cannot be put back to work, banks cannot be kept open, human suffering cannot be cared for, if the government itself is bankrupt. We realize now that the great human values, not for you alone, but for all American citizens, rest upon the unimpaired credit of the United States.

"It was because of this that we undertook to take the national treasury out of the red and put it into the black. And in the doing of it we laid down two principles which directly affected benefits to veterans—to you, and to the veterans of other wars.

"The first principle, following inevitably from the obligation of citizens to bear arms, is that the government has a responsibility for and toward those who suffered injury or contracted disease while serving in its defense.

"The second principle is that no person, because he wore a uniform, must thereafter be placed in a special class of beneficiaries over and above all other citizens. The fact of wearing a uniform does not mean that he can demand from the government a benefit which no other citizen receives. It does not mean that because a person served in the defense of his country, performed a basic obligation of citizenship, he should receive a pension from his government because of a disability incurred after his service had terminated, and not connected with that service.

"It does mean, however, that those who were injured in or as a result of their service, are entitled to receive adequate and generous compensation for their disabilities. It does mean that generous care shall be extended to the dependents of those who died in or as a result of service to their country.

"To carry out these principles, the people of this country can and will pay in taxes the sums which it is necessary to raise. To carry out these principles will not bankrupt your government nor throw its bookkeeping into the red."

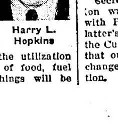
In closing the President said:

"You who wore the uniform, you who served, you who took the oath of allegiance to the American Legion, you who support the ideals of American citizenship, I have called to the colors again. As your commander in chief and your conrade, I am confident that you will respond."

After a quick visit to A Century of Progress and luncheon with President Rufus Dawes of the exposition, the President late in the afternoon went to the Bohemian cemetery to lay a wreath upon the grave of the late Mayor Anton Cermak, who was killed in Miami by an assassin's bullet intended for Mr. Roosevelt. He then returned to New York to address the national conference of Catholic Charities. Mrs. Roosevelt accompanied the President on the Chicago trip.

CHICAGO was in the possession of the American Legion and the veterans had a joyous time in their convention and all its associated doings and especially at the World's fair. The Forty and Eight, fun making organization of the Legion, held its torchlight parade the opening night, and the following day the Legion staged one of the greatest parades ever seen in this country. For many hours the "boys" marched down Michigan avenue, through Soldier field and back through Grant park to the disbanding point. In the line were about six hundred musical organizations and drill teams.

ON HIS way to Chicago President Roosevelt came to final decision as to direct federal aid for the jobless during the coming winter, assuming that the plan would be speedily worked out in co-operation with Secretary of Agriculture Wallace and George Peek, agricultural adjustment administrator. The action to be taken will practically establish the dole in the United States. The immediate object of course is to avert suffering. But the plan has the secondary purpose of the utilization of the great surpluses of food, fuel and clothing. These things will be purchased by the government with the $330,000,000 of the public works fund not yet allocated, and congress will be asked to appropriate more if necessary. The announcement by Stephen Early, the President's secretary, said in part:



Harry L. Hopkins

"The President announced he has instructed Harry L. Hopkins, federal relief administrator, to take the leadership in prompt organization of a nonprofit corporation, of which Mr. Hopkins is to become chairman, for the purpose of buying the necessities of life and distributing them among the needy unemployed. . . .

"In order to assure speed and effectiveness in the movement of huge supplies, the President has directed not only that the corporation be equipped with adequate funds, but also that it should be given wide powers in the purchasing and distribution of surplus foods and other commodities.

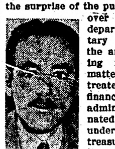
"The President believes the corporation can be organized quickly and in such manner as to become the best agent for decisive action in the emergency.

"Mr. Hopkins has canvassed with the President the relief situation in the country as a whole. The President is convinced that in many states relief allowances now made by state and municipal authorities are far from adequate and must be substantially increased as rapidly as possible.

"The President asserted that while farmers' buying power has increased to an encouraging degree, agricultural prices still remain substantially below the level needed to hasten the country on the road to economic recovery.

"The new effort worked out by Mr. Hopkins and Secretary Wallace to make maximum use of surpluses that have been burdening the commodity markets, is part of intensified plans to raise farm prices to economic levels. The agricultural administration's efforts to control production of surpluses too great to be used are to be continued. . . .

"The corporation will have powers to purchase directly from farmers, whenever desirable, in such a way as to carry out the purposes of the agricultural adjustment act."



Dean Acheson

DISCUSSIONS of the British war debt to the United States were opened in Washington and, much to the surprise of the public, were turned over to the Treasury department by Secretary of State Hull, the announcement being made that the matter was being treated as purely a financial problem. The administration designated Dean Acheson, undersecretary of the treasury, to handle its part in the affair, and he was aided by Frederick Livesey, who is an associate economic adviser of the State department. For the British government appeared Sir Frederick Leith-Ross and T. K. Bewley. The question at issue was: How much, if at all, shall the United States reduce the British war debt, funded in 1923 for $4,000,000,000?

AMERICAN intervention in Cuba was brought appreciably nearer by a bloody all-day battle that took place between the 500 recalcitrant army and navy officers who had been beleaguered in the National hotel and the troops of President Grau. The hotel was bombarded until late afternoon with rifles, machine guns and cannon and the government said 18 of the officers were killed and 17 wounded, which probably was an underestimate. The losses among the soldiers were officially stated to be 9 killed and 27 wounded. Correspondents said the total dead in the day's fighting numbered at least 44. Among the non-contestants killed was Robert Lotspeich, an American, assistant manager in Havana for Swift & Co.

When the hotel which is owned and managed by Americans, was practically wrecked by shell fire, the officers surrendered. As they emerged under a white flag, unarmed and under guard of soldiers, they were again attacked and a number of them massacred. Apartment buildings near the hotel, in which many Americans resided, were frequently hit by machine gun bullets and shells from the Cuban cruiser Patria. It was on the roof of one of these that Lotspeich was shot.

During the battle a large delegation called on Ambassador Welles and urged that he order the landing of American marines. He replied that he could not do this as so far no Americans were being killed except by accident. To pleas for intervention he answered: "Only the President of the United States can order intervention."

Secretary of State Hull in Washington was in frequent communication with President Roosevelt, during the latter's visit to Chicago, concerning the Cuban situation, and he announced that our government contemplated no change in its policy of non-intervention.

INTENT on gaining from the NRA the greatest possible advantage for organized labor, the American Federation of Labor opened its annual convention in Washington. In a preliminary statement President Green said that since the enactment of the national recovery act the federation had increased its membership by 1,600,000, the total being now approximately 4,000,000.

Nailed to the masthead of the federation, Mr. Green said, is the slogan: "Organize the unorganized in the mass production industries," with a membership of 10,000,000 as the next goal, and after that 25,000,000, "which will bring the majority of Americans genuinely and actually within the trade union family."

Among the important pronouncements of policy and recommendations for action placed before the delegates by the executive council were:

1. The 30-hour week of five days' work, six hours a day.
2. Increase of minimum wages provided in the codes.
3. Increase of wages for skilled workers, as well as unskilled.
4. Representation of labor in every stage of code making.
5. Public works must be speeded up to supply work this winter to large masses of the idle.
6. Congress, upon convening, must provide adequate relief appropriations.
7. The surplus agricultural products must be made available for distribution to the unemployed.
8. Taxation for relief must be provided by fair contributions from higher incomes and surplus profits.
9. Labor must have relief from excessively stringent federal economy measures.
10. Educational budgets must not be jeopardized.
11. Immigration restriction laws must be further strengthened.

Labor's complete acceptance of the recovery act as the instrument that will create a new industrial America on a basis of democratic control was coupled, in the council report, with frank criticism of the working out of the act in some particulars.

AGREEMENT between the United Mine Workers of America and the chieftains of the steel companies owning and operating "captive mines" in Pennsylvania was announced by the national recovery administration.

The agreement looked to the maintenance in the "captive" coal mines of the working conditions, wages and hours as prevailing under agreements between other mine operators and the United Mine Workers in the different districts where the mines are located. It means actual union recognition by the steel companies, according to Philip Murray, vice president of the United Mine Workers.

LAW enforcement officers and the public generally rejoiced in the outcome of two trials of kidnapers which struck a decisive blow at the "snatching" racket. Seven of ten persons charged with kidnaping Charles F. Urschel, oil millionaire of Oklahoma City, and holding him for $200,000 ransom were convicted. One of them was a woman. At Edwardsville five men and one woman, members of the gang that kidnaped August Luer, an aged banker, were found guilty and sentenced to prison terms ranging from life to five years' duration. Attorney General Cummings in Washington was highly pleased and encouraged by the result of these trials.

NEW York is now enjoying a three-cornered race for the mayoralty, for Joseph V. McKee decided to be an independent candidate against Mayor John Patrick O'Brien, the Democratic nominee, and Fiorello H. La Guardia, the fusion candidate. In his announcement, Mr. McKee said:

J. V. McKee

"I refused to enter the Democratic primaries because I felt that to do so would mark me as a tool of the machine, and that would prevent my doing the job that must be done to restore our city government.

"There is no real fusion in this campaign. The so-called fusion standard bearer is as objectionable to the solid element of our Republican citizenry as he is to the vast army of Democrats who are disgusted with machine politics. The present standard bearer of the alleged fusion is a poor compromise by a faction of would-be bosses."

Postmaster General Farley, who is chairman of the Democratic national committee, is presumably supporting McKee and it required a declaration of neutrality from the White House to convince the public that President Roosevelt was not actually helping him. Control of the Democratic party in New York depends on the election.

STEEL manufacturers, under the urging of President Roosevelt and Joseph B. Eastman, co-ordinator of transportation, have agreed to competitive bidding for the sale of rails to the railways, and Mr. Eastman announced that 700,000 tons of rails will be bought as soon as financial arrangements can be made. If the bids of the steel companies show that reductions in the price have been made, the money will be loaned to the railroads direct from public works funds.

Competitive bidding and bottom prices, it was hoped by Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Eastman, also would result in the purchase by the railroads of quantities of rolling stock and equipment, which deals, too, would be financed by the government.

News of North Dakota

EVENTS OF THE WEEK THROUGHOUT THE STATE TOLD IN BRIEF FORM

Williston.—Victor Tronson, 21, Hayfield, Minn., received a fatal bullet wound when he was mistaken for a prairie chicken as he lay in a haystack. His death was the first hunting season fatality in North Dakota this year.

Dickinson.—Gordon Lillibridge, 31, son of Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Lillibridge, Dickinson, died from wounds received in an encounter with bandits who sought to hold up the office of the company he worked for at Oakland, Calif.

Valley City.—Six milk cows belonging to Anton Christ, Leal farmer, died after they had been turned into a freshly threshed field, where some gopher bait had been piled and was to be spread over the field, but had been forgotten.

Devils Lake.—Because it has no debt of any kind, Emmons county was practically assured of a new courthouse to cost approximately $100,000. The courthouse also will be a memorial to Emmons county soldiers who participated in the World war.

Chaseley. — Engebret Thormodsgaard of Chaseley left for Europe, where he will study voice culture, sailing on the French liner, LaFayette, for Milan, Italy. Mr. Thormodsgaard is a graduate of the 1933 class of the Concordia college at Moorhead, Minn.

Fessenden. — Max Cooper, cattle buyer, was arrested under a warrant charging Cooper with buying stock without a state license. Cooper was taken before Judge Johnston at Fessenden and was fined $100 and costs, or 30 days in jail.

Sanish.—A trainload of cattle, valued at more than $100,000, were loaded at Sanish and shipped to South St. Paul and Chicago markets. The train included 60 cars, each car holding 22 cattle averaging about 1,400 pounds in weight.

Wahpeton.—Concealed in the washroom while C. R. Lemna, the attendant, transferred his money from his change belt and prepared to lock up for the night, a gunman robbed a Standard Oil filling station at Wahpeton of about $100 in cash.

Grand Forks.—The Great Northern railway will route its crack train, the Empire Builder, through Grand Forks, to take effect this month, and other schedule changes will be made to improve the road's passenger service here.

Fargo. — The famed North Dakota State Legion band placed second by the narrowest of margins in the annual 40 and 8 band contest at the Legion convention in Chicago. North Dakota also being first of 42 states to okay national program.

Bathgate.—Missed by his parents 10 minutes, Donald Robertson, 18-months-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Robertson, was found drowned in the Tongue river here. The child wandered away from other members of the family.

Fargo. — Examination of aviators and airplanes in North Dakota will be conducted by Lester G. Orcutt, aeronautical inspector, at Fargo and Minot this month. Dates of inspections at Hector field, Fargo, are October 20, 21, 24, and 25. At Minot, October 26.

Minot. — Negotiations have been completed by Montgomery Ward & Co., in which they secured 99-year leases on the Aaker and First International bank property. Plans are to build a modern three-story building with basement with the estimated cost to be $75,000.

Hoople.—Two days after more than a score of children and grandchildren had gathered at the family home in Hoople to commemorate the fiftieth wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Ole H. Rinde, Mr. Rinde passed away, succumbing to an illness of several years.

Grafton.—Seventeen years after he was ordained in St. John the Evangelist church in Grafton, Rev. Father William Mulloy has returned to accept the pastorate of the church in which he took his vows as a priest. He is the son of W. J. Mulloy, now of New Rockford.

Valley City.—William R. Kilpatrick, 66, educator in North Dakota many years, died in St. Paul recently. Kilpatrick had been superintendent of city schools at Mandan and Wahpeton and later Richland county superintendent of schools. At the age of 61 he completed a course in education at the University of North Dakota, winning Phi Beta Kappa honors.

LaMoure.—LaMoure will be host to the Land O' Lakes creameries of the state, including one from Montana, Wednesday, October 18. Seventeen towns will be represented. At noon the prize baby beef, purchased by the local creamery at the recent LaMoure fair, will be the roast served to the guests.

Fargo.—Enrollment to date at the North Dakota State college is 1,212 compared with 1,214 at the same time last year, according to A. H. Parrott, registrar. Registration for late students is still being conducted.

Steele.—The largest crowd to ever attend a corn show in Steele was in attendance at the third annual show coming from all sections of Kidder county and adjoining counties. Together with the corn show the Farmers' Sale and Exchange and the Kidder County 4-H Club Achievement Day also were held.

Legume Plants Get Trial in Ohio

Annual Lespedezas Favored Among Various Pasture Crops Tried.

By J. S. Cutler, Agronomist, Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station.—WNU Service.

Tests of various new types of legume plants are being made at experimental farms in many places in Ohio. Of the annual lespedezas, the common or Japanese variety is a natural selection in extreme southern Ohio, and is gradually moving northward. It promises to enrich pastures of the poorer type, even though it will not compete with Kentucky bluegrass on the better lands.

Korean lespedeza, also an annual, promises well as a cover crop for orchards and as a temporary or summer pasture crop. It grows on soils unfavorable to clovers and alfalfas.

A perennial lespedeza, a native of Asia bearing the name lespedeza serica, is being grown in an experimental way in southern Ohio on soils too poor for alfalfa or clover. So far, this legume has survived two winters.

Wood's clover, an annual legume brought to Ohio from Iowa, is not as palatable as a hay or pasture crop and can be used in Ohio only as a green manure crop. Trials so far indicate that it cannot compete with soybeans for this purpose.

Zig-zag clover, a perennial from Maine that propagates by underground rootstalks, is on trial in northern Ohio, but no definite conclusions have been drawn as to its use.

About 25 species of crotalarias are being tested. One species, Crotalaria spectabilis, is giving best results in Ohio as a green manure crop. It is widely grown on the unfertile sandy coastal plains soils in the East.

A large European variety of white clover called Ladino is proving of value in a limited way for providing poultry pasture. It requires, for successful growth, much moisture.

Kudzu, for which many exaggerated claims have been made, proved worthless as a field crop in Ohio.

Reed Canary grass appears to have, from first tests, some merit on the wet and overflow bottom pasture lands.

Humus Necessary and Brings Better Crops

Humus is decaying vegetable matter, such as stable manure or anything that will rot when turned under the ground, writes a correspondent in the Rural New Yorker. Almost all rich soils contain a good supply of humus, while most poor soils are lacking in it. Humus keeps the soil loose, preventing a hard crust from forming after rains, keeps the soil warm, so that crops will grow earlier in the spring, and takes care of the water supply. In wet weather, the humus absorbs the water like a sponge and holds it until dry weather when the plants can use it. Humus helps to make plant food available.

It is hard to make a profitable crop on land lacking in humus. Humus is usually supplied to the soil by either stable manure or turning under green manure crops. As a good example of the benefits of humus, almost every farmer, sometime or other, has removed a fence that has been standing for years, and when this field is cropped the next time you have noticed that where the fence stood the soil was darker in color and more mellow than the remainder of the field and the plants grow faster, with a darker green color, yielding more. This was caused by the humus that was added to the soil by the decaying of weeds that grew around the fence every year.

A New Apple

The New York experiment station announces that the Kendall apple, recently introduced, offers greater promise than any of the other McIntosh seedlings yet introduced. It is being distributed for testing by the New York State Fruit Testing association. Kendall is a solid dark red variety well covered over with bloom, ripens about the same time as McIntosh but keeps longer. Its season even extends beyond that of Cortland and Macoun, two earlier McIntosh seedlings.

Agricultural Jottings

Eradication methods developed by the California state department of agriculture have almost eliminated the white fly as a citrus insect pest.

A short honey crop may tempt many bee keepers to remove too much honey and leave the bees too little food for winter, and for the spring brood rearing.

Williams to Gather at the Cry of "Hey, Bill!"

It is delightful to learn that the French, with their customary flair for the graceful, are going to do something in a big way for all the Bills. Everyone named William or Wilhelm, Guillaume, Willem or plain Bill is invited to a convention of all the Williams to be held at St. Brieuc in Brittany in September, 1934.

The occasion is the 700th anniversary of St. William, who once was bishop of St. Brieuc. St. William is well known to Brittany. Unhappily the rest of the world has been largely oblivious of his merit, although it has a highly modern flavor. For St. William was a food administrator and relief director and a mighty efficient one. Back in 1225 he saved the lives of thousands who would otherwise have perished in a great famine and carried on his good work in spite of the opposition of the Duke Pierre, who really should have been glad to co-operate. Anyway St. William gets the festival after 700 years, while Pierre is just another dead duke.

St. William is only one of probably tens of thousands of Williams, Guillaumes, etc., who have served their neighbors well and brought renown to their excellent name, the merit of which is proved by its popularity, which has leaped all barriers of geography and language. With the possible exceptions of the Johns, Juans, Johans, etc., there are more Williams than any other tribe.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

"Atlantic City is exciting. We're staying at a gorgeous hotel. But the smell of the ocean makes me homesick. I wish we were back in Provincetown. I guess a gypsy girl can't turn into a Social Butterfly. Uncle Stephen is lovely to me but, somehow, I'm lonely all the time. I love you very much.

"BABBIE."

"Thornhedge,
"March 10th.

"Bruce, Darling,

"Don't write me letters like that. They make me so unhappy. I don't love the children more than I love you. But I can't desert Uncle Stephen now. It's my fault we are here. I can't just run away and leave the children on his hands. You see, he depends on me so. Sometimes, when it isn't all so new and strange to him, I'll tell him about us. But it wouldn't be grateful now. Please try to understand.

"Hasn't the silver flute learned any new songs? You haven't sent me one for so long. It doesn't really matter. I like the old one best. I hear it every night before I go to sleep . . . 'I love you, little gypsy girl with the roses in your hair. . . .'

"Oh, I do love you, Bruce! But it's all so confusing. Please try to understand.

"Your Babbie."

"Thornhedge,
"March 12th.

"No, Bruce. I can't, I can't."

CHAPTER XIII

Spring was dancing on toward summer. There were peonies in the garden and the rose bushes were starred with tight little pink-tipped buds. Bees hummed in the honeysuckle and in the blue wisteria blossoms.

The children lived out of doors. Alfred leveled and rolled the croquet ground bordered with hedges of box. New willow chairs, for lazy reclining, appeared on the terrace behind the house. The old place took on an atmosphere of gayety and youth.

Stephen felt as though he had cast off a number of dreary years. He had no regrets about keeping the children. Life moved to a quickened rhythm. It seemed to him that he must have been only half alive before the children came. He had thought that he dreaded changes. He found them, on the contrary, stimulating and pleasant.

There was but one thing to mar his satisfaction. He felt, as May tripped past in a succession of balmy days, that Barbara was unhappy. She was more quiet than she had been in the winter. She looked at him so often with a wistful expression in her eyes.

"Aren't you happy, dear?" he asked as they sat on the terrace one evening after dinner. "I've wondered." He moved his chair closer to hers. "You're so quiet, Babbie. Is something troubling you?"

"No," she said slowly. Then she smiled, the April smile that was close to tears, and slipped her hand into his. "No, Uncle Stephen," she said.

"I want you to be happy." The touch of her hand was disturbing. "Is there anything I can do?"

"You've done so much." She looked up at him, her eyes wide and dark. "I'll always be grateful. Always, as long as I live."

"I don't want you to be grateful," Stephen said gently. "I want you to be happy."

"I am happy," she said.

But she wasn't happy. There was always a lump in her throat and she didn't sleep very well. She hadn't heard from Bruce for nearly three weeks, except a note to tell her that he couldn't get away for a week-end at "Thornhedge." Bruce didn't believe that she loved him. He thought she preferred to stay with Uncle Stephen.

But she couldn't tell Uncle Stephen. It didn't seem grateful or polite.

She talked brightly enough after that. They laughed and were very gay. But during the days that followed, Stephen watched her closely. Sometimes when she rode with him, her cheeks flushed under the jaunty three-cornered hat, her eyes sparkling with pleasure, he thought that he was mistaken. But there were other times when he knew that she was worried about something. He found her one afternoon by the lily pond weeping over a letter.

"It's from Martha," she explained. "Martha says that a storm last winter broke one of our willow branches. I love our willow trees." . . . Bruce had given her the ring with the small gold heart under the willows—

"Oh, Bruce! It just exactly fits!"

"It should. It was made for you. The heart is to match your face."

And the sound of the wind in the willows was a song that was happy and sad. . . .

She was homesick, perhaps, Stephen thought. The gray-shingled house she mentioned so often was very dear to her.

"Would you like to go back?" he asked, wanting to make her happy.

"All of us?"

"We can drive up this summer."

She shook her head.

"Thank you, Uncle Stephen." The lashes that curved against her cheeks were stuck into points by tears. "I don't think I want to—just yet."

He took her to a concert one evening. She seemed to enjoy it at first, but suddenly, when the orchestration became a low accompaniment for the clear silver notes of a flute, he heard through the liquid music, a small heart-broken sob.

"Babbie!" he whispered, startled. "Babbie, what is it?"

"Let's go." She was struggling against the sobs that distorted her face. "Please, Uncle Stephen, let's go."

"What was it, Babbie?" he asked, when they had left the hall and were driving home in the car. "What made you so unhappy?"

"It was the flute, Uncle Stephen," she said in a small weary voice. "I—I couldn't bear it."

The sobs decreased in violence. She drew a long quivering breath.

"I'm sorry I made a scene," she said, slipping her hand into his. "Was it dreadful, Uncle Stephen?"

"Don't think about that." He held her in his arms, felt her hair, soft and silky and faintly scented, brushing across his cheek. He thought that she might explain. She didn't.

Perplexed and troubled, Stephen confided in Natalie.

"Babbie isn't happy," he said.

"I've noticed that." Natalie came often to see the children. She had noticed that Barbara seemed unhappy. "Why?" she asked.

"I wish I knew."

Natalie glanced up, touched by the troubled tone in his voice. Stephen was gazing down across the lawn to where Barbara sat on the grass leaning against the trunk of a tree. A book lay open in her lap. But, from the terrace, she did not appear to be reading. There was something wistful in her position. There was a wistful expression in Stephen's eyes.

"I want her to be happy," he said. "What can I do?"

"She needs to be more with young people," Natalie ventured to suggest. "Boys and girls her own age. You're selfish, Stephen. You can't guard her like a watch dog. After all, she's eighteen."

"Perhaps I have been selfish," Stephen agreed. "Well, what do you suggest?"

"Give a party for her. A dancing party outdoors."

"Will you manage it for me?"

"Gladly." Natalie smiled at Stephen's worried expression. "There was an old woman—" she teased.

"I pity her," Stephen said, "if all of her children were girls!"

* * * * * * *

There was a moon for Barbara's party, a round June moon that netted the lawns with black and silver shadows. The terrace was floored for dancing. There was an orchestra and a refreshment tent. There were voices and laughter and hummed snatches of popular songs. There was Barbara in a dancing frock all filmy floating white tulle.

It was going very well, Stephen thought, watching the dancing from an unobtrusive position. Barbara seemed to be having a happy time. How lovely she was in that filmy white frock. Was it necessary for the young cub in the uniform to hold her so closely? This was a dancing party and not a football game.

"Will you dance with me?" Stephen asked through the applause that clamored for an encore.

She turned from the uniform. She slipped into his arms all misty with tulle and glowing cheeks and darkly shining eyes.

"I didn't know you could dance," she said, her hand against his shoulder.

"I manage to get around." Stephen guided her smoothly among the circling dancers. "But I don't know this modern technique," he confessed. "In my day dancing was dancing."

"You're not that old, Uncle Stephen," she said with a gay little laugh.

How old did she think he was? He felt ancient compared with these flippant youngsters who tried so desperately hard to act like men of the world.

"Happy?" he asked.

"It's a lovely party."

"Happy?" he asked again.

She lifted her face and he saw that there was pain beneath the shining in her eyes. Something troubled her, something that a party could not banish. Babbie. His arm tightened about her. Lovely child. . . .

"Pardon me, sir." That was a youth, snatching her away.

"It's called 'cutting in,'" Barbara explained, smiling over the boy's shoulder. "You can do it, too."

Stephen did not take advantage of the privilege. The boy's respectful "Sir" had put him in his place. She belonged with the youngsters tonight, with the youthful men of the world who snatched her from each other and snatched her back again. Stephen mingled with other guests and when he returned Barbara had disappeared. He did not see the small graceful figure in filmy white among the dancers on the terrace. He walked rapidly down the terrace, under the lanterns, across the lawn netted with black and silver shadows.

He found her beside the lily pond at the far end of the garden.

Scriptural Truth Now Spread to All Lands

A new edition of a work, valuable to the scientific study of speech, as well as to religion, is about to be issued at London, observes the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. It contains some passages from the Scriptures as translated into no less than 665 different languages. It is said there is no tongue and no important dialect in which a version of at least some part of the Scriptures is unknown. The total copies of the Bible printed in all these 665 languages are now placed at 440,000,000, the number of languages and of copies increasing, of course, almost yearly. Samples of the 60 different alphabets in which these 665 versions are printed are given in the work and range from Roman to syllabary script like the Cherokee to the hieroglyphics of Chinese and similar tongues, and even to writing forms now obsolete.

It is, of course, the British Bible society which has compiled and published this interesting book. An index of the amazing and profitable activity of this tireless society is afforded in the statement that when it was organized in 1804, the Bible was available in only 72 languages. With unexpected developments now and then, surprise is caused by evidences of the slow but sure influence which the western world has exerted on the static civilizations of the East. Surprise is lessened by a knowledge of what this society and other organizations have done during the last 128 years.

A Quicker Way To Ease Headaches

THAT BAYER ASPIRIN YOU SUGGESTED IS SIMPLY WONDERFUL! MY HEADACHE WAS ENTIRELY GONE IN A FEW MINUTES—
I KNEW IT WOULD BE... BAYER ASPIRIN WORKS SO FAST!

A Discovery that's Bringing Fast Relief to Millions

Now comes amazingly quick relief from headaches, rheumatism, neuritis, neuralgia . . . the fastest safe relief, it is said, yet discovered.

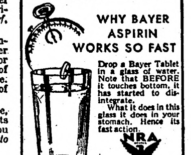
Those results are due to a scientific discovery by which a Bayer Aspirin Tablet begins to dissolve, or disintegrate, in the amazing space of two seconds after touching moisture. And hence to start "taking hold" of pain a few minutes after taking.

The illustration of the glass, here, tells the story. A Bayer Tablet starts to disintegrate almost instantly you swallow it. And thus is ready to go to work almost instantly.

When you buy, though, see that you get the Genuine BAYER Aspirin. For Bayer Aspirin's quick relief always say "BAYER Aspirin."

WHY BAYER ASPIRIN WORKS SO FAST



Drop a Bayer Tablet in a glass of water. Note that BEFORE it touches bottom, it has started to disintegrate.

What it does in this glass it does in your stomach. Hence its fast action.

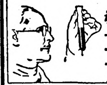
Read the "Ads" but don't ignore medical opinion



if you want to
—keep bowels regular and comfortable
—make constipated spells rare as colds
—avoid danger of bowel strain

A doctor will tell you that the careless choice of laxatives is a common cause of chronic constipation.

Any hospital offers evidence of the harm done by harsh laxatives that drain the system, weaken the bowel muscles, and even affect the liver and kidneys.

Fortunately, the public is fast returning to laxatives in liquid form.

Can Constipation be Corrected?

"Yes!" say medical men. "Yes!" say thousands who have followed this sensible medical advice: 1. Select a good liquid laxative. 2. Take the dose that you find suited to your system. 3. Gradually reduce the dose until bowels are moving regularly without assistance.

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin has the average person's bowels as regular as clockwork in a few weeks' time. Why not try it? Some pill or tablet may be more convenient to carry. But there is no "convenience" in any cathartic that's taken so frequently, you must carry it wherever you go!

What is the "Right" Laxative?

In buying any laxative, read the label. Not the claims, but the contents. If it contains one doubtful drug, don't take it. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is a prescriptional preparation in which there are no mineral drugs. By using it, you avoid danger of strain. You can keep the bowels regular, and comfortable. You can make those constipated spells as rare as colds.

How many dimes and quarters are spent on "popular" laxatives! How quickly they count up, as you use more and more of these habit-forming helps! A bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin would save you money—and bring you real relief.

Why Doctors give a liquid laxative

The habitual use of irritating salts, or powerful drugs in the highly concentrated form of pills and tablets is risky.

The properly prepared liquid laxative will bring a perfect movement without discomfort or injury. You need not take a "double dose" a day or two later.

The public can always get Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin at any drugstore.

A Lobster Lyric

In a recent editorial in the New York Herald-Tribune, the writer grew lyrical over protecting the lobsters of Maine.

"What the racy shad is to the Delaware," he wrote, "and the rich roe-sturgeon to the Caspian, the best lobsters in the world are to the icy waters fished by 12,000 hardy lobstermen of the Pine Tree State . . . The specific terms of the protective legislation needed may safely be left to Maine authorities, but the general movement is of interest throughout the country wherever good eating is practiced. Maine produces three-fifths of the lobster catch of all the north Atlantic states, and its crustaceans are rated by table amateurs as second to none in all the waters of the world."

With such encouragement as this it seems imperative to give a recipe for the consumption of these delectable shell-fish. So here is one for a lobster chowder which will be greeted with cheers.

A Lobster Recipe

Remove tendons from the contents of a 6-ounce can of lobster, and shred. Add one cup of potatoes, diced small, one and one-half cups boiling water and one-half teaspoon salt, and boil until the potatoes are tender. Scald one quart milk with one sliced onion and two tablespoons butter, and season to taste with salt and pepper. Break up six Boston crackers and lay on top of the lobster and potatoes in a soup tureen. Strain the onion out of the milk and pour over. Serves four to five.*

Wheat Production and Acreage Statement of Members of the Wheat Production Control Association of Marshall County, State of Minnesota . . . .

The following is a statement of the production and planted acreages of wheat in the years 1930, 1931 and 1932 and planted acreage for 1933 of producers of Marshall County who have submitted applications for farm allotments. This publication is made in compliance with the regulations of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration. It is made so that a check may be made on all statement claims, and so that reports may be made to the county Wheat Production Control Association on any inaccuracies which may appear in the statements.

The allotment for this county has been definitely calculated from official records of the United States Department of Agriculture, and is 818,260 bushels. This is the total allotment for the county. Therefore, if any farmer receives a greater allotment than his past production warrants, he is thus depriving other farmers in this county of their just share.

Total production figures of those who apply for contracts, together with those who do not, must be consistent with the official county production as shown by the records of the United States Department of Agriculture. If the county totals are greater than the official totals, it will be necessary to make a downward adjustment.

Any person may make a confidential report if he finds any statement here which he believes to be inaccurate. Such reports should be made to the community or county Allotment Committee, either in writing or verbally. The reports will be strictly confidential. A farmer whose statements are said to be inaccurate will need to prove his production figures.

Farmers have been asked to furnish evidence of production and evidence of sale, such as thresherman's certificates, elevator certificates, or other records and receipts. Satisfactory evidence will be required of any farmer whose statement is questioned.

The following statements have been condensed to save space. "A" represents acres planted and "bu." represents bushels harvested. The "3-year average" represents the 3-year average acreage and production of 1930-1932. Farmers should refer any questions regarding this publication to the Community Committee or the County Allotment Committee.

F. A. GREEN,
Chairman, County Allotment Committee.
CARL OLSON,
CARL JOHNSON.

Old "Chained Libraries" Preserved in England

Ever since there have been books there have been book thieves. And in medieval times, when books were rare and valuable, libraries took no chances with would-be "borrowers," but chained their volumes and manuscripts securely to their shelves.

Several of these "chained libraries" still exist in England, but among them the one at Hereford cathedral is unique in several ways.

It is definitely one of the oldest—it is still a moot point whether it dates from 1394 or 1590—and with its nearly 1,500 tethered volumes is by far the largest of the chained libraries.

One of the largest of the other chained libraries in England is, as it happens, also at Hereford, in the Church of All Saints there. It has 813 chained books. But in Hereford cathedral upward of 450 books never had been unchained, and more than 1,000 chains which had been taken off books in the last century were suspended from the ceiling in rows. Moreover, by a piece of great good fortune, the brass clips by which the chains had been fastened to the books had been thrown into an old box and so preserved. Consequently, it has been possible to rechain all the books in the library almost precisely as they were originally.—New York Times.

Old Methods Employed by Viking Fishermen

Fishing is now one of the most highly organized industries in the world. But although everything has been "speeded up" and mass production methods are used for catching fish, progress has not killed the old long-line fishermen of the Scandinavian countries. These Vikings, direct descendants of the reputed discoverers of America, go to sea in vessels about the size of a trawler. On the fore deck there is a small engine, worked by steam and about the size of a typewriter. This is a set of spools for winding up the line. The twine they use is no thicker than the string shop assistants use for tying up parcels, but it is strong and there are miles of it on the spools. At intervals all along the line there are long strings branching off, and at the end of each branch a hook, baited with a bit of fish. The number of hooks on one line may be anything from a thousand to five thousand. The bait used are generally mussels, whelks, squid and herrings.

Modernism's Beginnings

We call those things modern which are widely characteristic of our contemporary western type of civilization. The things which make modern times modern are in general those which distinguish our day from medieval Europe. Feudal government gave way to national states, the unity of medieval Christianity was broken by the Protestant reformation. Europe began to expand overseas, a new interest developed in science, serfdom disappeared, a new world commerce developed, the Renaissance put new vigor in art and literature. Printing was invented. Since these movements took place in the latter Fifteenth and in the Sixteenth centuries, it is usual to think of these years as marking the transition to the modern period so far [illegible] western Europe is concerned.—[illegible] Tribune.

Sublimity

If you can make the world stare and look on, there you have vanity or compassion to support you; but to bury all your wretchedness in your own mind, to resolve that you will have no man's pity, while you have one effort left to procure his respect, to harbor no mean thought in the midst of abject poverty; but at the very time you are surrounded by circumstances of humility and depression, to found a spirit of modest independence upon the consciousness of having always acted well—this is a sublime act which, though it is found in the shade and retirement of life, ought to be held up to the praises of men, and to be looked upon as a noble model for imitation.—Sydney Smith.

Sensitive Organs

Our sense organs are responsive to almost incredibly minute stimulations. The sensory surface of the nose is affected by vanillin, one part by weight in 10,000,000 parts of air, and by mercaptan 1/23,000,000 of a milligram in a litre of air. And as for sight, there is evidence that the eye is sensitive to 5/1,000,000,000,000 erg, an amount of energy which is 1/3,000 of that required to affect the most rapid photographic plate.—The Wisdom of the Body, by Walter B. Cannon.

Fish "at Home" on Land

Fishes known as mud-skippers that are found along the coasts of the Indian and Pacific oceans are nearly as much at home on land as in the water. When they are stranded on the sands by receding tides they get over the ground in remarkable fashion. By means of their highly developed pectoral fins they jump about and climb up on rocks and other elevated objects in search of insects. These they catch on the wing by jumping at them as they pass by.

No Positive Proof of Mankind's Original Home

The mere fact that primitive types of mankind have been found as far apart as Java, England and China means that these three divergent descendants of some common ancestor had already wandered to the extreme limits, east and west, of the great continental land mass after they had become differentiated in the process of their evolution. Hence the fact of their world-wide wanderings indicates that none of these three places necessarily has any relationship at all to the place of the original home of mankind.

Ten years ago there was found in Rhodesia the fossilized skull of a primitive type of man which may have survived in this part of the world until comparatively recent times; but whether the actual example of Rhodesian man whose remains were found in the Broken Hill mine is ancient or modern, he certainly represents an extremely primitive type of the human family, possibly near akin to the Heidelberg man whose jaw was found in Germany in 1907. This bizarre member of the human family is definitely distinct from all other known types of extinct man.—New York Times.

What, Wedding Without Single Comic Feature!

The movie comedy director was sitting in the front row at his friend's wedding. He was in a bad humor, for not a single usher was inebriated, and the organist did not have an Adam's apple that would have been funny in a close-up. The bride entered sedately, and the groom and best man made their way without mishap. The director began to writhe. The bride wore a peach of a long veil, but no one stepped on it. One laugh after another spoiled! Even the minister failed, and held the prayer book right side up.

It was getting unbearable. And when the best man reached for the ring and found it in the first pocket, without fumbling, the director could stand it no longer. Quite forgetting himself, he leaped up and in a voice of rage shouted: "Do that over! Where do you think you are—in a church?"—Kansas City Star.

Petrarch in Literature

Petrarch lived in the Fourteenth century in the early days of the Italian Renaissance, and is remembered for the sonnets which he wrote in Italian and for his influence in reviving interest in classical antiquity. To the men of the Middle ages this life seemed important chiefly as a preliminary period of trial before the day of judgment, and man's chief concern here was supposedly seeking salvation. Petrarch shared the intellectual curiosity and the delight in being alive that was common in the writers of Greece and Rome. Interest in this present life came to be a prominent characteristic of the Renaissance and of the generations since. It is because of his departure from the medieval ideals that Petrarch is now thought of as modern.

Wonderful Private Library

The Morgan library stands at the rear of the residence of J. P. Morgan in New York city. It is of white marble, of classic design and has noteworthy bronze doors of Sixteenth century Italian workmanship. The library is not open to the public, but admission may sometimes be obtained by means of a letter to the librarian. There are many valuable collections in the library, notably the Bibles, which include the Gutenberg Bible and a Syrian Bible of the year 750. Other important works are the Ashburnham Gospels, the Golden Gospels, the Naples Offices, and a prayer book of Charles VIII. There is also a unique collection of English manuscripts.

Blood Pressures

Every person has two blood pressures, a high and a low. When the doctor informs the patient concerning his blood pressure, he gives him the figure for the higher pressure, called the systolic. In a normal young man, the systolic pressure would be between 110 and 120 mm. of mercury. A normal person of twenty years should have a systolic pressure of approximately 120. For each increase of one year, the pressure goes up half a millimeter. For example, a person forty years old should have a pressure of 130 mm. Since each case of high blood pressure demands individual diagnosis, only a capable physician can treat it.—Hygeia Magazine.

Protection in Chairs

Early medieval chairs were really small chests with removable backs and armpieces, writes Estelle H. Ries in "Mother-Wit." Later these became permanent parts and were usually very high at the back and deep at the sides. This was not for ornamental purposes, but for protection against drafts. Such a form was essential to comfort in medieval dwellings in northerly climates, whether cottages or castles, for their crude structure and ill-fitting doors and window casings did not keep out the gusts of wind that blew through every crevice.

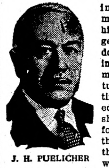
WHAT BANKING WENT THROUGH

By JOHN H. PUELICHER
American Bankers Association



J. H. PUELICHER

BANKING in its long career has been compelled to withstand many serious shocks, but it ran into the most perplexing entanglement of its whole history since the general breakdown of values in 1929. The commercial structure of the entire world seemed to have been shaken from its foundations and the marvel is that the banker, with everything breaking down all around him, was able to come through as he has.

General business failures, agricultural stagnation, income losses, capital losses, inabilities to meet debts and therefore inabilities of bankers to pay back depositors when loans were not paid, were the reasons, in most instances, for the bank failures.

No profession, no department of life is without its weaker elements, but had proper consideration been given to the relatively few instances in banking, had exaggerated and startling headlines been kept in true proportion, had banking not been used as a target for political self-seeking and with vote-seeking motives, had unfounded rumors not been spread the people's confidence might have been retained and far less would have been their losses.

There were factors in our banking experience which every earnest banker deplores — factors which many had worked years to eliminate, which it was fearfully recognized would aggravate any difficult days which might arise. One of the worst of these was due to political regulation which chartered many banks that should never have been.

That there have been incompetence and dishonesty in banking is admitted. That the instances that did occur were used grossly to increase fear in the public mind, we affirm. We shall continue to strive for higher attainments in our profession and strive for laws that require competence and ability in management. That we cannot legislate honesty and unselfishness into either a banker or a borrower must be conceded, but dishonesty, wherever found, should be punished. It is as true in banking as elsewhere that no matter how good the law, dishonest and incompetent men can make it ineffective. Good laws are essential. We must strive for ever better ones, but their enforcement will come only as the public recognizes that it is a matter not of laws or codes alone but of the men who administer them.

Our people must be brought to realize that the welfare of our country depends upon its banking system, that the strength of the banking system depends upon the public's faith and understanding, that the majority of banks, because of faithful service rendered, even through the whole of this general breakdown, had the right to expect the people's trust and confidence.

In every great catastrophe, no matter what its nature, no matter what its cause, someone must be crucified. The banker was this time selected. In the late 90's, political agitation started a tirade against the railroads. Some railroads may have done reprehensible things, but the agitation became so general and so violent as almost to destroy one of the fundamental factors in the progress of a country. Today the same thing has been done to the banker In spite of all that has happened, the fact remains that even most of the banks which failed are paying out infinitely better than investments in almost anything else.

BANKERS PREPARE FARM FINANCE BOOK

Tells Bankers and Farmers What to Consider in Making Sound Loans

A book on "Making Farm Investments Safe" has been prepared by the Agricultural Commission of the American Bankers Association, summarizing material published by it during the past ten years. It presents a compendium of scientific facts, practice and experience in farming, with timely and helpful suggestions to serve as a reference and guide in the daily routine of banking and farming. From it practical workers in these fields can obtain an idea as to what extent and in what manner farm loans should be limited by soil erosion, weeds, plant diseases, rodents and fire hazards.

The book also indicates how much is added to the security of a farm loan by the farmer who keeps accounts and practices good business methods, as well as the extent to which loans are safeguarded by crop rotation, production of legumes, judicious use of commerical fertilizers, the use of quality seed and the providing of home grown feeds.

Another section sets forth the precautions that should be exercised by both the banker and farmer when negotiating loans to increase or improve dairy production, or beef, sheep, swine or poultry production, as well as what factors should be considered in the economic marketing of products and the way efficiency in production affects efficiency in marketing. Many other everyday details of farm life that have a practical financial significance are treated in the book.

Banks Repay R. F. C. Loans

Among the loans of $2,819,000,000 made by the Federal Government through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the highest percentage of repayments, official reports show, has been made by the banks, indicating the return of stability as the chief unsettling element of public fear has been lifted from them.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has authorized cash advances, fully secured by sound collateral, to 6,278 banks since it began operations in February, 1932, and made actual disbursements to them in the amount of $1,221,878,000. Of this amount, however, $545,073,000, or over 44 per cent, has been repaid by the banks. All other classes of borrowers combined have repaid about 16 per cent of their loans.

JESSE H. JONES, chairman of the RFC, has told the bankers how the government through his corporation, plans to gain complete control of the national banks. This will be obtained by RFC ownership of the preferred stock of the banks, and the scheme envisages RFC agents directing bank policies, electing directors, hiring and firing officers, directors, and employees, setting their salaries, limiting their real estate investments and in general directing the operations of banks.

DESCRIBES FARM ADJUSTMENT PLAN

Agricultural College President Says Federal Program Seeks to Adjust Output with Reduced Exports

The Federal farm adjustment program is partly guided by the belief that export of agricultural commodities will not soon recover its volume of five or ten years ago, in the opinion of F. D. Farrell, President Kansas Agricultural College, writing in the August issue of the American Bankers Association Journal.

"Nobody knows whether the farm adjustment program will succeed," writes Mr. Farrell. "Its sponsors describe it frankly as an experiment. It seeks to socialize agriculture at least to the extent that farmers, in what is believed to be the public interest, will restrain their production activities and that processors, distributors and consumers will contribute something toward paying farmers for exercising this restraint. The adjustment programs definitely are based on the fact that prices are determined primarily by supply and demand. They also are based on the assumption that the export business in agricultural commodities will not soon return to its volume of five or ten years ago.

Dependence on Public Support

"The plan offers wheat price insurance for 1933, 1934 and 1935, for the domestically consumed portion of the wheat crop. The insured price is to be sufficiently high to give the domestically consumed portion of the wheat crop pre-war purchasing power. If the plan is as effective as its sponsors hope it will be, the reduction in supply may influence wheat prices so that the entire wheat crop will have pre-war purchasing power.

"If the adjustment program succeeds, its launching probably will mark the end of an era of extreme individualism in agriculture in the United States," says Mr. Farrell.

"Recent fundamental changes led Secretary Wallace to say, 'What we really have to do is to change the whole psychology of the people of the United States.' This is a large order. It involves the whole program of farm adjustment as well as the larger national economic program, of which farm adjustment is a part. If the people decline to participate in the program to the extent necessary to give the experiment a fair trial, we shall never know whether farm adjustment as now proposed would have succeeded or not if it had been given a fair trial."

Bankers Aiding Agriculture

State associations of bankers in many agricultural states are giving time and financial support to encourage practices among their farmers that will bring about better farm results.

The major activities reported from one state to the Agricultural Commission of the American Bankers Association which is nationally active in promoting this line of cooperation are as follows:

Drought relief work: Local banks have played a vital part in this work, being represented on the county committees for passing on all seed loans. These committees met practically every day during the spring to pass on the loans in order to get as quick action as possible. A total of 914 applications were received and handled by one committee, 833 being granted.

HORTICULTURAL GIFTS ARE NEW AND PLEASING

"Give horticultural gifts this year; they give immediate pleasure and often increase in value," suggests Louis Sando, floriculturist, University Farm, St. Paul.

"A number of such gifts are also quite new," says Mr. Sando. "One is a cunning little box containing lily-of-the-valley pips. For brilliancy, nothing surpasses poinsettias; furthermore, ferns or other plants are always planted at the base of the poinsettias, so that when the larger plant is cut down, there still remains a pot or pan of plants which remain good through the winter.

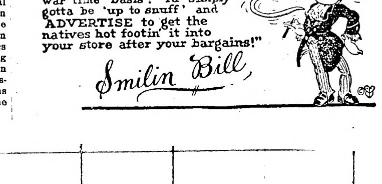
"Many other plants are valuable as Christmas gifts, as bowls of bulbs, some of them in full flower, such as the paper-white narcissus. One of the loveliest gifts would be a bowl or pan of the sweetly-scented Roman hyacinth. A miniature cactus garden forms an interesting and lasting gift. Cut flowers are always welcome. Friends confined in hospitals always welcome flowers. The containers used are much more atractive than formerly. Many of the vases last to be taken home with the patient, long reminding him of the giver.

"Perhaps one of the most interesting and 'Christmasy' gifts is a centerpiece for the dinner table. It is usually composed of evergreens, some holly with berries, and two or three candles in any color to conform to the table appointments.

"Plants and flowers are cheaper; the old-time slogan, 'a gift for every purse,' has never before had such an application to living things. A wide selection of flowers, blooming plants small baskets filled with flowers, vases of all kinds, bowls, wreaths of evergreens, sprays of holly, and mistletoe with its mystic influence, are available in most towns."

'Wrong Pew' Hiccoughs Drunk In Jury Panel

Spring Valley—This citizen came to the right church but got into the wrong pew! Noticing an intoxicated man on the jury panel at Mower district court last week, Judge Peterson ordered the bailiff to remove him from the court. The juror went to his home in the country to sober up, and returning the next day was dismissed from jury service without pay.



"Lissen, 1860 methods don't go nowadays! The world has spun around quite a few times since then! Women don't wear bustles any more! Nor do the men sport side-burners or chin whiskers! So why do business on a 'civil war time' basis? Ya' simply gotta be 'up to snuff' and ADVERTISE to get the natives hot footin' it into your store after your bargains!"

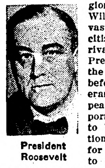
President Roosevelt Addresses American Legion Convention in Chicago—Direct Federal Aid for the Needy is Planned.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT made a hurried trip to Chicago and delivered a stirring speech at the opening session of the American Legion convention. Wildly cheered by vast throngs of citizens on his arrival in the city the President sped to the Stadium and before 30,000 veterans made his appeal for full support of his efforts to bring about national recovery, and for national unity to ensure national safety and credit. Mr. Roosevelt said in part:



President Roosevelt

"Industry cannot be restored, people cannot be put back to work, banks cannot be kept open, human suffering cannot be cared for, if the government itself is bankrupt. We realize now that the great human values, not for you alone, but for all American citizens, rest upon the unimpaired credit of the United States.

"It was because of this that we undertook to take the national treasury out of the red and put it into the black. And in the doing of it we laid down two principles which directly affected benefits to veterans—to you, and to the veterans of other wars.

"The first principle, following inevitably from the obligation of citizens to bear arms, is that the government has a responsibility for and toward those who suffered injury or contracted disease while serving in its defense.

"The second principle is that no person, because he wore a uniform, must thereafter be placed in a special class of beneficiaries over and above all other citizens. The fact of wearing a uniform does not mean that he can demand from the government a benefit which no other citizen receives. It does not mean that because a person served in the defense of his country, performed a basic obligation of citizenship, he should receive a pension from his government because of a disability incurred after his service had terminated, and not connected with that service.

"It does mean, however, that those who were injured in or as a result of their service, are entitled to receive adequate and generous compensation for their disabilities. It does mean that generous care shall be extended to the dependents of those who died in or as a result of service to their country.

"To carry out these principles, the people of this country can and will pay in taxes the sums which it is necessary to raise. To carry out these principles will not bankrupt your government nor throw its bookkeeping into the red."

ON HIS way to Chicago President Roosevelt came to final decision as to direct federal aid for the jobless during the coming winter, assuming that the plan would be speedily worked out in co-operation with Secretary of Agriculture Wallace and George Peek, agricultural adjustment administrator. The action to be taken will practically establish the dole in the United States. The immediate object of course is to avert suffering. But the plan has the secondary purpose of the utilization of the great surpluses of food, fuel and clothing. These things will be purchased by the government with the fund not yet allocated, and congress will be asked to appropriate more if necessary. The announcement by Stephen Early, the President's secretary, said in part:

Harry L. Hopkins

"The President announced he has instructed Harry L. Hopkins, federal relief administrator, to take the leadership in prompt organization of a non-profit corporation, of which Mr. Hopkins is to become chairman, for the purpose of buying the necessities of life and distributing them among the needy unemployed. . . .

"In order to assure speed and effectiveness in the movement of huge supplies, the President has directed not only that the corporation be equipped with adequate funds, but also that it should be given wide powers in the purchasing and distribution of surplus foods and other commodities.

"The President believes the corporation can be organized quickly and in such manner as to become the best agent for decisive action in the emergency.

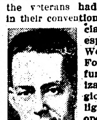
"Mr. Hopkins has canvassed with the President the relief situation in the country as a whole. The President is convinced that in many states relief allowances now made by state and municipal authorities are far from adequate and must be substantially increased as rapidly as possible.

"The President asserted that while farmers' buying power has increased to an encouraging degree, agricultural prices still remain substantially below the level needed to hasten the country on the road to economic recovery.

"The new effort worked out by Mr. Hopkins and Secretary Wallace to make maximum use of surpluses that have been burdening the commodity markets, is part of intensified plans to raise farm prices to economic levels. The agricultural administration's efforts to control production of surpluses too great to be used are to be continued. . . .

"The corporation will have powers to purchase directly from farmers, whenever desirable, in such a way as to carry out the purposes of the agricultural adjustment act."

CHICAGO was in the possession of the American Legion and the veterans had a joyous time in their convention and all its associated doings and especially at the World's Fair. The Forty and Eight, fun-making organization of the Legion, held its torchlight parade the opening night, and the following day the Legion staged one of the greatest parades ever seen in this country. For many hours the "boys" marched down Michigan avenue, through Soldier field and back through Grant park to the disbanding point. In the line were about six hundred musical organizations and drill teams.



Edward A. Hayes

In its serious sessions the Legion convention elected Edward A. Hayes of Decatur, Ill., national commander, and adopted various resolutions that supported the policies of the Roosevelt administration. Mr. Hayes, a past commander of the Illinois department, had a great deal to do with the formation of the "four-front" program designed to conciliate differences between the Legion and the national administration concerning expenditures for veterans' relief.

ENGELBERT DOLLFUSS, chancellor of Austria, barely escaped death at the hands of an assassin in Vienna. One Rudolf Dertil, a recent arrival from Styria, fired twice at the little statesman, one bullet hitting him in the arm and the other glancing from a coat button. Naturally the authorities immediately declared this was part of a Nazi plot, but they were unable to show that Dertil was a Nazi. Anyhow, the attempt on his life strengthened the chancellor's position and made him a hero in the eyes of the public.

Chancellor Dollfuss

Dollfuss plans the establishment of a state that is a compromise between Fascism and democracy, and this does not suit many of his friends, notably Prince Starhemberg, leader of the heimwehr. The prince wants Italian Fascism for Austria, but he was forced to postpone action until the chancellor should recover from his wound.

GRIFFITH park forest preserve at Los Angeles was the scene of a terrible holocaust in which at least 27 men met death—and the victims may have numbered fifty or more. The men, relief roll workers, had been ordered to put out a small brush fire and in their ignorance of proper methods started a back fire that trapped many of them in a ravine. At least that was one explanation. Another theory was that the fatal conflagration was started by a carelessly thrown cigarette. The flames swept through the woods, dried out by a long spell of hot weather, and the panic-stricken men lost all sense of direction in the dense smoke. Two hundred or more were taken to hospitals badly burned or suffering from suffocation.

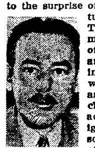
INTENT on gaining from the NRA the greatest possible advantage for organized labor, the American Federation of Labor opened its annual convention in Washington. In a preliminary statement President Green said that the enactment of the national recovery act the federation had increased its membership by 1,600,000, the total being now approximately 4,000,000.

Nailed to the masthead of the federation, Mr. Green said, is the slogan: "Organize the unorganized in the mass production industries," with a membership of 10,000,000 as the next goal, and after that 25,000,000, "which will bring the majority of Americans genuinely and actually within the trade union family."

Among the important pronouncements of policy and recommendations for action placed before the delegates by the executive council were:

1. The 30-hour week of five days' work, six hours a day.
2. Increase of minimum wages provided in the codes.
3. Increase of wages for skilled workers, as well as unskilled.
4. Representation of labor in every stage of code making.
5. Public works must be speeded up to supply work this winter to large masses of idle.
6. Congress, upon convening, must provide adequate relief appropriations.
7. The surplus agricultural products must be made available for distribution to the unemployed.
8. Taxation for relief must be provided by fair contributions from higher incomes and surplus profits.
9. Labor must have relief from excessively stringent federal economy measures.

DISCUSSIONS of the British war debt to the United States were opened in Washington and, much to the surprise of the public, were turned over to the Treasury department by Secretary of State Hull, the announcement being that the matter was being treated as purely a financial problem. The administration designated Dean Acheson, undersecretary of the treasury, to handle its part in the affair, and he was aided by Frederick Livesey, who is an associate economic adviser of the State department. For the British government appeared Sir Frederick Leith-Ross and T. K. Bewley. The question at issue was: How much, if at all, shall the United States reduce the British war debt, funded in 1923 for $4,000,000?

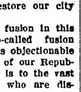


Dean Acheson

AMERICAN intervention in Cuba was brought appreciably nearer by a bloody all-day battle that took place between the 500 recalcitrant army and navy officers who had been beleaguered in the National hotel and the troops of President Grau. The hotel was bombarded until late afternoon with rifles, machine guns and cannon and the government said 18 of the officers were killed and 17 wounded which probably was an underestimate. The losses among the soldiers were officially stated to be 9 killed and 27 wounded. Correspondents said the total dead in the day's fighting numbered at least 44. Among the non-contestants killed was Robert Lotspeich, an American, assistant manager in Havana for Swift & Co.

When the hotel, which is owned and managed by Americans, was practically wrecked by shell fire, the officers surrendered. As they emerged under a white flag, unarmed and under guard of soldiers, they were again attacked and a number of them massacred. Apartment buildings near the hotel, in which many Americans resided, were frequently hit by machine gun bullets and shells from the Cuban cruiser Patria.

NEW York is now enjoying a three-cornered race for the mayoralty, for Joseph V. McKee decided to be an independent candidate against Mayor John Patrick O'Brien, the Democratic nominee, and Fiorello H. La Guardia, the fusion candidate. In his announcement, Mr. McKee said:



J. V. McKee

"I refused to enter the Democratic primaries because I felt that to do so would mark me as a tool of the machine, and that would prevent my doing the job that must be done to restore our city government.

"There is no real fusion in this campaign. The so-called fusion standard bearer is as objectionable to the solid element of our Republican citizenry as he is to the vast army of Democrats who are disgusted with machine politics. The present standard bearer of the alleged fusion is a poor compromise by a faction of would-be bosses."

VIRGINIA fell into line for repeal of the Eighteenth amendment. The wets won by something like 2 to 1. Fifteen of the 100 counties went dry, as did the cities of Danville and Radford. The Old Dominion was the thirty-second state enrolled against prohibition.

DEATH took two well-known figures in the world of sports. W. L. ("Young") Stribling, Georgia boxer who had been a contender for the heavyweight title, was fatally injured in an automobile accident, failing to recover after the amputation of one leg. William L. Veeck, president of the Chicago National League Baseball club, died of leucocythaemia.

Decries Association of Toads and Love Making

The toad, innocently enough on its own part, poor creature, has always enjoyed a grand role in all the arts and rites of sorcery and superstition. It has ever been an indispensable ingredient in love philters and other condiments of the magician, and no witchery or incantation has ever been able, very successfully, to get along without its toads. Though this animal is as a matter of fact one of the least prepossessing and most repellant found on the earth, its very preeminence in grotesqueness has given it a charm and popularity which can only be accounted for in the natural depravity of human impulse. If there were any beast, bird, fish or reptile less endowed with esthetic factors, you may be sure that it would have been preferred to this batrachian.

For our part, however, if we find it impossible to inveigle the affections of a young lady without recourse to medications associated to a greater or less extent with extracts and essences of toads, frogs and other uncouth, however interesting saurians, we will cheerfully surrender all hope of winning the girl of our dreams. We would not care to accept, upon such terms, even Cleopatra, or Helen of Troy!—Le Matin (Paris).

Ancient City of Gaza Strong Military Point

Old Gaza, the great city of Palestine, which was well known to Abraham, was one of the most strongly fortified in the ancient world.

Sir Flinders Petrie, the veteran archeologist, announced, a short time ago, the discovery of another secret passage leading out into the desert.

So great is the area still to be explored in Gaza that Sir Flinders estimates that it will take 50 years to excavate it all.

The elaborate defenses of the city, which was in its heydey at the time of Abraham, are so complicated that military experts with the expedition did not fully understand them.

A great tunnel leading from inside the city, under the walls and nearly 500 yards out into the desert, was found. This was considered to be a means of escape in emergency, or a method by which a surprise attack could be made on besieging forces.

Further excavations of the main gate revealed another tunnel cut in the solid sandstone.

Aviator's Thrill

There is the story of an airplane pilot who went looking for trouble. Up in front of him loomed a giant thunderhead. He thought to himself, "I should like to see what is inside." As soon as the pilot got into the cloud he felt his heart sinking into his shoes as if he were being shot upward in an elevator. He was elevated at the alarming rate of 1,400 feet a minute. He pushed the control stick forward as far as it would go. It made no difference; he was still being carried upward and—to make matters even worse—sideways at a speed of some seventy miles an hour. Eventually his experience came to an end; for he suddenly shot out of the cloud in a dive, yet several thousand feet higher than when he had entered it.—Literary Digest.

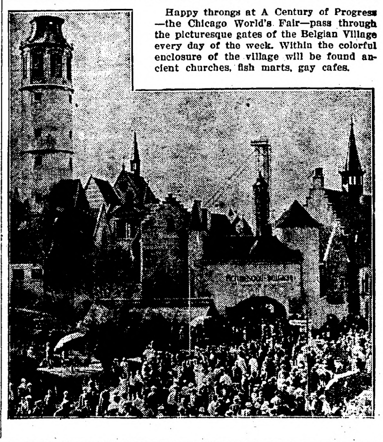
Mystery Story

This was in the days when motor cars were new, and automobiling was an adventure, not a pleasure. The family all had set out in the new car for a long trip of 15 miles, and mother was getting quite nervous as they bowled along. They stopped at an inn for lunch, and when they started again father noticed a noise in the motor.

"Good land! The engine's missing," he exclaimed. Mother's worst fears were realized, and she sputtered:

"Now, who could have taken that?"

Gay Crowds Flock to Old Belgium



Happy throngs at A Century of Progress—the Chicago World's Fair—pass through the picturesque gates of the Belgian Village every day of the week. Within the colorful enclosure of the village will be found ancient churches, fish marts, gay cafes.

Five-Day Deer Season Is Proclaimed By Gov. Olson

A five-day open season on deer in nine Northern Minnesota counties from November 21 to 25, inclusive, was proclaimed last Thursday by an executive order of Governor Olson according to a news dispatch from St. Paul.

W. D. Stewart, director of game and fish, said that a short open season would be feasable because of an abundance of deer and the danger of disease among herds.

One deer of either sex may be taken by each hunter during the five days in St. Louis, Cook, Lake, Koochiching, Beltrami, Itasca, Lake of the Woods, Pine and Carlton counties.

Approximately $100,000 will go into the depleted coffers of the game and fish division, based on license receipts of previous years. The license fee is $2.25 for resident and $50.25 for non-residents. There were 19,797 deer killed in 1932.

More cars of baled hay have been shipped out of here this week and a lot more is piled up here in the railroad yards.

Death of Wm. Wendt

Funeral services were conducted from the Nazareth Lutheran church here yesterday afternoon for William Wendt a pioneer farmer and resident of this community. Mr. Wendt died late Sunday evening from injuries he received in a fall from the top of small building used as smoke house on his farm southeast of town.

He had gone out to catch some chickens which roosted in a tree next to the smoke house and as he could not reachthem from the ground he climbed on top the small five-foot high building and stepped over onto a limb on the tree. His wife who was out to help him believes the limb on the tree which broke, caused him to fall and hit the ground.

His neck was broken and he never moved from the spot where he fell. Mr. Wendt who was 76 years old, took care of all his farm work and was very active in spite of his age.

Funeral services were held from the home at one o'clock and from the church at two. Interment was made in the Lutheran cemetery in Thief River Falls. Rev. L. M. Redal officiated and Carlson Merc. Co., had charge of the funeral.

Driver's Licence Blanks Available In County Soon

Residents of Holt and Marshall county will be able to obtain driver's license application blanks from A. C. Swandby, clerk of district court, Warren, shortly after November 1.

A supply of blanks will be mailed to Mr. Swandby soon, according to an announcement by the State Highway department. The highway commissioner was designated by the 1933 legislature to administer the new driver's license and financial responsibility laws, which go into effect in 1994. Each clerk of district court in the state was named by the legislature as the agent for distributing license applications in his county.

While automobile drivers will not be required to show their license until after next March 1, the highway department is setting up machinery for issuing 1,000,000 to 1,500,000 license before that time.

Clerks of court will issue the license applications for 35 cents each and forward them to the highway department, which will send the official license directly to the individual. Ten cents of the 35-cent fee goes to pay the clerks' expense.

The licensing law was enacted to give authorities the power to protect the public from dangerous and irresponsible drivers on the highways. Revocation of the license is provided in case of certain serious violations of law.

County Receives $129,200 Ditch Relief Warrant

Marshall county received a warrant totaling $129,234.15 covering the first payment from the State of Minnesota to take up outstanding ditch bonds in 18 Eastern Marshall County townships included in the ditch relief bill passed by the last session of the Minnesota legislature. The warrant was presented to county Audito Levi G. Johnson by M. J. Desmond, deputy state auditor on Tuesday last week.

The huge sum of money will be used to take up all ditch bonds outstanding for ditches in the affected area up to and including Dec. 31, 1933, said W. O. Braggans, county attorney. Only bonds for ditches in the 18 townships included in the ditch tax relief bill will be redeemed through this payment from the state, Mr. Braggans stated. No other bonds are involved in the payment.

Payments from the state for the ditch tax relief project will be made periodically as the bonds in the affected area fall due, the appropriation from the legislature providing for this feature.—Warren Sheaf.

Tried to Toss the Bull

John Loven of Gatzke smashed up the front end of his model A Ford coach Sunday evening as he was driving to Holt when he hit a big bull belonging to Ludvik Larson two east of town.

Mr. Loven and Mr. Lien who was riding with him had passed a car and did not notice the cattle near the road until the big bull jumped out of the ditch and in front of the car at too close a range to stop. No one was hurt.

Commercial Club to Stage Big Prize Drawing Friday

The local commercial club met Wednesday evening and decided on a date for the next prize day drawing. The drawing will be held next Friday, November 3, at 2 p. m. It was also decided that on account of the cold weather and bad roads in the winter it would be advisable at this time to discontinue the prize day drawings for a while.

So now all those whom have tickets at home should bring them in and deposit them in the boxes for the drawing on Friday Nov. 3 when $45 in cash will be distributed among eighteen persons holding lucky numbers. A five dollar last prize will be given at this drawing.

Winner of the grand prize was E. J. Glasbrenner of New Prague with an average score of 95.5.

Garage Burned

The big Ford garage and the Thief River Seed house burned to the ground in Thief River on Thursday of last week. Some of those from here that saw the fire remarked that the fire department in a city the size of Thief River Falls reminded one of a small circus and was not much to laugh at. They have no equipment to put on with and at this fire had no water to put on with the small outfiit they have got.

You people down there better quit fighting over the fifteen grand grant you got from Uncle Sam and ask for more for fire apparatus and water.

Moving

Mrs. C. Rustad and sons who have for the past few years farmed the old P. N. Pederson place on the ridge southwest of town, have this week moved further west onto a farm which they rented from Mrs. Silverness. The Pederson place is a state farm and has been sold to a party from South Dakota.

The Weather

Snow? Yes we got snow. It started in kind of easy Monday morning and by evening every thing was covered with snow an inch deep. The sun has tried a couple of times to chase it away but the north wind has held on and now most everybody thinks winter is here.

Duluth has a foot of snow, Bemidji had a seven inch snow fall and from there on up this way it thinned out. Roseau had no snow.

Smashed Up Ford Truck

A young fellow from Thief River Falls smashed up his Ford truck on the highway two miles north of town on Monday when he hit the ditch with a big load of wood on the machine. He escaped unhurt according to a report from an eye witness to the accident which happened as attempted to pass another truck and skidded on the slippery oiled road.

HIS INTENTIONS GOOD

One of the "mediators" appointed by Governor Pinchot, of Pennsylvania, to go among the mine operators and miners and get them to drop their grievances and agree to pull together was very emphatic when he came to the subject of co-operation. What he said was this: "In nine cases out of ten the interests of employers and employees are identical—yes, I might even go farther and say 99 cases out of 10."—

Why the Sudden Change to Liquid Laxatives?

Doctors have always recognized the value of the laxative whose dose can be measured, and whose action can be controlled.

The public, too, is fast returning to the use of liquid laxatives. People have learned that a properly prepared liquid laxative brings a perfect movement without any discomfort at the time, or after.

The dose of a liquid laxative can be varied to suit the needs of the individual. The action can thus be regulated. It forms no habit; you need not take a "double dose" a day or two later. Nor will a mild liquid laxative irritate the kidneys.

The wrong cathartic may keep you constipated as long as you keep on using it.

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is a prescription, and is perfectly safe. Its laxative action is based on senna —a natural laxative. The bowels will not become dependent on this form of help. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is at all druggists. Member N. R. A.

"Babbie," he called very gently.

She lifted her face, small and white in the moonlight, framed in silky tendrils of soft brown hair.

"Oh, it's you, Uncle Stephen," she said.

"Who did you think it might be?"

"That sailor."

"The boy from Annapolis?"

"I ran away from him."

"Why?" Stephen asked, seating himself beside her on the grassy rim of the pond.

"I don't like his hands," she said. "They paw."

"I'll spank him." Stephen seethed with indignation. "I'll spank him, buttons and all."

"Oh, no, you won't, Uncle Stephen." Her hand slipped into his. "I was glad of an excuse. I wanted to run away."

"Don't you like your party?"

"It's a lovely party," she said quickly, afraid that his feelings might be hurt. "But boys aren't amusing. Not very young boys like that."

"Do they seem very young to you?"

"Young and silly." She turned from him with a choked little sob.

"Babbie! You're crying, Babbie."

She did not try to deny it. He drew her into his arms, felt her turn, felt her arms around his neck.

"Can you tell me, dear?" he asked. "It hurts me to see you unhappy. Can't you tell me, Babbie, dear?"

Stephen felt her trembling in his arms. He was trembling, too. Had all of this unhappiness been about him? He couldn't believe it. The thought turned the world upside down.

"Barbara," he said brokenly.

It was strange that he should call her that. She could tell him now about Bruce. But he must know that she was grateful.

"I do love you, Uncle Stephen," she said.

And then she knew that she couldn't tell him. He kissed her, not as he had kissed her many times, but in a different way. She knew what the kisses meant. She knew about being in love.

CHAPTER XIV

Barbara lay on the beach, her arms folded under her head, her eyes dreaming up into the cloudless blue of the sky. Kit sat beside her, sketching. At a little distance, Gay in a brief green bathing suit was the center of a noisy chattering group. Jamie and the Parrish twins, freckled and brown as gypsies, were building a miniature golf course. "Chips" and the Parrish Airedale were engaged in a friendly tussle, their frisky feet flinging up showers of sand.

Barbara had forgotten Kit and the children. She lay very still, thinking of many things. Summer was over. This was their last day at Bay Head. Tomorrow they would return to "Thornhedge." What then? "When the summer is over," Uncle Stephen had said.

She thought, with a faint confused feeling, of what that might mean. "When the summer is over." She knew, now, that she had tried to hold the days, to keep them from passing too rapidly. Each of them was precious, sunny days, gray days wrapped in blankets of fog, stormy days when the wind blew from the northeast and the breakers pounded against the shore. Another day. Something might happen. Weeks ahead. Passing, passing too rapidly, sunny days, cloudy days, days when the storm wind blew. She could not hold them. They were gone. "When the summer is over," Uncle Stephen had said.

She remembered the day he had said it, the day after her party when Uncle Stephen had kissed her beside the lily pond in that new and frightening way. It was late in the afternoon. She had sat in the library alcove, hidden by the hangings, trying to write a letter to Bruce, a sad difficult letter, a letter to tell him that she must stay with Uncle Stephen. She was tired, so dreadfully tired. The rain against the window had been soothing. She had gone to sleep, tired, so dreadfully tired.

Voices had roused her, Uncle Stephen's voice, the plushy fat-sounding voice of Aunt Edith's friend, Mrs. Beach. She had meant to come from behind the curtains. It wasn't polite to listen to a conversation when no one knew you were there.

And then she had discovered that Mrs. Beach was talking about her. She couldn't come out then. She had been too shy and hurt and ashamed, too sorry for Uncle Stephen.

Susie Monroe, she had heard, had seen Uncle Stephen kiss her beside the lily pond. Susie had told her grandmother and her grandmother, a friend of Aunt Edith's, had told Mrs. Beach. Everybody was talking, Mrs. Beach reported. She felt it her duty to tell Stephen.

Uncle Stephen had been very angry indeed—angry but very polite. He had said very little. Barbara knew, by the tone of his voice, that he was angry and hurt. She had been so sorry for Uncle Stephen, hearing Mrs. Beach talk. He had been kind to her and the children, so wonderfully gentle and kind. She wanted to help him, somehow. There was nothing she could do.

Uncle Stephen, at last, had rung for Henry. Mrs. Beach had rustled out of the room.

Barbara had not meant Uncle Stephen to know that she had overheard the conversation. She waited until she thought he had left the room. Then she stepped out from behind the curtains. He was there, standing beside the hearth, his brows drawn down over his angry eyes. He had looked sorry when he saw her, sorry and angry and hurt.

"You heard?" he had asked.

"I'm sorry, Uncle Stephen."

"D—n them," he had said, meaning Mrs. Beach and Susie Monroe and Susie's gossiping grandmother.

"I'm so terribly sorry." He had looked so sorry and angry that she had wanted to help him. "People will talk, Uncle Stephen. There's nothing you can do."

"There's one thing," he had said.

She knew what he meant. She could tell by the expression in his eyes. A weight had settled into her heart. If he hadn't kissed her the evening before in that frightening sort of way she would have thought that he meant only to protect her. But he had kissed her. She knew about being in love.

"Barbara—" he had said.

She had wanted to stop him. Thinking of Bruce, she had wanted to run away. He must have seen that she was confused. He had not touched her.

"We won't talk about it now," he had said. "When the summer is over—"

Uncle Stephen had taken them to Bay Head with Sarah and a brown cook named Eliza. He had come down only for week-ends. Barbara was grateful for that. Since the evening beside the lily pond, since Mrs. Beach had swept out of the library, it had embarrassed her to be with Uncle Stephen. It hurt her to feel that way. But she couldn't help it no matter how hard she tried.

She Knew What the Kisses Meant—She Knew About Being In Love.

He had been as kind as ever. But his manner had changed. He treated her like a grown-up young lady. He never kissed her as he did Gay or tousled her hair or ducked her under the waves. He never called her Babbie. He called her Barbara now, all the time.

She might have thought that she had imagined that evening beside the lily pond except that, sometimes, he looked at her in a wistful sort of way.

And now it was September. "When the summer is over," Uncle Stephen had said. . . .

"Do you know where Bruce is, Babs?" Kit, lounging beside her, asked.

"No," she said, turning her head to avoid Kit's eyes. She didn't know. He had not answered the difficult letter she wrote him, the letter which told him that she must stay with Uncle Stephen. Her following letters had been returned unopened. Bruce had disappeared without telling her that he understood, without a consoling word, Bruce who had loved her so much. . . .

"I should think he would write to us," Kit grumbled. "I thought he liked us a lot. Remember how he used to take us swimming?"

Barbara nodded, unable to speak because of a lump in her throat. . . . "He was afraid to tell her how deeply he loved her because she was a little girl no higher than his heart and he wasn't sure that she knew about being in love. . . ."

"And how nice he was when Father died?" Kit asked, remembering Bruce.

Again Barbara nodded, her lashes wet with tears which Kit could not see. . . . "The flute knew only one song. 'I love you, pretty gypsy girl with the roses in your hair. . . .'"

"Babs," Kit said, after an interval of silence.

"Yes?"

"This is sort of a funny question I'm going to ask."

"What is it, Kit?"

"Well, I was thinking—" Kit flushed and looked embarrassed. "I mean, wouldn't it be funny if you should marry Uncle Stephen?"

"What put that idea in your head?"

"Sarah told Eliza you are." Kit's flush deepened. "Of course I don't listen to servants' talk. But Gay told Sally Parrish."

"You know how Gay is, Kit."

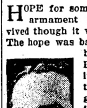
"Yes. I know." Kit rolled over on his side. "But I was just thinking—wouldn't it be sort of funny, Babs?"

"Would you like it?" Barbara asked.

"I think it would be swell," Kit answered promptly. "Then we could all stay together. You have to marry somebody, I suppose."

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

HOPE for some success in the disarmament conference was revived though it was still rather faint. The hope was based on the fact that both Germany and France were becoming more specific in their demands. The government in Berlin issued an official statement respecting reports published abroad, declaring "it is completely false to say Germany demands arms equality with France after five years. Germany demands after five years only the further disarmament of other countries. As to weapons, for training purposes, all discrimination must now cease. But Germany does not demand the same number of weapons as others possess."



Stanley Baldwin

France, represented by Premier Daladier, replied to the German statements by repeating its plan for a four year trial period during which all armies would be bound not to augment armaments, followed by destruction of offensive weapons. Daladier said: "No one contests Germany's right to live the life of a great power. No one thinks of humiliating Germany."

The British were growing impatient over the deadlock, and Stanley Baldwin, lord president of the council and probably the country's foremost statesman, uttered a stern warning in an address at Birmingham.

"When I speak of a disarmament convention," he said, "I do not mean disarmament on the part of this country and not on the part of any other. I mean a limitation of armaments that is a real limitation.

"If a convention is signed, the nation which breaks it will have no friend in this civilized world.

"And I would add this, the same is true of any nation which deliberately prevents such an agreement being reached by putting forward demands which might be acceptable after a time, but which would not be acceptable today to the other co-signatories."

This was looked on as plain speaking to Germany.

SPAIN has a new government again, this time with Martinez Barrios as premier. He formed a coalition Republican cabinet, omitting the Socialists, and then dissolved the Constitutional congress.

GRIFFITH park forest preserve at Los Angeles was the scene of a terrible holocaust in which at least 27 men met death—and the victims may have numbered fifty or more. The men, relief roll workers, had been ordered to put out a small brush fire and in their ignorance of proper methods started a back fire that trapped many of them in a ravine. At least that was one explanation. Another theory was that the fatal conflagration was started by a carelessly thrown cigarette. The flames swept through the woods, dried out by a long spell of hot weather, and the panic-stricken men lost all sense of direction in the dense smoke. Two hundred or more were taken to hospitals, badly burned or suffering from suffocation.

DEATH took two well-known figures in the world of sports. W. L. ("Young") Stribling, Georgia boxer who had been a contender for the heavyweight title, was fatally injured in an automobile accident, failing to recover after the amputation of one leg. William L. Veeck, president of the Chicago National League Baseball club, died of leucocythaemia.

Porter H. Dale, United States senator from Vermont, died at his summer home after a long illness, at the age of sixty-six years. Morris Hillquit leader of American Socialists, passed away at his home in New York. He was a man of high intellect, honesty and public spirit.

OF SUPREME importance to Japan is the question of improving its relations with the United States, according to Viscount Kikujiro Ishii, who has returned to Tokyo from the economic conference in London. The viscount, who formerly was ambassador to Washington, declared he was shocked to find his people talking of war with the United States. To think of such a thing, he said, was not only ridiculous but tragic.

Viscount Ishii

Ishii advocated an arbitration pact between the United States and Japan. He said he is convinced there is ample grounds at present for such an agreement, which would guarantee peace at a time when militarists and jingoists are making the best of the war fear to advance their own ends.

Foreign Minister Hirota, it is believed, favors such a pact with America, but War Minister Sadao Araki indicated he would put a stop to all such peace moves and that the army would force the cabinet to pursue an isolation policy. General Araki declared that Hirota would not change the diplomatic policy of Japan toward the United States, despite reports that had received some credence.

VIRGINIA [illegible] into line for repeal of the Eighteenth amendment. The wets won by something like 2 to 1. Fifteen of the 100 counties went dry, as did the cities of Danville and Radford. The Old Dominion was the thirty-second state enrolled against prohibition.

Life's Span Shortened by White House Cares?

Is the life span of our Presidents growing less? Our office mathematician says that it is, after he had made some lightning calculations; so let us take a look at his figures.

The average age of our first ten Presidents at the time of their death averaged a little more than seventy-seven years. Then ten Presidents taken from the center of the list, beginning with Harrison and ending with Hayes, give us an average of slightly over sixty-seven years. Now we take the last ten deceased rulers and we find that their average amounts to around sixty-four years. In this list, our demon mathematician did not take into consideration any of the Presidents that met with violent death.

Our figure wizard says that he compared the ages of ten business men of the same period as our first Presidents and found that their aver- years, while ten men of recent years years, while ten men of recent years averaged around seventy years. These men were all selected at random (and he failed to tell us their names).

These figures may mean little or much, but at any rate they are most interesting. If it is a fact that being the head of our nation is too much strain, then the practice of the present President in selecting as his aids, the learned men of the country's universities is certainly worth watching. They cannot do his worrying but they can lift a big load from his shoulders.—Pathfinder Magazine.

PERFECTLY WONDERFUL! THAT MARVELOUS BAYER ASPIRIN ACTUALLY STOPPED MY HEADACHE IN A FEW MINUTES!

Don't Forget Real BAYER Aspirin Starts "Taking Hold" in Few Minutes

Here is quicker relief from pain—the fastest safe relief, it is said, ever known. This is due to a scientific discovery by which BAYER Aspirin starts "taking hold" of pain a few minutes after taking.

The illustration of the glass here tells the story. A Bayer tablet starts to disintegrate or dissolve—go to work—almost instantly. This means quick relief from pain—fewer lost hours from headache, neuritis, rheumatism. And safe relief. For genuine Bayer Aspirin does not harm the heart.

When you buy, see that you get the genuine Bayer Aspirin. The best way is never to ask for aspirin by the name "aspirin" alone. But if you want Bayer Aspirin's quick relief always to say "BAYER Aspirin."

WHY BAYER ASPIRIN WORKS SO FAST

Drop a Bayer Tablet in a glass of water. Note that BEFORE it touches bottom, it has started to disintegrate.

What it does in this glass it does in your stomach. Hence its fast action.

Does Not Harm the Heart

"Costs More—Worth It!"

News of Minnesota
EVENTS of the week throughout the "State of Ten Thousand Lakes" told in brief form

Caledonia—About 30 Houston county farmers signed applications for wheat bonuses, totaling about $600.

Mankato—Pals since birth, Mutt, a lion and Jeff, a dog, live and play together in the Mankato zoo. They are both about a year old.

Red Wing—With only $53,500 outstanding in bonded indebtedness, $24,000 of which will be paid in 1934, this city expects to be out of debt by 1936.

Blue Earth—Blinded by the lights of a car in which Frank Willett was driving 300 sheep ahead of him, Reuben Willmert, a truck driver, crashed into the animals and killed 53 of them.

St. Paul—The state executive council appropriated $500,000 for drouth relief. It is planned to use the money for hay and feed for livestock of farmers whose crops suffered from the dry weather this year.

Madelia—The state corn husking contest is to be conducted this year on the Henry A. Henis farm, November 2. Ted Balko, Redwood county champion, last year's winner, will defend his record of 25.13 bushels in 80 minutes.

Minneapolis—The legal department of the United States government is organized for full speed ahead in the upper Mississippi nine-foot channel project, George C. Sweeney, assistant attorney general, said on his arrival in the Twin Cities.

St. Paul—Minnesota communities and counties will apply for federal aid for $100,000,000 of public works and if their plans are approved will pay $85,000,000 of the money in wages to workers, William N. Carey, state engineer announced.

Mountain Lake—Following an election favoring a municipal electric light plant, the village council has taken steps for an early start on the job. The village will issue bonds for the carrying on of the work in the amount of $45,000.

St. Paul—To speed federal programs of relief for debt-burdened farmers, Governor Olson created a state agricultural advisory council under chairmanship of Professor E. C. Johnson, of the agricultural economics department at University farm.

St. Paul—Minnesota Democrats will lay charges before farm credit administration officials that the administration in the St. Paul Federal land bank area has spent more for salaries in recent months than it has loaned out as relief funds to farmers.

St. Paul—With appointment of 10 subcommittees to study all phases of the question, Minnesota's liquor control committee is ready to step into the problem of providing the state legislature with a plan to govern distribution and sale of sprituous beverages after repeal.

Chaska—Fire of undetermined origin swept the American Beet Sugar Company warehouse, causing damage to stock and the building estimated at $20,000. Approximately 16,000 sacks of sugar beet pulp stored in the warehouse, were destroyed, and about one-third of the building wrecked.

St. Paul—Dr. W. I. Myers, deputy governor of the farm credit administration, announced that upwards of $200,000,000 in mortgage and crop production credit will be available to agriculture in the Seventh Land bank district, comprising Minnesota, North Dakota, Wisconsin and Michigan.

Bagley—Another effort will be made in the forthcoming session of congress to acquire for Minnesota Indians the land lying about Rice lake in Clearwater county, an objective long sought by the Chippewas and their friends. The move, it is anticipated, will precipitate further controversy.

St. Paul—Working to speed up the state educational program Governor Floyd B. Olson's commission for the education of unemployed youths perfected plans for the hiring of unemployed teachers throughout the state to take over the teaching and made arrangements to use available school facilities for the classes.

Badger—Volunteer fire fighters battled a stubborn blaze which threatened to wipe out the business district. Handicapped by lack of sufficient water and pumping facilities, the firemen were unable to check the spread of the flames to four business structures which were destroyed. Other buildings were saved by bucket brigades and hose lines.

St. Paul—Minnesota spent $74,903,287 in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1932, or $29 per capita, based on a population of 2,582,000, according to figures made public by the United States bureau of census.

So. St. Paul—Eighty-five Minnesota counties and 10 Wisconsin counties are expected to have entries in the sixteenth annual Minnesota Junior Livestock show, at which 4-H club members who have done outstanding work in livestock projects will compete at South St. Paul November 6 to 9.

Want Mantis to Prey on Beetles

The species of praying mantis that is being offered to the American Museum of Natural History by scores of persons who believe the giant insect is a rarity, is said to have been introduced into the United States by way of Philadelphia. The big predatory clown is far from rare, and though the praying mantis is of color and shape that makes it difficult to find, it is often seen hereabouts in positions suggesting a designed pose.

The world has some 800 species of mantis, and there are about 20 species in the United States. The Chinese variety is several inches long and when watching for its game looks like something a child or whimsical adult might have fashioned, in jocular mood, from hairpins and cellophane, with a thin coat of green added to match the foliage.

The forelegs are folded as if the creature held deep religious feelings, but the fervor is merely appetite, the position one of stealthy lurking for prey. And the mantis is a ready fighter, too, after the boxer's manner, when a desired luncheon puts up a scrap of the inedible sort.

The Chinese praying mantis, which can clown, and will if invited, by rolling its head all the way around, eats good and bad insects alike, but Philadelphians wish he would set himself to devour billions of Japanese beetles.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

ALL DONE, MOTHER! COME AND SEE HOW SPARKLING WHITE YOUR WASHLINE IS!
DONE? YOU COULDN'T POSSIBLY GET THINGS CLEAN IN THIS TIME!
4
THERE! IS THAT WHITE? AND JUST FEEL IT—AND SMELL IT!
I DON'T SEE HOW YOU DID IT! THESE SHEETS USED TO COME OUT GRAY EVEN AFTER BOILING!
TELL US HOW.
5
THERE'S NO MYSTERY. 15 MINUTES' SOAKING IN CREAMY OXYDOL SUDS—NO SCRUBBING OR BOILING! AND THE CLOTHES WILL LAST AGES LONGER!
YOU'D THINK IT WOULD FADE THINGS, WORKING SO FAST. BUT ALL THE COLORED THINGS ARE BRIGHT AS NEW!
I REMEMBER NOW. OXYDOL IS PROCTER AND GAMBLE'S NEW GRANULATED SOAP.
6
SEE YOU LATER! I'M MEETING TOM FOR LUNCH.
I WOULDN'T HAVE BELIEVED A SOAP COULD MAKE ALL THAT DIFFERENCE!
THE JOKE'S ON US, ALL RIGHT. I'M GOING TO ORDER A PACKAGE OF OXYDOL RIGHT NOW!

DIRT SOAKED OUT LIKE MAGIC BY AMAZING NEW LAUNDRY SOAP

Ends Forever All Scrubbing And Boiling—Works Faster Than Any Soap Known Before—Yet Can't Harm Hands, Clothes, Or Colors

HERE is a new scientific soap development that has already revolutionized washdays in more than a million homes. A creation so amazing that women everywhere are asking—"Will the wonders of science never cease?"

An utterly new-type laundry soap. A soap that multiplies itself 500 TIMES in suds. Which means you get at least twice as much suds as from old-style soaps. A still faster-washing, still whiter-washing soap that's utterly SAFE for colors, fabrics, and hands.

This remarkable new discovery is called OXYDOL. And you will find to your surprise that even your favorite soap—whether "granulated," bar, or flake—is hopelessly out-of-date, compared with this new invention!

Women believed they had the fastest soap already. Then found it was slow, alongside OXYDOL. For OXYDOL utterly banishes boiling. It ends washboard scrubbing. It cuts soaking time to 15 minutes—gets clothes out hours sooner.

They believed they had the whitest washes they could possibly get. And are now amazed by washes 4 to 5 shades whiter than before. By impartial scientific test, ONE washing with OXYDOL gets clothes whiter than 2 to 4 washes with other soaps. But that's not all!

They find clothes actually last longer, washed with this new soap. That the daintiest colors DO NOT fade. That it is easier on hands than any soap they've ever used. For no strong agents, no chemical bleaches are in OXYDOL. Just pure soap elements blended with others that protect clothes against fade. OXYDOL simply can't hurt anything clear water won't!

DISSOLVES Dirt—In Any Water, Hard Or Soft

Its creamy, "free-acting" suds dissolve dirt out in 15 minutes. No boiling, no back-breaking scrubbing is necessary. Nor any "water-softener," either. For the right amount of water-softener is already there.

Different from ordinary soaps, OXYDOL is specially fitted to water conditions in each district where it is sold. The water in this district, for example, has been tested for "hardness" by expert chemists. And the OXYDOL you buy here contains just the right proportion of "softener" to suit your water.

With OXYDOL you'll do your wash in 25 to 40% less time. You'll get a whiter, sweeter-smelling wash than ever before. Moreover, everything will iron beautifully—no soap streaks or smudges anywhere. And you'll never be bothered with fading colors or red, soap-bitten hands.

These things we promise you. Whatever your former favorite, try OXYDOL next time you wash. You'll never go back to slower soaps or harsher soaps again! Procter & Gamble.

ECONOMICAL
By actual test, a regular 25c package of Oxydol will do the work of 8 to 10 cakes of bar soap—or 2 to 3 times as much flakes.

High School

The Freshmen have completed several laboratory tests this week. Some of them were very interesting.

The six weeks tests are past for the time being and the report cards have been given out. They weren't so bad but we all, or at least most of us, have secretly resolved to do better.

Class Officers are:

Freshmen Class—
President .... Elmer Doran
Vice-Pres. .... Marlan Augustine
Sec.-Treas. .. Margaret Sagstuen

Sophomore Class—
Pres. .... Thelma Kolden
Vice Pres. .... Lida Monson
Sec.-Treas. .... Clayton Gunheim

Junior Class—
Pres. .... Ruth Engebretson
Vice.-Pres. .... Ethel Nohre
Sec.-Treas. .... Cleo Peterson

The Honor Roll:
Frederick Voth
Clayton Gunheim
Thelma Kolden

New class reporters were elected. They are:
Ethel Nohre .... Junior Reporter
Lida Monson .... Sophomore "
Rosella Burtness - Freshman "

The Biology class have finished their Leaf booklets.

Two gold fish were purchased for the Biology class for the purpose of studying their nature.

Fifty books have been added to our library by the Traveling Library.

Upper Grades

We are having a party in our room Friday afternoon. The seventh graders are making the arrangements.

Lorraine had the best eighth grade General Science paper in the test this week.

Glenn and Opal had perfect eighth grade Mathematics papers Tuesday.

Mrs. Lorentson and Miss Vivian Peterson visited our room for a short time Friday.

The seventh graders have been working out original plays this week. They will present them Friday.

The pupils who received the highest scores in the Arithmetic time-tests we had last week were: Florence Bottem, Lowell Sovde, Florence Mitchell, Vernice Tollefsrud, and Opal Sanoden.

Grades III, IV, and V

The following children had 100 in Spelling last Friday: Marian Backlund, Ruth Halvorson, Wayne Larson, Elaine Tollefsrud, Rueben Kolden, Lois Hanson, Betty Lou Lorentson.

We have a Spelling chart in our room. We want to see who can keep their balloon flying the highest.

The children on the Honor Roll rank in the following order:

Third Grade
Lillian Fredrickson
Wayne Larson
Roy Johnson
Honorable Mention: Ruby Halvorson, Rueben Kolden.

Fourth Grade
Lois Hanson
Leroy Fredrickson.
Russell Sanoden.

Fifth Grade
Lorene Fluke.

Grades I and II

The following children had 100 in Spelling last Friday: Luella, Yvonne, Alma, and Clayton.

The children on the Honor Roll for the first six weeks are:

Grade II—Yvonne Redal, Luella Fluke, and Howard Horien.

Grade I — Dorothy Hanson, Lorna Kolden, and Geraldine Larson.

We are getting our room decorated for Hallowe'en.

In Nature Class we are studying how insects, birds, and animals survive the winter.

The Second Grade are having Spelling races. Last week Alma's row was ahead of Howard's row by several points.

So far Howard has read the greatest number of library readers.

One Dollar Fifty Per Year In Advance

H. O. Hanson, Editor and Publisher — Holt, Marshall County, Minnesota, Friday, November 3, 1933. — Volume 23, Number 27

William Gottlieb Wendt

William Gottlieb Wendt, was born in Rehnitz, Brandenburg, Germany April 2, 1857. While still a boy he emigrated to this country with his parents settling in the town of Jackson, Washington county, Wisconsin. Soon after settling there he was confirmed at St. Johns Lutheran church at West Bend, Wis.

On May 29, 1886 he was united in marriage with Theresa Juech at Milwaukee, Wis. For a number of years they made their home on a farm at Jackson, Wis. In the year 1900 he with his family moved onto a homestead three miles southeast of Holt where he made his home until the time of his death.

Besides his wife he leaves six children, two children having preceded him in death. Those living are: Elizabeth, Mrs. C. J. Krueger of West Bend, Wis.; Mathilda, Mrs. Geo. Johnson of Lindstrom, Minn.; Theresa, Mrs. Anton Scheunemann of West Bend, Wis.; Henry C. of Minneapolis; Frank C. of Palisade, Minn., and Waldemar J., Barton, Wis. He also leaves six grandchildren.

The funeral was held from the home on Thursday, Oct. 26. After the services at the Nazareth Lutheran church at Holt, he was taken to Thief River Falls where interment was made in Greenwood Cemetery.

Rev. L. M. Redal officiated.

Honorary Pallbearers were: Louis Wegge, August Wartenburg, John Simonson, Constantine Hoffmann, Carl Larson and Christian Saastad.

Active Pallbearers were: Fred Steinhauer, Martin Mattson, Fred Voth, William Mehrkens, John Augustine and Clarence Larson.

Prize Drawing

Don't forget about the prize drawing this afternoon. This will be the last drawing to be held for some time and those whom have tickets are asked to deposit them now.

Where's That Gold?

From Washington come a report that somewhere in this old world is more than $15,000,000,000 of gold that miners seeking pay dirt in western ghost towns never will find.

It is gold that has been produced and has disappeared from sight in the centuries since Columbus sailed westward and claimed the new world for Spain.

From 1493 to 1932 the world produced approximately 1,109,800,000 ounces, the bureau of mines estimates. More than half of this has dropped from sight—536,563,329 ounces to be exact.

Where is it? Officials say that some is in the tightly-clenched grip of small misers, some in the hoards of fabulously rich Indian prices. Possibly as much as one-third of the vanished gold is estimated to have found its way to India.

Part of it is in the form of adornments that have been buried with the owner, while a vast store of the metal that men have fought and schemed for lies at the bottom of the sea.

William Watts To Retire

Judge William Watts, Crookston, pioneer jurist of the 14th Judicial District Court, last week announced his intention of withdrawing from the bench because of old age making it difficult for him to properly care for his duties.

Judge Watts, who is 83 years old, is in his 35th year on the district bench and is the second oldest judge in the state in the point of service. He has been ill at his home for more than two weeks, but attending physicians report that his illness is not serious.

Members of the 14th district bar association last week began the task of selecting the names of three attorneys who will be submitted to Governor Floyd B. Olson for appointment as successor to the veteran jurist. The law provides that within seven days of the notice to the bar association members, the attorneys shall nominate candidates. The nominations will be conducted by mail.

After all nominations are in, all nominees will be voted on by attorneys of the district, this procedure being also carried out by mail. The three lawyers receiving the highest vote will be certified and their names sent to the Governor, who may pick one of the three. The Governor is not bound by the selection of the bar, however. The bar association's action is merely advisory.

Judge Watts was first elected as district judge in 1898. He long has ranked among the ablest of Minnesota judges. Before becoming district judge he was Polk county attorney, Crookston city attorney, a member of the Crookston City Council 12 years, a member of the Crookston board of education and referee in bankruptcy.

He was born June 9, 1850 in Stanley, Huron county, Ontario, Canada. His father was Matthew Watts, a native of Yorkshire, England, who came to Canada in 1842, and his mother, Hannah, of Cumberlandshire, England, who came in 1832 at the age of six years.

They settled in the backwoods near the shore of Lake Huron in 1848, enduring the hardships of pioneers who made farms from heavily timbered lands with own hands, and there they are buried, the father dying in 1854 at the age of 34 years, and his wife in 1912 at the age of 86 years.

Judge Watts received his education and worked at farming, lumbering, and teaching school in Ontario, Michigan, Wisconsin, and Minnesota until 1875 when he entered the law department of the University of Michigan, graduating from there in 1877. He came to Crookston in January, 1878. He is said to be the first lawyer now living to settle in what is now the 14th judicial district.—Warren Sheaf.

The week of October 30 to November 4 has been designated by proclamation of Governor Olson as Potato Week. The thought behind this movement is to elevate the quality of Minnesota grown potatoes and to sell Minnesota people on the idea of consuming their own potatoes.

The State Department of Agriculture reports that while thousands of carloads a year of Minnesota potatoes are shipped to out-state markets, thousands of carloads also of out-state potatoes are brought into Minnesota for consumption within the state, especially in the larger cities.

Quality All-Important in Selection of Soap

By RUBY BAKER

The weekly wash is a good example of where "pinching on quality" is costly in the end. Women whose snowy-white washings are the envy of their neighborhood have learned the value of buying not cheaply but well.

When these women purchase a laundry soap they look for quality and washing value. They know that a perfect wash depends on the use of a high-grade soap. After all, it's the ability of the cleansing agents that gets results.

Many a housewife has found that a cheap or "weak" soap not only requires harder rubbing to get clothes clean, but that this hard rubbing actually harms the fabrics.

Where you buy quality, it makes little difference in what form a soap comes. A soap can be any color of the rainbow—without any effect at all on the whiteness of clothes. For instance, a certain well-known laundry soap is golden because that is the natural color of its combined fine ingredients. And due to its greater cleansing energy, this golden soap gets clothes cleaner—which means whiter.

Why Doctors Favor a Liquid Laxative

A doctor will tell you that the careless choice of laxatives is a common cause of chronic constipation.

Any hospital offers evidence of the harm done by harsh laxatives that drain the system, weaken the bowel muscles, and even affect the liver and kidneys.

Fortunately, the public is fast returning to laxatives in liquid form. The dose of a liquid laxative can be measured. The action can thus be controlled. It forms no habit; you needn't take a "double dose" a day or two later.

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin has the average person's bowels regular as clockwork in a few weeks' time. Why not try it? Some pill or tablet may be more convenient to carry. But there is little "convenience" in any cathartic which is taken so frequently, you must carry it with you, wherever you go!

Its very taste tells you Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is wholesome. A delightful taste, and delightful action. Safe for expectant mothers, and children. All druggists, ready for use, in big bottles. Member N. R. A.

MAKES YOU LOSE UNHEALTHY FAT

Make No Mistake—Fat Is Dangerous—Ask Your Doctor

To take off fat—take one half teaspoonful of Kruschen Salts in a glass of hot water in the morning before breakfast—one bottle lasts 4 weeks—get it at any drugstore in America. If this first bottle fails to convince you this is the SAFE and HARMLESS way to lose fat—your money returned.

Reduces From 154 to 128

"Less than 4 weeks ago I started taking Kruschen, I weighed 154 and felt tired out all the while. Now I weigh 128. I feel so full of energy I can't seem to work fast enough." Mrs. R. H. Hamilton, Carbondale, Pa.

While losing fat with Kruschen you gain in physical attractiveness—you look and feel younger—no more gas, acidity—no more constipation.

—23—

"Maybe not."

"Gee, Babs!" Kit's voice held a note of distress. "You don't want to be an old maid!"

"I won't be," she said, smiling faintly. "Not for a year or two." If she wouldn't keep thinking of Bruce. If there wasn't always an aching lump in her throat. . . .

They were quiet after that. Barbara lay with her arms crossed under her head, her eyes dreaming up into the shining blue of the sky. Where was Bruce? Bruce had gone. Nothing mattered. Nothing mattered at all. . . .

Kit's voice broke the lazy silence.

"Here comes Uncle Stephen," he said, springing up from the sand. "He's early today. I guess that's because we're going home."

Going home! But home was the gray-shingled house in Provincetown. She could never think of "Thornhedge" as home. They were going back tomorrow. "When the summer is over," Uncle Stephen had said. . . .

* * * * * * *

Barbara saw Uncle Stephen walking toward them down the beach, tall and erect in his bathing suit, tanned by week-ends with them at the shore. She saw Gay leave the chattering group and run to meet him. She saw Jamie racing toward him. She saw Kit, his face shining with shy excited pleasure, crowding Gay and Jamie aside. The children loved Uncle Stephen. She loved him, too. But she wanted to run away.

"How's my girl?" Stephen asked, dropping down on the sand beside her.

"Fine," she answered, crawling inside the secret shell of herself. She didn't like to hide from Uncle Stephen. But she had to, somehow. It was something she couldn't help.

The children clustered about him. There were many things to discuss. Kit's boat had a broken rudder but there was no use having it mended since they were leaving tomorrow. Sally Parrish had invited Gay to visit her in New York. Did Uncle Stephen think she might go the week-end after next? Jamie had cut his foot on a piece of broken glass. But it wasn't anything much though Sarah predicted lock-jaw. How were Henry and Katie? Had the kittens grown into cats? Did Jamie's pet frog still live in his moated castle beside the lily pond?

Barbara saw and loved his patience with the children. It was lovely to see them together, healthy and happy and brown and carefree. They wouldn't be here, of course, if it wasn't for Uncle Stephen. She could never be grateful enough.

But he didn't want her to be grateful. He wanted her to be happy. Would she be happy after a while? Would she forget about Bruce? Would the ache in her throat disappear? Perhaps—if she tried very hard.

"Run along," Stephen said presently. "I want to talk to Barbara."

"Can't we hear, too?" Gay asked.

"Come on," Kit said with a scowl for Gay. "Haven't you any manners at all?"

They scattered in various directions. Barbara sat very still. What would Uncle Stephen say? "When the summer is over. . . ."

It was about the house in Provincetown.

"I had a letter from the real estate agent," Stephen said. "Someone wants to buy it."

"Oh, Uncle Stephen!" Barbara felt a strange lonely ache in her heart. She couldn't bear the thought of selling the gray-shingled house.

"Do you mind so much?" Stephen asked, seeing a shadow slip across her face, seeing her hands clasping each other tightly.

"I loved it," she said with a little catch in her voice. She had liked to think it was waiting there, waiting for Bruce and for her.

"But you won't need it, probably," Stephen said. What was she thinking? he wondered. He knew so little about her. The summer had made no difference. She seemed more distant from him than she had in the spring. What could he do?

"No," she agreed with a little sigh. "We won't ever need it again."

"It's rather a good offer," Stephen continued. "What do you want to do?"

"Sell it, I guess." It would be hers no longer, the gray-shingled house she had loved. She wouldn't live there with Bruce. It might just as well be sold. "There'll be money," she added. "I can pay for the clothes."

"Must you?" Stephen asked, liking her independence but a little hurt as well.

"I'd feel better," she said. "That was the agreement, you know."

"Yes, I know. But I'm your guardian now."

"You weren't then." She smiled faintly. "I think that makes a difference."

Was she happy? Stephen wondered. What lay behind the smile, behind the sadness in her eyes? She was dear to him, so very dear. Should he have waited? Should he have asked her to marry him that night beside the lily pond? She had seemed so small and so very young. Was it her mother he had kissed, the Barbara he had loved a very long time ago? He had wanted to be sure. He wasn't sure, even now.

"Would you like to go to Provincetown?" he asked.

"There are some things I would like to have." The dark lashes lifted. "The bed Father made for me, his paintings, my chest. Yes, I think I'd like to go."

"We can go next week."

"All of us?"

The question hurt Stephen a little. She didn't want to be alone with him. All summer she had clung to the children. Why?

"If you like," he agreed. "Is it a good idea?"

She nodded slowly, avoiding his eyes.

"Then that's settled," he said.

Suddenly she couldn't bear the thought of losing the gray-shingled house. She felt her eyes fill with tears. But she mustn't let Uncle Stephen know. She pulled herself up from the sand.

"Let's go in swimming," she said, forcing her voice to sound gay. "I'll race you, Uncle Stephen."

She ran down the beach to the edge of the curving waves. He caught up with her as she dove through a foaming breaker.

The Tears Didn't Show Through the Water That Streaked Her Face.

"I won!" she cried, breathless, smiling.

The tears didn't show through the water that streaked her face.

* * * * * * *

The moon rose out of the ocean, making a path of silver across the waves. It shone on the cottage veranda where Stephen sat with Barbara.

"The summer is over," he said, breaking a long uneasy silence. "Have you been happy?"

"Yes," she said slowly. "I've liked it here. It's been splendid for the children."

"Do you always think first of them? I want you to think of yourself now," Stephen said gravely. "Don't consider the children."

There was something in his voice. What was he going to say? She sat very still, almost holding her breath.

"Would you like to go to Europe?" he asked, wishing that he could see her eyes.

"All of us?"

"Just you and I—and Kit, perhaps."

"Oh!" The exclamation was a soft little sound. Startled? Frightened? Happy? Stephen could not tell.

"Do I seem very old to you?" he asked.

"I don't think about your age," she said, afraid he might be hurt. She slipped her hand into his to tell him that she loved him. "I just think you're very nice."

Stephen held her hand tightly. If only he might be sure!

"Would you like to go with me—just you and I and Kit?"

She knew what he meant. She did not answer at once. It would be splendid for Kit. And Uncle Stephen was nice. Bruce had gone. Nothing else mattered at all.

"Yes," she said softly. "Yes, I would like to go."

"You know what I mean?" he asked.

"Yes, Uncle Stephen, I know."

"Will that make you happy?" he persisted. He didn't know. She sat so quietly beside him, her hand held fast in his. Wasn't she too quiet, too reasonable? What lay behind the soft notes in her voice?

"Yes," she said. She left her own chair and sat on the arm of his, wanting to feel closer to him, afraid of the queer lonely pain in her heart.

"Are you really happy?" he asked.

"Cross my heart." She made the sign on the bodice of her frock. The childish gesture touched him, and troubled him, too. Was she old enough? He thought that she was. He would be very gentle.

"We'll stay until spring," he said. "I haven't had a real vacation for years."

He had thought of it constantly during the summer. It would be easier, he had decided, to make the necessary adjustments away from home. Aunt Edith would come back to live at "Thornhedge." Gay and Jamie could be there for vacations. Aunt Edith was fond of the younger children. When they returned from Europe, Aunt Edith would have become accustomed to the idea. It seemed a sensible plan.

"Do you want to take Kit?" she asked.

"If you would like him to go." He thought that she might be unhappy without the children. He wanted her to be happy. She was dearer to him than anything in the world.

WITH Florida now on the list, 33 states have voted for repeal of the Eighteenth amendment, and only three more states are needed to put an end to national prohibition. Florida went wet by a vote of approximately 4 to 1.

GOV. ROBERT H. GORE seems to have regained his prestige in Puerto Rico. A coalition majority of union Republicans and Socialists staged a parade and mass meeting in support of the government's program, and the governor, addressing the crowd, pledged himself to work for the greater happiness and well being of the Puerto Ricans.

Part of the plan for the future, Gore said, contemplates building to prepare to meet conditions twenty years hence when the island, now overcrowded, would be burdened by a population double present figures.

INVESTIGATION of the federal hospital at Canton, S. D., revealed what Secretary of the Interior Ickes calls "sickening and intolerable" conditions and the confinement of perfectly sane Indians among the insane. Mr. Ickes issued a statement severely condemning local political and commercial interests for preventing the removal of the sane patients by obtaining an injunction from a Canton court and for bringing political pressure to bear on officials of the Indian bureau in Washington. The bureau has sought for several years to close the institution.

Sec'y Ickes

"Those responsible for securing this injunction presumably are actuated by a desire to save for Canton the revenue that continued operation of the institution there means," Mr. Ickes declared. "They appear to be willing to make a profit out of the degredation of helpless Indians. They do not object to locking up sane human beings in an insane asylum."

Conditions in the institution were revealed by Dr. Samuel A. Silk, medical director of St. Elizabeth's hospital. He conducted an investigation at the request of Secretary Ickes. His report, made public by Mr. Ickes, described the asylum as "filthy, inhuman, and revolting."

NEW YORK'S three-cornered fight for the mayoralty grows hotter daily. The registration exceeded all estimates, falling only a little short of the record for the Presidential election last year. This was interpreted by neutral observers as indicating a steadily growing revolt against Tammany and its candidate, Mayor O'Brien. La Guardia, fusion nominee, and Joseph V. McKee, independent, seemed to be well in the lead, with the latter gradually catching up with La Guardia. McKee, however, appears to have been hurt, temporarily, by charges of anti-Semitism made by La Guardia who quoted a slurring reference to Jewish students supposedly written by McKee in 1915 when he was a teacher. McKee issued a denial that he ever had attacked any race and objected to the interjection of the racial question into the campaign.

SIAM was in the throes of a rebellion, the rebels being led by Prince Bovaredej, a member of the royal family. A large force attacked the capital, Bangkok, and captured and lost the airdrome on the outskirts. The rebels were recruited from up-country districts, but late dispatches said they had been joined by the navy and that the arsenal had been seized.

NEW MEXICO has a new United States senator in the person of Carl A. Hatch, who has been serving as district judge in Santa Fe. He was appointed by the governor to succeed Samuel G. Bratton, who resigned from the senate to become a federal district judge.

FROM the newspapers and also from letters the President has been brought to a realization of the huge salaries paid to stars of the movie world and to certain of the moving picture directors. He called General Johnson on the telephone and directed him to take the matter up, find out whether these salaries are "conscionable" and do whatever should be done to level them down. Johnson turned the inquiry over to Sol A. Rosenblatt, NRA movie administrator. Dispatches received from Hollywood said the film industry was nervous over the matter, fearing the investigation would reveal secrets concerning salaries that have been kept hidden during the depression.

SENATOR JAMES J. DAVIS of Pennsylvania, director general of the Loyal Order of Moose, is at last freed of charges of violating the federal lottery law in connection with the charity balls conducted by the order. A jury in New York found Davis and Theodore G. Miller of Aurora, Ill., not guilty after a trial lasting nearly four weeks.

PHILADELPHIA police broke up what they say was a plan of the "Khaki Shirts of America" to march on Washington and install President Roosevelt as a dictator under a Fascist government. The leader, Art J. Smith, was not apprehended, and his aids now accuse him of decamping with about $25,000 of the organization's funds. When the headquarters of the "Shirts" was raided a collection of small arms and other weapons was found.

PAINE'S BELIEFS

According to a correspondent of the Cleveland Plain Dealer, many people hold an erroneous idea regarding Thomas Paine's religious beliefs. In the closing pages of the "Age of Reason," stating his beliefs, Paine says: "I believe in one God and no more; and I hope for happiness after this life." This of course implies belief in the continuance of conscious existence apart from bodily life. He was a deist, which the Standard dictionary defines as "one who believes in God, but denies supernatural revelation." Most of the "intellectuals" of his day took this position.

How Acid Stomach Makes Itself Known to You

HERE ARE THE SIGNS:
Nervousness — Frequent Headaches
Neuralgia — Feeling of Weakness
Indigestion — Sleeplessness
Loss of Appetite — Mouth Acidity
Nausea — Sour Stomach
Auto-intoxication

WHAT TO DO FOR IT:
TAKE—2 teaspoonfuls of Phillips' Milk of Magnesia in a glass of water every morning when you get up. Take another teaspoonful 30 minutes after eating. And another before you go to bed.
OR—Take the new Phillips' Milk of Magnesia Tablets—one tablet for each teaspoonful as directed above.

If you have Acid Stomach, don't worry about it. Follow the simple directions given above. This small dosage of Phillips' Milk of Magnesia acts at once to neutralize the acids that cause headache, stomach pains and other distress. Try it. You'll feel like a new person.

But—be careful you get REAL milk of magnesia when you buy—genuine PHILLIPS' Milk of Magnesia. See that the name "PHILLIPS'" is on the label.

ALSO IN TABLET FORM
Each tiny tablet is the equivalent of a teaspoonful of Genuine Phillips' Milk of Magnesia.

PASSED UP ALL FOR CLAM PIE

Delicacy That Made Hit With "Sea Devil."

Jot Small was telling me about the time Count von Luckner ("the Sea Devil") visited Commander McMillen, of Arctic fame, in Provincetown, Mass.

"Mac brought the count and some other guests over here to my Galley for supper one night," Jot related. "And I just locked the doors after they got in, so we wouldn't be disturbed by no other customers.

"Well, it was a Sat'day night, so of course the principal dish was baked beans. And after while, I got to noticing that Von Luckner didn't seem to care much for the beans. Oh, he was polite about it, all right, but he wasn't what you might call eager. He et bread and he drank coffee, and he pushed the beans and the pork around on his plate and went through the motions. But beans wasn't his dish.

"So pretty soon I whispered to Mac. 'Do you think he'd like clam pie?'

"'Try him and see what happens,' says Mac.

"So I cut a big wedge of clam pie and put it down by his plate. He looked at it, sort of uncertain, for a minute. Then he reached out his fork and cut off a little nibble. Then I seen his eyes kind of sparkle. He took a bigger bite. Then he took both hands and made a motion like a man swimmin', and pushed the beans one way and the coffee and bread the other, and pulled that pie right in front of him.

"'By Chove,' he hollered, 'I haf found someding!'

"He swallered that wedge like a logfish stealin' bait, and he held out his plate for more. That happened three times, and then he'd et the hull dam pie. And every time he'd finish a piece, he'd say, 'By Chove, I haf found someding!'

"He'll be droppin' his hook in these waters again, some day. Because he's goin' to have a heck of a time tryin' to teach 'em to make clam pie in Germany!"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Vast Pampa Source of Welfare in Argentina

Argentina, richest of South American countries, draws its wealth from the pampa—a rockless, treeless sea of grass, 2,800 miles long and 900 miles wide, grazed by millions of head of stock. Fecund, half-wild herds of horses and cattle, seed of the conquistadores' mounts and milk cows, have been scientifically bred up to the stable and the abattoir.

Calmer herds, tamer men. Almost gone is the gaucho, cowboy son of Spanish settler and Indian squaw. Apotheosis of the type was Dictator Juan Manuel Rosas, who a century ago routed the Indians, united his countrymen, and ruled in a palace, with a court jester. On the pampas only the pampero (cold wind, rain or hail storms) and locust plagues remain fiercely primitive.

Buenos Aires, with its 2,000,000, is Paris, Chicago and pampa in one. Quite effete now, it no longer flaunts in its Boca section advertisements of cheap, expeditious murder by expert assassins. For safety and comfort, wheeled traffic is barred from the city's shopping district between 4 and 8 p. m.—World's Work.

TRY THIS!
When children won't eat—and won't gain weight—

The youngster who has no appetite, probably has stasis. A little syrup of figs will soon correct this condition—then watch the child eat—and gain!

Mothers should never coax a child to eat. Nature knows best. Remove the cause of a youngster's poor appetite—get rid of stasis. Children who don't eat are sluggish. Read what the "California treatment" is doing for sluggish, listless children in every part of the country!

A POUND A WEEK. Your child will eat well from the day and hour you conquer sluggishness. But that girl or boy with furry tongue and a bad breath should not be dosed with salts!

Begin tonight, with enough pure syrup of figs to cleanse the colon thoroughly. Less tomorrow, then every other day, or twice a week, until the appetite, digestion, weight, complexion, tell you the stasis is gone. When a cold or other ailment has again clogged the system, syrup of figs will soon set things to right.

When appetite fails, tongue is coated white, eyes are a bilious yellow, California syrup of figs will gently stimulate the colon muscles—and the child you used to coax to eat will fairly devour his food.

The claims made for California Syrup of Figs are true and it will do the same for you—IF you get genuine CALIFORNIA Syrup of Figs. Don't accept any substitute.

News of Minnesota
EVENTS of the week throughout the "State of Ten Thousand Lakes" told in brief form

St. Paul—First state automobile drivers' licenses will be issued October 27.

Fergus Falls—The ninth district branch of the Minnesota Association of Local Creameries was organized.

Waseca—The North Waseca Lutheran church had a celebration of its 75th anniversary, an event which continued two days.

Hawley—Alebrt J. Anderson, a farmer living 16 miles south of Hawley, reports a yield of 388 bushels of potatoes to the acre.

St. Paul—The state conservation commission, by a vote of 4 to 1, requested Governor Floyd B. Olson to declare a five-day open season on deer the latter part of November.

Kimball—Citizens of Kimball voted at a special election to authorize issuance of bonds for a waterworks system. The vote was 170 votes in favor as compared with 102 opposed.

Harmony—William Rossman, 32-year-old Fillmore county farmer, shot and killed his wife and then killed himself on the farm of a neighbor, Bert Steven, nine miles southwest of here.

Minneapolis—Speaking before the Hennepin County Republican Women's Club, Ray P. Chase renewed his plea for an issue of currency to retire $8,200,000,000 of first and fourth Liberty Loan bonds.

Elbow Lake—This community received a grant of $8,000 from the public works administration. The allotment is to aid in the construction of a combined auditorium and public library building.

St. Paul—When the grounds are closed at The Century of Progress exposition in Chicago the latter part of this month, Minnesota's exhibit at the world's fair will be moved immediately to the Twin Cities.

St. Paul—The public works projects approved by the federal government, providing jobs for 1,000 men for 25 weeks, will get under way immediately, William N. Carey, state engineer for the public works administration, said.

Minneapolis—Restaurants with a high standing which have operated for a year or more should be permitted to sell liquor upon final repeal of the eighteenth amendment, the Minnesota liquor control executive committee was told.

St. Paul—Claims that the state game and fish department has mishandled its funds to the extent of more than $1,000,000 in the past three years were made by the Izaak Walton league in a new onslaught on policies of the Minnesota conservation commissio.

St. Paul—Brewers of the state want 3.2 per cent beer handled entirely apart from all other liquor when prohibition is repealed, and object even to any arrangement permitting wine to be served in places where beer is served, the state liquor committee was informed.

St. Paul—A five-day open season on deer in nine northern counties, from Nov. 21 to 25, was proclaimed by the governor. One deer of either sex may be taken during the five days in St. Louis, Cook, Lake, Koochiching, Itasca, Beltrami, Lake of the Woods, Pine and Carlton counties.

Stillwater—While thousands of persons from Friendly Valley lined the shores of the St Croix river and the bridge linking Minnesota and Wisconsin, "Old Man Gloom" was burned at the stake on a sandbar in the river here as Stillwater conducted the opening night's ceremonies of its three-day harvest festival.

Hibbing—Rain came to the rescue of an exhausted crew of volunteer fire fighters and saved all but one of 22 summer homes, practically all of them owned by Hibbing residents, on the west side of Pokegama lake. The fire devastated a heavy growth of virgin timber on an estimated area of from 600 to 1,000 acres of state-owned land.

St. Paul—Governor Olson may call a special session of the state legislature to handle the liquor problem considerably earlier than the December 11 date he has had in mind. The governor was reported to have advanced the time for calling the session to December 5, with members of the legislature already urging him to call it November, with some recommendations putting the date at November 15.

Holdingford—George Rapp of Holdingford is the 1933 state champion buttermaker of Minnesota. His selection was announced in Minneapolis when the Minnesota Creamery Operators' and Managers' association held its fortieth annual convention. In winning the title, Mr. Rapp chalked up an average score of 94.67. He took the state crown from a friend, Walter Schriver of Sauk Center, state champion in 1931 and 1932 and a national champion last year. Mr. Schriver won in district No. 8 this year with an average score of 94.25.

Balance of Acid Kept by Nature

Necessary Substance for Body's Welfare Found in Most Foods.

Housewives who may have been concerned over the presence or absence of acids in the diet will find their perplexities lessened by this authoritative explanation:

"Will you please tell me what fruits and cereals have no acid reaction? This is a question which comes very often to this column, probably because there is a common misconception of the importance of considering the acid-base qualities of foods in choosing a good diet.

"Before I answer the question I should make plain the fact that many foods which are acid in digestion are the opposite after absorption. The outstanding examples of this are lemons and other citrus fruits. After digestion and absorption we find the foods which give an alkaline reaction are, first of all, most of the fruits and vegetables. Milk and cream are slightly alkaline. Meats, fish and eggs give an acid reaction after digestion. Cereals are slightly acid. Fats, sugars and starches are neutral.

"You can easily see that in the ordinary diet a balance of acid and base is almost automatically provided. This balance is necessary for body welfare, and, although we are considering a practically impossible situation, it would be fatal for us to be deprived of foods which are acid in reaction.

"The digestive mechanism of the body is so delicately and efficiently adjusted that it maintains a 'buffer' system in the blood and also an alkaline reserve stored in the body which is called upon to neutralize any excess acid which we may occasionally take into the body through food. The 'buffer' quality of the blood seems to be independent of the food we eat, but the alkaline reserve is supplied by the potentially alkaline foods we eat.

"The acids formed in the digestion of food are excreted by the skin, the lungs, the kidneys and the feces. It is very important to keep all these natural functions in normal active condition. The inclusion of fruits and vegetables in liberal amounts in the diet and the drinking of goodly quantities of water have a distinct influence upon the matter and are probably much more important to our bodily welfare on this account than because the resulting products of their digestion are base or acid. Dr. Henry Sherman, professor of chemistry at Columbia university and one of the leaders in the field of nutrition, states in the new addition of his 'Chemistry of Food and Nutrition' (Macmillan, 1932): 'The writer desires to repeat the statement that in his judgment it is still an open question whether the acid-base balance of the mineral elements of the diet is or is not of practical significance in human nutrition. The benefit to health which so generally results from the use of diets consisting largely of fruits, vegetables and milk may perhaps be attributable in part to the fact that these foods yield alkaline residues when oxidized in the body; but also there are several other ways in which the eating of liberal amounts of these foods is apt to be beneficial, notably by enriching the diet in calcium, phosphorous, iron and vitamins and by improving the intestinal conditions.'

"In effect, do not worry about whether the foods you eat are basic or acid. Choose a well-rounded diet containing plenty of fruit and vegetables and 'acidosis' will take care of itself."

Orange Date Bread.

1½ cups white flour
6 teaspoons baking powder
1½ teaspoons salt
½ cup sugar
1 cup (½ package) sliced dates
½ cup candied orange peel
1 egg
1½ cups milk
1½ cups whole wheat flour

Sift the white flour, baking powder and salt together. Add whole wheat flour and sugar. Mix the dates and orange peel through the flour with the fingertips. Beat the egg; add the milk, and stir liquid into the dry ingredients. Beat the batter thoroughly and pour the mixture into a well-oiled loaf pan. Bake in a moderate oven, 325 degrees Fahrenheit, for one hour.

WELL I PUT OVER THE DEAL! AND I CAN THANK THE QUICK WORK OF THAT BAYER ASPIRIN YOU SUGGESTED
OH, THAT'S WONDERFUL, MR. JONES, I KNEW IT'D WORK!

Real BAYER Aspirin "Takes Hold" of Pain in Few Minutes

Now comes amazingly quick relief from headaches, rheumatism, neuritis, neuralgia . . . the fastest safe relief, it is said, yet discovered.

Those results are due to a scientific discovery by which a Bayer Aspirin Tablet begins to dissolve, or disintegrate, in the amazing space of two seconds after touching moisture. And hence to start "taking hold" of pain a few minutes after taking.

The illustration of the glass, here, tells the story. A Bayer Tablet starts to disintegrate almost instantly you swallow it. And thus is ready to go to work almost instantly.

When you buy, though, see that you get the Genuine BAYER Aspirin. For Bayer Aspirin's quick relief always say "BAYER Aspirin."

WHY BAYER ASPIRIN WORKS SO FAST

Drop a Bayer Tablet in a glass of water. Note that BEFORE it touches bottom, it has started to disintegrate.

What it does in this glass it does in your stomach. Hence its fast action.

Does Not Harm the Heart

Upper Grades

These eighth graders have attained 100 per cent accuracy in working with percentage:

Opal Sanoden, Lowell Sovde, Bernice Kolden, Lorraine Engebretson.

The original plays presented on Friday by the seventh graders were very much enjoyed. We all enjoyed their party also.

Lorraine had an A paper in the eighth grade Social Science quiz Tuesday.

The pupils in our room will take the Columbia Achievement tests this year. There will be four tests given thruout the year in each of the major subjects.

The sixth graders have been making much use of pictures in connection with their study of the Netherlands.

Grades III, IV, and V

We are target shooting in spelling. The children who shot their arrows the highest were:

Lois Hanson, Lorene Fluke, Roy Hagberg, Gladys Nelson, and Marian Olson. They had 100 last Friday.

We were entertained at a Hallowe'en party in the primary room on Tuesday. Pumpkin pie was served. We all enjoyed the party very much.

Grades I and II

The following children had 100 in Spelling last Friday:

Oliver, Alma, and Yvonne.

We had a Hallowe'en party for the children of Miss Lanman's room on Tuesday.

We have divided our spelling class into two groups; namely, the Indians and the Pilgrims. So far the Indians have the highest average. The Pilgrims are trying hard to get ahead of them by Friday.

This week we are studying the squirrel in Nature class.

Death of S. H. Nohre

The people of this community were shocked on Tuesday afternoon to hear of the sudden death of S. H. Nohre. He had been sick only a few days with blood poisoning which was started by a bad tooth he had pulled. While fighting hard to overcome that he contracted pneumonia and was very sick but doctors checked both cases and he appeared to be getting better when his heart failed and he started sinking fast, passing away at two o'clock Tuesday afternoon at his farm home here. His entire family and his brother Oliver H. Nohre besides other relatives were at his bedside when the angel of death called him home.

Mr. Nohre came here with his family several years ago from Spring Grove, Minnesota and has since been actively engaged in farming. He has also served as a member of boards of directors of several local organizations and as trustee of the Nazareth Lutheran church. He was a kind father and husband and as a neighbor took part in many worthy projects in the community.

He was 56 years old. He was a member of the Nazareth Lutheran church. Funeral services will be held from the church here on Monday afternoon.

Harnessing Niagara

FOR untold ages "Wild waters leaping down a mountain side" produced the indescribably-beautiful spectacle now known as Niagara falls, but the tremendous energy (estimated to be 6,000,000 horse power), which was inherent in the tumbling of the Niagara river over this 164-feet-high precipice flowed away unused—wasted.

In an attempt to create power from this water a canal which diverted some water from above the fall to a point at the top of the gorge below the fall was dug in 1852. This water dropping upon water wheels turned machinery which ground flour.

The coming of electricity as power and the increased use of power spurred the imagination and ingenuity of master men toward improvement and expansion. Today, all waters which the federal water-power commission will permit to be diverted are used in a world-famous power-development plant which produces almost half-a-million horse power.

Water now diverted pours into a concrete-lined tunnel 32-feet in diameter and 4,300-feet long, cut through solid rock, rotates turbine generators and returns to the river. The electricity thus produced is sent by means of some 1,300 miles of transmission lines to users of light and power in 142 communities scattered through seventeen counties in New York state. The majority of homes in the nation probably reap an indirect benefit through the purchase and use of materials or commodities which are made available by this outstanding power project, while the development of this power by water creates an estimated conservation of $25,000,000 worth of coal annually.

Safetygrams
BY FRED W. BRAUN
© The Safety Man

Safety education is a very important item in our schools today. It should be taught to all classes. Teaching or preaching safety, however, is not enough. If the only thing a child gets out of safety education is a bundle of facts he can recite to the teacher or visitors, I don't believe we have taught him a thing. He must "do" what he is being taught—he must do what people preach to him. A famous author once said, "I have quit trying to BE good, but I have not quit trying to DO good."

That is the thought. Cultivate safe habits in the children thru safety education. Safety education must, of course, be based on intelligence and facts and ideals, but it must have coupled with that desirable and safe habits.

Safety education is a conception of life or a state of mind. It must, however, at the same time create a machine or a thought for building efficient and safe conduct.

The Weather

After a week of pretty good weather last week, old man winter sent us a call last Saturday morning that he was coming on to stay for the rest of the season. The first greeting was a heavy snow storm which started early Saturday morning and which kept on until we now have about eight inches of snow.

There are still some optimistic fellows whom let us know that they are still skeptical about the snow remaining. Their contentions being held to the fact that as the ground was not froze much, it will require only a little hot sunshine and wind to let you see where you left off plowing.

A good sized crowd attended the benefit dance here on Saturday evening.

Theo. Ness and Richard Lorentson made a business trip to the Twin Cities this week.

Mr. and Mrs. C. Kroke from Stephen spent Sunday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. Burtness.

Five cars of cattle and sheep were shipped out from here on Saturday. This will probably be the last shipment of so many cars at one time as it seems that the farmers have cleaned up their herds for winter.

We are this week mailing out a small supplement which we have recieved from the American Red Cross and thru which they are asking you to join and also shows you some of the work that they are doing throughout the states.

Deer Hunters Warned To Exercise Caution

Added caution will be necessary on the part of deer hunters who take to the woods in nine northern Minnesota counties during the five day open season this month. The increased peril that will exist during the short season is due to two reasons. First, because of the curtailed season, hunters will be concentrated which will bring added menace to the hunters. Secondly, several Emergency Conservation Work camps are located in the open territory with hundreds of workers in the woods.

Modern high-powered rifles carry for miles, W. D. Stewart, Game and Fish Director, points out. "Hunters should exercise special care in determining that their bullets will not carry into country outside their range of vision. Promiscuous shooting should be banned altogether, more so this season than in years past," he continued.

Grover Conzet, Director of the Division of Forestry and Fire Prevention, has issued a warning to the Emergency Conservation workers. Mr. Conzet offers several suggestions that may be used to assist in eliminating accidents. He states that "it is most important that the greatest care be taken that no accidents occur to any of the men working in the camps and all deer hunters should be doubly careful in the matter of handling and using firearms in localities where the camps are located or work is being done."

The deer season is from sunrise November 21 to sundown November 25 in Cook, St. Louis, Koochiching, Itasca, Beltrami, Lake of the Woods, Pine and Carlton Counties.

Many Turkey Buyers Here

Several local business institutions here are this week setting machinery in motion for buying dressed turkeys. The Farmers Cooperative Creamery are quoting the following prices: No. 1 young toms and hens 12c; No. 2 old hens 9c; No. 1 old toms and No. 2 turkeys 8c; No. 1 ducks 7c and No. 2 ducks 5c; No. 1 geese 5c and No. 2 geese 4c.

The Carlson Mercantile Company whom bought ten carloads of dressed turkeys last year, were the first buyers to receive bird here. They started buying yesterday and got in several lots of birds from local farmers.

R. C. Daly is doing the grading for them and they expect a big run as there are more turkeys in the community this year then there were last year.

Herman Peterson, Olaf Ness, H. O. Hanson and R. Reierson made a business trip to the Twin Cities on Saturday and returned home Wednesday.

OysterSupper Tonight

The Nazareth Lutheran Ladies Aid are giving a big oyster supper in the church basement on Friday evening, Nov. 10. The Dorcas Society will have their sale of fancy goods at the same time. The public is invited.

HERE ARE THE SIGNS:
Nervousness — Frequent Headaches
Neuralgia — Feeling of Weakness
Indigestion — Sleeplessness
Loss of Appetite — Mouth Acidity
Nausea — Sour Stomach
Auto-intoxication

WHAT TO DO FOR IT:
TAKE—2 teaspoonfuls of Phillips' Milk of Magnesia in a glass of water every morning when you get up. Take another teaspoonful 30 minutes after eating. And another before you go to bed.
OR—Take the new Phillips' Milk of Magnesia Tablets — one tablet for each teaspoonful as directed above.

If you have Acid Stomach, don't worry about it. Follow the simple directions given above. This small dosage of Phillips' Milk of Magnesia acts at once to neutralize the acids that cause headache, stomach pains and other distress. Try it. You'll feel like a new person.

But—be careful you get REAL milk of magnesia when you buy—genuine PHILLIPS' Milk of Magnesia. See that the name "PHILLIPS'" is on the label.

GET THAT KRUSCHEN FEELING

Gain Physical Attractiveness — Be Free From Constipation, Gas, Acidity and Liver Troubles

Here's the recipe that banishes fat and brings into blossom all the natural attractiveness that every woman possesses.

Every morning take one half teaspoonful of Kruschen Salts in a glass of hot water before breakfast—cut down on pastry and fatty meats—go light on potatoes, butter, cream and sugar—in 4 weeks get on the scales and note how many pounds of fat have vanished.

Notice also that you have gained in energy—your skin is clearer—your eyes sparkle with glorious health—you feel younger in body—keener in mind. Kruschen will give any fat person a joyous surprise.

Get a jar of Kruschen Salts—the cost is trifling and it lasts 4 weeks. If even this first jar doesn't convince you this is the easiest, safest and surest way to lose fat—if you don't feel a superb improvement in health—so gloriously energetic—vigorously alive—your money returned.

But be sure for your health's sake that you ask for and get Kruschen Salts. Get them at any drugstore in the world.

President Announces His Plan for Managed Currency and Commodity Price Raising—Farmers' Strike Under Way—Move for Recognition of Russia.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

SOMEWHERE between the "sound" dollar demanded by the banker and the inflated currency urged by Senator Elmer Thomas and many others President Roosevelt takes his stand for a managed currency and a dollar of fixed value. In a radio address to the nation he declared he would undertake to raise commodity prices to a satisfactory level and then would lessen the gold content of the dollar and peg prices and dollars so they would remain in a constantly balanced equation. "Government credit will be maintained and a sound currency will accompany a rise in the American commodity price level," he said; but he insisted the price level must first be restored before anything like inflation is established.

President Roosevelt

For the present, Mr. Roosevelt said, it was important to tighten control over the dollar. He added:

"As a further effective means to this end I am going to establish a government market for gold in the United States. Therefore, under the clearly defined authority of existing law, I am authorizing the Reconstruction Finance corporation to buy gold newly mined in the United States at prices to be determined from time to time after consultation with the secretary of the treasury and the President. Whenever necessary to the end in view we shall also buy or sell gold in the world market.

"My aim in taking this step is to establish and maintain continuous control. This is a policy and not an expedient. It is not to be used merely to offset a temporary fall in prices. We are thus continuing to move toward a managed currency.

"Our dollar is now altogether too greatly influenced by the accidents of international trade, by the internal policies of other nations and by political disturbance in other continents. Therefore, the United States must take firmly in its own hands the control of the gold value of our dollar. This is necessary in order to prevent dollar disturbances from swinging us away from our ultimate goal, namely, the continued recovery of our commodity prices."

The President's monetary program is based on the plan of John Maynard Keynes, the British economist. Orthodox bankers in Wall street were rather disconcerted by it. Some were skeptical as to the practicability of controlling the internal price level by changes in the gold value of the currency; others thought the plan would give the government a powerful lever with which to lift prices.

If carried to its logical conclusion, the program means the ultimate fixation of the value of the dollar with a diminished gold content, the resumption of f[illegible]ade in gold, and of gold redemptions, doubtless on a bullion basis.

Senator Thomas interpreted the proposal as a "promise" of the administration to the country to devalue the dollar in terms of commodities. Such has been the goal of inflationists from the start, he said.

IN HIS radio address the President told of the "relief that is being given to those who are in danger of losing their farms or their homes," and later said: "I have been amazed by the extraordinary degree of co-operation given to the government by the cotton farmers in the South, the wheat farmers of the West, the tobacco farmers of the Southeast, and I am confident that the corn hog farmers of the Middle West will come through in the same magnificent fashion."

Milo Reno

There was, however, nothing in the speech that reassured the farmers who have embarked on a national agricultural strike. Milo Reno, president of the National Farmers' Holiday association, declared the strike would continue despite Mr. Roosevelt's assurances of higher farm prices.

"The President failed to even mention cost of production," he pointed out. "We're not going to stop this battle until we get what we want and have demanded—cost of production."

Mr. Reno reported that the Continental Congress of Workers and Farmers and the Technocratic Federation of the World for Industrial Democracy had proffered their co-operation in the strike, and said that he was confident the farmers themselves would join the nonselling movements in "great numbers."

At that time the farm leaders in six states—Iowa, North Dakota, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Oklahoma and Nebraska—had officially proclaimed the strike, and picketing of the highways had begun in some localities. Here is what Reno's association called for from the farmers:

1—Refusal to sell any grain, produce, live stock, milk, butter, eggs, etc., except for prices equal to the cost of production, but willingness on the other hand to exchange such products for whatever labor and the unemployed may have to tender.

2—Refusal to purchase groceries, merchandise, etc., except as necessary to sustenance and unobtainable otherwise.

3—Refusal to leave their homes, a tantamount defiance of mortgage foreclosures and eviction orders.

4—Refusal to meet capital payments on debts until prices reach production cost levels.

5—Refusal to pay taxes or interest on debts out of money needed for food, clothing and other necessities.

Meanwhile the embargo on wheat shipments out of the state of North Dakota, proclaimed by Gov. William Langer, went into effect.

THAT code for retailers so long in the making was finally completed and signed by the President. It seeks to insure fair practice and to protect the small tradesman, the consumer and the farmer with his low commodity prices. Retail employers with fewer than five persons on the payroll are exempt from the code. Those in communities of less than 2,500 population are exempt from any markup requirements. Local tribunals are to be established to hear complaints of retail profiteering. Child labor is forbidden, with certain exceptions, and the same applies to sales at a loss.

"Loss leaders," widely used by chain stores to attract customers, are absolutely prohibited "in order to prevent unfair competition against local merchants."

Under a comprehensive plan for working hours and wages, stores may choose to operate in one of three groups, having a choice of remaining open for from 52 to 56 hours a week; from 56 to 63 hours a week; or for more than 63 hours a week. Employees in the first group will work not more than 40 hours a week; in the second group, 44 hours a week; in the third group, 48 hours a week.

Minimum wages range from $15 for a 48-hour week in cities of more than 500,000 population down to a requirement for a 20 per cent raise and minimum wage of $10 a week in places with less than 2,500 population.

MAXIM LITVINOV, foreign commissar of Russia, probably already is on his way to Washington in response to the invitation extended to President Kalinin by President Roosevelt to open negotiations looking to the recognition of the Soviet government by the United States and to the adjustment of other matters at issue between the two nations. Administration officials in Washington believe the conversations will take about two weeks and that before the end of the year the President and Litvinov will announce the resumption of normal relations between the two countries and the establishment of a large credit for the Soviet republic to make purchases in this country.

M. Litvinov

Though in giving out the correspondence President Roosevelt said he was not committed to recognition of the Soviet government, it is said that preliminary soundings had satisfied him that Russia's desire for American recognition is a concomitant to its desire to obtain credits for the purchase of American goods. The administration is prepared to join in the development of reasonable credit facilities for the quick disposition of accumulated surpluses in cotton, meat products, copper and other raw materials. There are other problems that must first be solved, such as the czarist debts and the Communist propaganda, but the administration believes these can be speedily cleared up.

ONE billion dollars for the liquidation of closed banks is not enough, in the opinion of various politicians and persons of influence who believe the depositors in such institutions should be paid in full; so in response to strong pressure the administration may greatly increase the amount of money to be supplied by the government for this purpose.

Undersecretary Dean G. Acheson of the treasury said depositors need not expect 100 per cent payment but that additional loans might be arranged when and as assets of the closed banks justified further grants from the treasury. He indicated that such loans could be expected to be made if recovery showed continued progress.

C. B. Merriam, Reconstruction Finance corporation director in charge of the billion-dollar liquidation program, in a letter to district managers of the liquidation plan, wrote:

"If the condition of a closed bank's assets will justify it, more than one distribution will be made as and when assets improve in value."

Scraps of Humor

TRULY TERRIBLE

"You must have had a terrible experience, with no food to eat and mosquitoes swarming round you," said a sympathetic friend to a mariner who had been cast away upon a tropical island.

"I had a terrible experience," the seaman acknowledged. "My case was worse than that of the man who wrote 'Water, water everywhere, nor any drop to drink.' It was 'Bites, bites everywhere, nor any bite to eat.'"

'Oops!

"Your husband evidently is the kind of man who brings home the bacon," remarked the caller.

"Bacon!" sniffed Mrs. DeSnob. "I should say not. We never have anything as common as bacon, and besides, our chef orders all our meat and has it delivered."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

When It Hurt

"A friend of mine is the most absent-minded person you ever saw."

"Well, it doesn't hurt him any, does it?"

"It hurt him today when he swallowed a dime and gave a bus conductor a pill for his fare."

"Senator," remarked a confidential friend, "do you propose to run for office again?"

"Of course, I do!" replied Senator Sorghum.

"Don't you think you had better say something about your attitude on political questions?"

"M'yes. It might be well to remind people of my existence. But there is too much uncertainty to warrant my taking sides on any topic. For the present I guess I'd better stick to loving my country on general principles."

Give Him Time

"How old are you, sonny?" asked the inquisitive old man of the little boy on the beach.

"Six," came the brisk reply.

"Six," echoed the old man; "and yet you are not so tall as my umbrella!"

The boy drew himself up to his full height.

CHANCE TO GO "BACK TO SOIL"

Uncle Sam Disposing of His Back Yard.

If the people are going back to the soil, it can also be said that Uncle Sam is giving the public domain back to the people. All fences are being removed and his back yard is open again.

A new effort is being made to redistribute overbalance of population in industrial centers.

One of the largest sections of vacant acreage is in the Golden state—15,712,567 acres.

Nevada seems to have the largest open territory—51,221,934. Utah still has 25,197,820 acres. Arizona, New Mexico, Oregon, Wyoming and other western states still have vast areas of unpossessed soil. Florida is the only eastern state with any possibilities for the homesteader—32,303 acres.

There need be no great hurry about packing up and rushing off to seize this land either in the West or East, however. A great deal of it is without water other than rainfall—and the rains are apt to be scarce. A lot is in the form of mountain and desert and some is swamp land. Most of the desirable territory is taken.

Uncle Sam has already disposed of 250,000,000 acres to homesteaders, 400,000,000 acres in sales and about 140,000,000 to railroads, highways and canals. And his grants to states cover 181,000,060 acres.

He started out with 1,442,200,320 acres of unoccupied land in the beginning. This has shrunk to 173,818,246 acres. This does not include 85,184,712 acres withdrawn for various purposes and 135,952,948 acres in national forests. National parks and monuments take up 6,231,186 acres more, and 56,676,535 arces are still in Indian reservations.—Los Angeles Times.

Warning to Drivers

The most dramatic warning of reckless motorists is the "wreck" which is staged at dangerous spots along the highways of England. This gruesome scene, which is set on one side of the road, consists of two wrecked and overturned cars with several dummies realistically sprawled nearby.—Collier's Weekly.

Soap's Washing Power the Important Factor

By RUBY BAKER

Fresh, snowy-white washings—the kind that make the neighbors look and admire—are easier to get than many a woman imagines.

Much depends on the quality of the soap you use. Since it's the soap that does the actual cleansing, you'll find it pays to use a good soap rather than a "cheap" one. As one housewife recently put it:

"I never thought that the kind of soap I put into my tub mattered very much. Yet I used to rub and rub, and still my clothes always looked dingy. Then, I found that it was wiser to be fussy and get real quality for my soap money. After that, I had marvelous results."

Quality, of course, does not mean size or form or color. It means the washing power of the cleansing agents in a soap—the ability to pitch right in and get out the dirt—without hard rubbing and without harm to the fabric.

If your soap is made of fine ingredients, it doesn't matter what form it is. And it's well to remember that thorough cleanness—not the color of soap—makes clothes white.

Generator Charging

Tests have proved that a high generator charging rate not only is bad for the generator, but causes an excessively rapid rate of evaporation of water in the battery.

TO MOTHERS whose children won't EAT

Nature knows best. Never coax a child to eat! Remove the cause of a youngster's poor appetite. When appetite fails, tongue is coated white, eyes are a bilious yellow, don't give small children a constipating cathartic that drains the system. California syrup of figs is all the "medicine" they require.

Specialists will tell you that a sluggish appetite almost always means the child has a sluggish colon. Correct this condition called stasis, and see how quickly a listless, drooping boy or girl begins to eat—and gain! The only "medicine" such children seem to need is pure, unadulterated fig syrup.

Children who get syrup of figs, now and then, soon have the appetite and energy of young animals! They keep well and avoid colds and sluggish spells.

Nature never made a finer laxative for children; and they all love the wholesome, fruity flavor of the real California syrup of figs. It's purely vegetable, but every druggist has it all bottled, with directions. Begin with it at once. The very next day, your child will be eating better and feeling better. Keep on with the syrup of figs a few days and see amazing improvement in appetite, color, weight, and spirits.

The promises made by the bottlers of California Syrup of Figs are true, and it will do the same for you, IF it's genuine CALIFORNIA. Don't accept substitutes.

News of Minnesota
Events of the week throughout the "State of Ten Thousand Lakes" told in brief form

Slayton—The federal farm loan office here has received applications for more than $400,000.

Frazee—A son was born to Mrs. Charles Retzlaff, wife of the heavyweight boxer. The youngster weighs 12 pounds.

St. Paul—Minnesota leads all other states in the nation in the number of highway projects approved and the total contracts awarded.

Le Center—William L. Diets of Lanesburg township was chosen president of the Le Sueur County Wheat Production Control Association.

Pierz—Four armed bandits raided three cafes of $700 in loot from slot machines, cash tills and merchandise and gagged and bound a watchman.

Sauk Center—At a recent mass meeting of taxpayers, the proposed bond issue for the purpose of installing a sewage disposal plant was discussed.

Caledonia—The Civilian Conservation Corps camp at Caledonia is under state quarantine for infantile paralysis following discovery of a case there.

Duluth—The thousands of books in Duluth public libraries will be unread for six weeks beginning November 1. Lack of funds in the city budget has forced closing.

Granite Falls—The state convention of the Minnesota Farmers Education and Co-operative union will be held at the high school auditorium here November 2 and 3.

St. Paul—A move to stop foreclosures on farms where federal land bank loan applications are pending was made by Roy T. Crowley, agent of the farm credit administration.

Ellsworth—"No trespasing" and "no hunting" are usual, but not so the signs displayed by Charles Lyons, farmer in Kanaransi township, which read: "Good Hunting—You're Welcome."

Holt—Kuriko lake, an old-time landmark east of here, and at the time of the first homesteaders here more than 50 years ago a quite large sheet of water and considered bottomless, has gone dry.

Duluth—The Duluth city council voted to make immediate application to the federal emergency administration for $3,700,000 for construction of a toll bridge or tunnel between Duluth and Superior.

St. Paul—To prove that Minnesota is a great potato state and that its people should develop the habit of using Minnesota potatoes, Governor Floyd B. Olson has designated October 30 to November 4 as Minnesota Potato Week.

St. Paul—Gov. Floyd B. Olson resigned as state administrator of the NRA in Minnesota on the ground that recent setups of local boards and agencies for insuring compliance with the codes obviates any further necessity for action on his part.

Brainerd—Five bandits waited in the First National Bank from 6 in the morning until 9, waiting for the time lock to open the vaults. Every employee was promptly odered to the floor upon arriving and the robbers escaped with $32,000 in cash.

Duluth—To fight blister rust in the northeast Minnesota pine woods, E. B. Dahl was named rust control agent with headquarters at Duluth, by L. B. Ritter, state leader. At the same time, J. H. Ayars was appointed agent for northwestern Minnesota with headquarters at Bemidji.

St. Paul—Arthur J. McGuire, for 11 years general manager of Land O'Lakes Creameries, Inc., largest dairy co-operative in the United States, died after a brief illness. He was 50 years old. Called the "father of co-operative marketing in Minnesota," Mr. McGuire was consulted frequently by sponsors of similar movements all over the world, and was known personally to virtually every creamery operator in the northwest.

Canby—A large crew of men now are constructing a new grade over which Trunk Highway No. 6 will enter Canby from the south. In connection with the new grade a place is being cleared to be known as Canby lake. Earth to the amount of 2,000 cubic yards a day is being moved by the road builders and a total of 25,000 yards of earth will be moved in building the grade. The lake bed now being formed will be from one to nine feet deep.

Detroit Lakes—More than 500 persons will gather in Detroit Lakes November 1 and 2 to attend the annual convention of the Red River Valley Dairymen's association.

Boyd—The unemployment situation is being improved as a result of the work of eight business men of the town. They formed an organization and purchased the timber on an eight-acre tract near Boyd. The timber is being cut by men in need of work and moved into town to be sawed and divided among the cutters and the owners of the wood.

—24—

"It will be splendid for Kit," she said and Stephen knew that he had judged correctly. She didn't want to be entirely alone with him. Had he misunderstood her impulsive "I do love you, Uncle Stephen!" that night beside the lily pond? But she had no interest in boys. She had discouraged them all summer, had seemed to be content with the children and him. The children and him. That, of course, was the source of his anxieties and doubts.

"Barbara," he said.

"Yes? . . ."

Her arm was around his neck. He felt her hair, silky and soft, brushing against his cheek. Barbara's hair would have felt like that—the Barbara he had loved. Why did he think of her when the younger Barbara was there beside him, close and warm and fragrant? Was it her mother he loved? It troubled him to realize that he couldn't be quite sure.

"You mustn't do this for me," he said gravely. "Or for the children. You must think of yourself."

But it didn't matter about her. Bruce had gone. The silver flute was silent, lost perhaps. It would never play again, "I love you, pretty gypsy girl with the roses in your hair." Bruce was lost, the lovely things they had planned . . .

"We'll count the stars through our skylight and every morning for breakfast I'll sing you a brand-new song."

"Bruce! A new one every day!"

"And a special one for Sundays."

—And heart-shaped gates to keep away
The world and all its cares
From one small table, dear,
And two small chairs, . . .

The gates hadn't been strong enough. Bruce was gone. It hadn't been her fault or his. It was something that had happened. Uncle Stephen loved her. He had done so much for the children. She could never be grateful enough.

"I want to," she said with a little catch in her voice. "I do love you, Uncle Stephen!"

"Darling!" He drew her down from the arm of the chair, held her close in his arms. Doubts and uncertainties vanished while she lay there against his heart. He thought of taking her to Europe. They would revisit the village in southern France. There, with this younger Barbara, he would find the romance he had missed. She loved him, he was sure of that. She seemed content to lie against his heart.

"Darling," he said huskily. "You are dearer to me than anything in the world."

"I love you, Uncle Stephen," she said with a soft little quivering sigh.

Stephen did not hear the sigh. It did not seem odd to him that she called him "Uncle Stephen." His lips were against her hair, soft and silky and faintly scented.

CHAPTER XV

The car rolled smoothly along the Cape Cod road. Gay and Jamie, bouncing with excitement, sat on the front seat with Thomas. Stephen sat on the back seat between Barbara and Kit. They were excited, too. But they were very quiet. Stephen knew by their eyes, by their hands slipped into his, what it meant to them to be going home.

It had been raining when they left Boston. Half way out the cape the clouds shredded themselves away, leaving patches of clear blue sky. When they reached Hyannis, the sun was shining and the sky was blue all over, as blue as a robin's egg.

"Doesn't it smell lovely?" Barbara said smiling her April smile.

"Mmm!" Kit agreed, a flush in his thin dark cheeks, his hazel eyes very bright. "I had forgotten. It smells exactly like home."

Home. . . . Barbara watched the houses skimming by, the low New England houses, the apple trees, the fence rails. It would no longer be home. The gray-shingled house at the end of the journey was to be sold. They would never come to Provincetown again. It would be easier if they didn't. Coming back was too sad.

Home was "Thornhedge" now, always and forever. Perhaps, after a while, she wouldn't mind so dreadfully. Perhaps she would be able to remember Bruce without this queer lonely feeling in her heart. When she was an old lady, perhaps. She sighed wearily. There were so many years to be lived before she would be an old lady who could remember, without pain, the far-away heartaches of youth.

Stephen heard the sigh. He glanced at her, sideways. He could not see her eyes, only the curve of her cheeks and the brown hair blowing in ringlets under her smart little hat. But there was something forlorn in her position, in the [illegible] which he did not hold lying palm upward in her lap. He shouldn't have let her come. There were sad things to remember. Better not to go back. It hurt him when she was unhappy. He pressed her hand in a comforting way and wisely said nothing.

Barbara was grateful to him for not asking questions. He was kind and understanding. She loved him with all her heart—as she had loved Father, as she loved the children. Not as she loved Bruce. That was different. That couldn't happen again. She hoped Uncle Stephen would never know. But she couldn't look at him. Her lips were trembling so.

Gay and Jamie discovered familiar landmarks.

"There's the road to Long Nook!" Jamie shouted.

"Remember how Bruce used to take us swimming? Gay bounced half-way around on the wide front seat. "All of us piled in his awful old car."

"It was a nice car," Kit observed, stoutly loyal to Bruce.

A lovely car, Barbara thought. She wished she might ride in it again, swooping up and down the stretch of road that was like a roller-coaster. The road to Long Nook! It was Indian summer when she saw it last, late Indian summer, sunny and hazy and golden. Her birthday. There had been sandwiches and candy with hickory nuts. She remembered it all so clearly, the clouds hiding the sky, the hut that had sheltered them from the storm. . . .

"Sing to me, Bruce. I'm frightened."

"I'll tell you a story instead."

"That will be nice."

"Once there was a gypsy boy who loved very dearly a little gypsy girl. . . ."

What was she thinking? Stephen wondered, sitting beside him so very quiet and still. Would he ever know all of her thoughts? There were times when he felt close to her and times when he felt shut out. He had no part, now, in her thoughts. What was she remembering? Her hand slipped away from his. He made no attempt to hold it.

He had no part in her thoughts. Her hand had, unconsciously, slipped away. Every inch of the road, every tree, every house was associated with Bruce. There were the Corn Hill houses with their gaunt pointed roofs. There, after a while, was the Truro church, square and white, its steeple pricking the foliage of the trees. There was the place in the road where they had met the goose. She wondered if it had been killed and eaten. It was very precious, that goose.

There was Provincetown. They would be there very soon. Barbara's hands held each other closely. It was sad to be coming back.

"There's Manuel's boat in the harbor!" Jamie exclaimed. "Look, 'Chips,' old man! Maybe he'll take us fishing."

The Ariel, too, was there, Mr. Loring's sloop, as beautiful as a dream. They could not look at that.

"It's just the same!" Kit marveled.

Stephen laughed.

"Why shouldn't it be?" he asked. "Places seldom change in a year."

It seemed longer than that, Barbara thought. So many things had happened. But there was Miss Abbie's low white house with the dahlias ready to bloom. There was Jake Preble on his dray still wearing the same hat.

And there, at last, was the gray-shingled house with the willow trees and the rose vine over the door.

"We're here," Kit said in a husky voice.

Barbara smiled mistily at him. She couldn't speak because of the lump in her throat.

Stephen saw her swallow, saw the tears on her lashes. He thought that, just at first, she might like to be alone.

"Get the key from the real estate agent," he said to Thomas. "Kit will show you. Take Gay and Jamie with you."

* * * * * * *

Thomas and the children had gone to the real estate agent. Stephen and Barbara were alone.

"It looks forlorn this way," she said, wanting him to love the house as she loved it. "It's nice when there aren't so many weeds."

"It's charming," Stephen said, watching Barbara. He knew that the house was dear to her. He had not known how dear.

Barbara peeped into the house through the windows.

"There's the old piano," she said, as though she was surprised to find it there. "It was always out of tune."

There were tears in her voice, tears misting her lashes. She smiled an April smile.

Stephen's heart swelled with tenderness.

"Darling," he said, finding, pressing her hand.

She led him beneath the arbor to the studio.

"We sat here so often," she said, pausing on the steps. She lifted the door latch. "It's open!" she said looking at Stephen in wondering surprise.

They entered the studio.

"Someone is living here!" Barbara glanced around the room. "Now, who do you suppose—"

There were signs of an occupant, a cot made up in the corner, books, a pipe, an oil stove, a battered guitar.

"How in the world—" Stephen did not complete the question. Barbara had slipped down to the floor. She was holding the guitar against her breast, rocking it as though it were a child.

"Barbara," he said, wondering, surprised.

"It's Bruce," she said through shaking sobs. "Uncle Stephen, Bruce is here!"

He understood it, then. Something died in his heart, something that never would live again.

"You love Bruce," he said slowly.

"I can't help it." She looked up at him, her face streaming with tears. "I didn't want you to know."

I'M AFRAID I'LL HAVE TO MISS THE DANCE AT THE CLUB TONIGHT. I'D LOVE TO GO, BUT I'VE AN AWFUL HEADACHE.
OH, DON'T GIVE UP! SEND OUT FOR A BOX OF BAYER ASPIRIN AND TAKE TWO TABLETS RIGHT AWAY. I'LL PHONE IN AN HOUR.
2. IN AN HOUR
WELL, DID BAYER ASPIRIN STOP THAT HEADACHE?
IT CERTAINLY DID—AND IN A FEW MINUTES! IT'S REMARKABLE, BUT I'VE NOT A TRACE OF HEADACHE LEFT. COME RIGHT ON OVER!

Ease Pain Now In Few Minutes

A Discovery That's Bringing Fast Relief To Millions

Now comes amazingly quick relief from headaches, rheumatism, neuritis, neuralgia . . . the fastest safe relief, it is said, yet discovered.

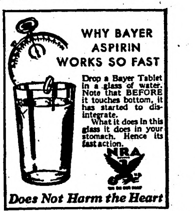
Those results are due to a scientific discovery by which a Bayer Aspirin Tablet begins to dissolve, or disintegrate, in the amazing space of two seconds after touching moisture. And hence to start "taking hold" of pain a few minutes after taking.

The illustration of the glass, here, tells the story. A Bayer Tablet starts to disintegrate almost instantly you swallow it. And thus is ready to go to work almost instantly.

When you buy, though, see that you get the Genuine BAYER Aspirin. For Bayer Aspirin's quick relief always say "BAYER Aspirin."



WHY BAYER ASPIRIN WORKS SO FAST

Drop a Bayer Tablet in a glass of water. Note that BEFORE it touches bottom, it has started to disintegrate.

What it does in this glass it does in your stomach. Hence its fast action.

MEDICAL ADVICE

If you want to
. . . keep the bowel action regular and comfortable
. . . make constipated spells as rare as colds
. . . avoid danger of bowel strain
—use a liquid laxative

Can constipation be overcome? "Yes!" say medical men. "Yes!" declare thousands who have followed their advice and know.

You are not apt to cure your constipation with salts, pills and tablets, or any habit-forming cathartic. But you can overcome this condition just by gentle regulation with a suitable liquid laxative.

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin has the average person's bowels just as regular as clockwork in a few weeks' time.

Why Hospitals use a liquid laxative

The dose of a liquid laxative can be measured. The action can be controlled. It forms no habit; you need not take a "double dose" a day or two later. Nor will it irritate the kidneys.

The right liquid laxative will bring a perfect movement, with no discomfort at the time, or afterward.

The wrong cathartic may keep you constipated as long as you keep on using it!

In buying any laxative, read the label. If it contains a doubtful drug, don't take it. If you don't know what is in it, don't chance it. The contents of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is stated plainly on the label; fresh herbs, pure pepsin, active senna.

Its very taste tells you syrup pepsin is wholesome. A delightful taste, and delightful action. Safe for expectant mothers, and children. Drugstores have it ready for use, in big bottles.

THE TEST:

This test has proved to many men and women that their trouble was not "weak bowels," but strong cathartics!

First: select a properly prepared liquid laxative. Second: Take the dose you find suited to your system. Third: gradually reduce the dose until bowels are moving of their own accord.

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin has the highest standing among liquid laxatives, and is the one generally used.

ALL RIGHT, TELL ME... HOW CAN YOU GET MY CLOTHES WHITER?
LADY, I'M 2 HELPERS IN 1.. GOLDEN SOAP AND LOTS OF NAPTHA

There's Fels-Naptha's secret—every bar brings you two busy cleaners instead of one.

Working together, its good golden soap and plenty of naptha loosen the grimiest dirt in jig-time. They get clothes clean clear through.

And it's thorough cleanliness like that that makes clothes white!

Fels-Naptha's extra help saves hard rubbing. It saves clothes. It saves hands. Change to Fels-Naptha soap! Get some at your grocer's.

"The Cathedral of the Movies"

NEW YORK, long our greatest theatrical center, has now gone in for great movie palaces and capped the climax recently when the largest and most unique film parlor in the world was opened.

Built of stone, terra cotta and brick, it is approximately 200 feet square, 115 feet high, seats 6,000 persons—the foyer, accommodating 4,000 more, can be emptied in three minutes, and cost about $8,000,000.

The organ has three consoles, providing for a range of musical production which probably never before was attempted on any organ. In addition to the consoles, the orchestra pit accommodates 110 musicians and disappears mechanically.

The comfort of the visitor seems ever to have been in mind when the plans were made. There is more room between the seats; from every orchestra seat one looks down on the stage without having to crane his neck; a patented effect makes the figures on the screen "stand out;" the auditorium is lighted by reflection from the stage, even while films are being shown and the entire interior is done in one color, gold, which makes for both beauty and restful eyes; special ventilating appliances make for ideal temperature in winter; a mechanical cooling system is calculated to make it the coolest place in town in summer.

Eight sculptors and 800 artists provided the decorations—1,100 tons of plaster, and lime and 500,000 feet of wire being among the materials used.

The estimated cost of operation is $50,000 weekly. If every seat was filled at every performance the box office receipts would approximate $185,000 weekly.

Registration of Unemployed to Begin in a Few Days

Registration of Marshall county unemployed for work on several gravelling projects to start within a few days, will be held at three places in the county, beginning on Saturday morning, Nov. 18, and continueing until Tuesday evening, Nov. 21. These places are Warren, Middle River and Grygla. Those who find it more convenient to register at Thief River Falls may do so at the District office there of the National Reemployment Service, room 210 Citizens State Bank building, it was announced by Arnie Solem, manager, who is making the arrangements. Teams and trucks should also be registered. Notice of the proposed graveling project was received Tuesday by County Enineer H. T. Swanson in a telephone conversation with A. O. Torgerson, district engineer of the State Highway department.

The exact amount of money to be spent in this county has not been decided, altho there is a possibility that it may be as much as $35,000. Similar projects are being pushed thru in all parts of the country as a part of President Roosevelt's plan to put 4,000,000 men to work by December 15.

It will be necessary to register before being considered for work on these projects, and Mr. Solem urges all those who are in need of employment to put in their application between Nov. 18 and and 21 at the places most convenient.

Reading Fun in Store for Boys

World adventure thrills are in store for readers of THE AMERICAN BOY—YOUTH'S COMPANION, according to word just received from the editor of youth's favorite magazine. From the Arctic to the jungles of Haiti, and from the plateau of Asia to the lion country of Africa, the editors have charted a course of excitement and fun in the 12 issues of 1934.

Several years ago, THE AMERICAN BOY introduced to its readers the popular, black-haired Jimmie Rhodes, Army aviator. Those who followed his adventures through Brooks and Kelly Field, and with the 94th Pursuit on cross-country hops, target practice, and formation flying, will be delighted to learn that Jimmie Rhodes has returned to the magazine. The new series takes him to Haiti where a revolution is impending.

THE AMERICAN BOY—YOUTH'S COMPANION, filled with the adventure every boy craves, with the information he needs, and the advice on hobbies and sports he is always seeking, is the ideal present for that son, cousin, nephew, and chum. It's the kind of present that renews itself every month when the mailman lays a copy on the doorstep. Approved by teachers and educators, and endorsed by high school America, the magazine can solve your Christmas shopping difficulties.

The subscription price is $2.00 for one year. Until January 1, you may take out a three-year subscription for $3.00, a saving of $3.00 over the one-year rate for three years. After Janaary 1, this three-year rate will be withdrawn. Mail your order direct to THE AMERICAN BOY—YOUTH'S COMPANION, 7430 Second Blvd., Detroit, Mich. Service on your subscription will start with the issue you specify.

Sivert H. Nohre

Funeral sevices were conducted here on Monday afternoon from the Nazareth Luth. church for Sivert H. Nohre. Mr. Nohre was born on the 27th day of January, 1877 in Filmore county, Minnesota. The name of his parent were Hans and Anna Nohre, the mother being still amongst the living.

Five years after Siverts birth, the family moved into the adjacent county in the vicinity of Spring Grove. There he was confirmed ten years later by Rev. Jenson of Riceford, Minn. His parents were staunch Lutherans giving him the instruction that is so necessary for a successful life.

In the year 1905 he was united in marriage with Signe Berkvam, who also lived in the vicinity of Spring Grove. From this union five children were born, Namely: Henry, Elmer, Hilma, Agnes and Oscar.

In the year 1914 the family with the exception of the youngest, Oscar, who was born here, moved to Holt and settled on a farm two and a half miles southeast of the village. Here Mr. Nohre farmed and took an active interest in church work and other business institutions and affairs of the community.

Besides his wife and children he leaves to mourn his loss, one brother, Oliver Nohre of Holt and his mother, Mrs. Anna Nohre and one sister, Regina Nohre of Spring Grove.

A large number of relatives and friends from here and out of town attended the funeral and more than filled the capacity of the church.

Rev. L. M. Redal officiated and interment was made in the Holt cemetery. Six of his close neighbors were pallbearers.

That he is dead,—he is just away,

And you—O you, who the wildest

return,—
Think of him faring on, as dear
In the love of There as the love
of Here;
Think of him still as the same, I say
He is not dead,—he is just away!

We wish to express our sincere thanks to all relatives and friends who so kindly helped us during the illness and death of our husband and father; to Rev. The Weather

On Sunday we had the first real taste of winter. A strong cold northwest wind kept coming all day and at times whipped the new snow into such a flury that you could hardly see objects a rod away. Since then it has been both warm and cold.

Monday evening it rained and looked as if the snow was going to leave, but the wind changed. Yesterday morning we had 20 below zero and south wind.

Registration of Unemployed to Begin in a Few Days

Registration of Marshall county unemployed for work on several gravelling projects to start within a few days, will be held at three places in the county, beginning on Saturday morning, Nov. 18, and continueing until Tuesday evening, Nov. 21. These places are Warren, Middle River and Grygla. Those who find it more convenient to register at Thief River Falls may do so at the District office there of the National Reemployment Service, room 210 Citizens State Bank building, it was announced by Arnie Solem, manager, who is making the arrangements. Teams and trucks should also be registered. Notice of the proposed graveling project was received Tuesday by County Enineer H. T. Swanson in a telephone conversation with A. O. Torgerson, district engineer of the State Highway department.

The exact amount of money to be spent in this county has not been decided, altho there is a possibility that it may be as much as $35,000. Similar projects are being pushed thru in all parts of the country as a part of President Roosevelt's plan to put 4,000,000 men to work by December 15.

It will be necessary to register before being considered for work on these projects, and Mr. Solem urges all those who are in need of employment to put in their application between Nov. 18 and and 21 at the places most convenient.

Reading Fun in Store for Boys

World adventure thrills are in store for readers of THE AMERICAN BOY—YOUTH'S COMPANION, accordingl to word just received from the editor of youth's favorite magazine. From the Arctic to the jungles of Haiti, and from the plateau of Asia to the lion country of Africa, the editors have charted a course of excitement and fun in the 12 issues of 1934.

Several years ago, THE AMERICAN BOY introduced to its readers the popular, black-haired Jimmie Rhodes, Army aviator. Those who followed his adventures through Brooks and Kelly Field, and with the 94th Pursuit on cross-country hops, target practice, and formation flying, will be delighted to learn that Jimmie Rhodes has returned to the magazine. The new series takes him to Haiti where a revolution is impending.

THE AMERICAN BOY—YOUTH'S COMPANION, filled with the adventure every boy craves, with the information he needs, and the advice on hobbies and sports he is always seeking, is the ideal present for that son, cousin, nephew, and chum. It's the kind of present that renews itself every month when the mailman lays a copy on the doorstep. Approved by teachers and educators, and endorsed by high school America, the magazine can solve your Christmas shopping difficulties.

The subscription price is $2.00 for one year. Until January 1, you may take out a three - year subscription for $3.00, a saving of $3.00 over the one-year rate for three years. After Janaary 1, this three-year rate will be withdrawn. Mail your order direct to THE AMERICAN BOY—YOUTH'S COMPANION, 7450 Second Blvd., Detroit, Mich. Service on your subscription will start with the issue you specify.

Sivert H. Nohre

Funeral sevices were conducted here on Monday afternoon from the Nazareth Luth. church for Sivert H. Nohre. Mr. Nohre was born on the 27th day of January, 1877 in Filmore county, Minnesota. The name of his parent were Hans and Anna Nohre, the mother being still amongst the living.

Five years after Siverts birth, the family moved into the adjacent county in the vicinity of Spring Grove. There he was confirmed ten years later by Rev. Jenson of Riceford, Minn. His parents were staunch Lutherans giving him the instruction that is so necessary for a successful life.

In the year 1905 he was united in marriage with Signe Berkvam, who also lived in the vicinity of Spring Grove. From this union five children were born, Namely: Henry, Elmer, Hilma, Agnes and Oscar.

In the year 1914 the family with the exception of the youngest, Oscar, who was born here, moved to Holt and settled on a farm two and a half miles southeast of the village. Here Mr. Nohre farmed and took an active interest in church work and other business institutions and affairs of the community.

Besides his wife and children he leaves to mourn his loss, one brother, Oliver Nohre of Holt and his mother, Mrs. Anna Nohre and one sister, Regina Nohre of Spring Grove.

A large number of relatives and friends from here and out of town attended the funeral and more than filled the capacity of the church.

Rev. L. M. Redal officiated and interment was made in the Holt cemetery. Six of his close neighbors were pallbearers.

"HE IS AWAY"

I cannot say, and I will not say
That he is dead,—he is just away,
With a cheery smile, and a wave of the hand
He has wandered into an unknown
land,
And left us dreaming how very fair
It needs must be, since he lingers
there.

And you—O you, who the wildest
yearn
For the old-time step and the glad return,—
Think of him faring on, as dear
In the love of There as the love
of Here;
Think of him still as the same, I say
He is not dead,—he is just away!

Card of Thanks

We wish to express our sincere thanks to all relatives and friends who so kindly helped us during the illness and death of our husband and father; to Rev. Redal for his words of comfort; to the quartet for their beautiful songs; to the pallbearers; and to all who contrtbuted for flowers and to the mission.

BOAT ALMOST FLIES

It is a dull season that does not bring out something new in the matter of boat construction. This year it is a craft with a hull in eight overlapping sections. These are graduated in size and the overlap is vertical. When the boat is at rest on the water all of these sections are in contact with the water, but as the boat moves the body is raised and as the speed increases they are all out of the water except the two larger sections. The hull in this case offers a very slight resistance and the claim is made that the boat is really moving upon a cushion of air.

Why Liquid Laxatives Do You No Harm

The dose of a liquid laxative can be measured. The action can be controlled. It forms no habit; you need not take a "double dose" a day or two later. Nor will a mild liquid laxative irritate the kidneys.

The right liquid laxative will bring a perfect movement, and with no discomfort at the time, or afterward.

The wrong cathartic may keep you constipated as long as you keep on using it!

An approved liquid laxative (one which is most widely used for both adults and children) is syrup pepsin. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is a prescription, and is perfectly safe. Its laxative action is based on senna—a natural laxative. The bowels will not become dependent on this form of help, as they do in the case of cathartics containing mineral drugs. Ask your druggist for Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. Member N. R. A.

Feel Peppy—Do More Work—Take Doctor's Advice

"My doctor recommended Kruschen to me which has not only regulated my digestion to practically normal but reduced my weight so substantially I'm now able to do more work and feel more peppy than ever." Daniel Fried (Editor). Cleveland, Ohio.

To lose fat surely and SAFELY, take one half teaspoonful of Kruschen Salts in a glass of hot water in the morning—cut down on fatty meats and sweets.

But be sure to get Kruschen—your health comes first—a jar that will last you 4 weeks costs not more than 85 cents at any drugstore in the world—if not satisfied—money back.

Men: Get that Kruschen feeling—look younger and feel younger—lose unsightly fat and gain new ambition—be free from constipation, gas and acidity—one jar proves it.

MENTHOLATUM

WHY YOUR HEALTH DEPENDS UPON YOUR KIDNEYS

Your Kidneys Are Constantly Eliminating Waste Poisons From Your Blood

To Be Well See That They Function Properly

YOUR KIDNEYS! Do you realize what an important part they play in your bodily health and length of life? They are the blood filters. Every 24 hours they excrete more than 500 grains of poisonous waste. Thus your kidneys are literally sentinels of your health.

It is well, then, to keep careful watch of your kidneys. If they fail to do their work fully, there is slow poisoning of the system, which may lead to many serious conditions.

Disordered kidney action and bladder irritations may give rise to scanty, painful or too frequent passage and getting up at night. One is apt to feel a dull, nagging backache, drowsy headaches and dizziness.

While, naturally, temporary irregularities may occur, if the condition persists, it is well to look to your kidneys. There is positive danger in neglecting disordered kidney action.

If you have any reason to believe your kidneys are not functioning properly, why not give Doan's Pills a trial? No other advertised diuretic has such world-wide use. None is so well recommended.

Get Doan's today. Your druggist has them.

—25—

"That's all right." Very gently, he lifted her from the floor, settled into a chair and held her close in his arms. "It was always Bruce?" he asked.

"Yes. . . . Always," she said.

"Why didn't you tell me, dear?"

"I—I couldn't, Uncle Stephen."

"Why not?"

"Because—" she paused, suddenly shy.

"Please," he urged, tilting her chin to look into her eyes.

"Well," she said, "at first I couldn't because we'd made so much trouble. I mean your Aunt Edith went away and Miss Emily and that was all our fault. You didn't know about children. I thought I ought to stay. And then—" Again she paused. Her lashes, misted with tears, curved down against her cheeks.

"Then what?" Stephen asked gently. "You must tell me, dear."

"Then the night of my party—beside the lily pond. . . . I can't, Uncle Stephen." The lashes swept up from her cheeks. Her eyes were troubled and shy. "It—it seems so dreadfully hard."

"I kissed you," he said, understanding.

She nodded.

"In a different way," he continued, brushing the soft hair back from her brow.

She nodded again.

"You thought—you knew that I loved you."

Again the brown head nodded.

"And you didn't want to hurt me."

"I couldn't," she said earnestly. "You had been so kind to us all. And I do love you, Uncle Stephen." Her arms were around his neck, her cheek, damp with tears, pressed closely against his. "I love you better than anyone, except," she added, "Bruce."

"I know," Stephen said. "There are all kinds of love. I'll try to be satisfied with the kind that you can give me."

"You won't be hurt, Uncle Stephen?"

"No. I want you to be happy. You see," he said thoughtfully. "I wasn't sure—"

"About what?"

"About you. I wasn't sure that you loved me—in a marrying way, I mean. And," he continued, "I wasn't sure about myself. I thought that I might have been kissing your mother that night by the lily pond."

"Mother?" Barbara asked.

He told her the story, then. He told her about the Barbara he had loved a very long time ago. She listened quietly, her cheek against his, the fingers of one small hand folded around his thumb.

"That's why you have Father's painting of her," she said when he had finished.

"Yes, that's why. You are very like her. I didn't know which of you I kissed that night by the lily pond. You see," he added, "I loved her very much."

"Then you don't mind about Bruce?"

"I mind," he said, holding her very close. "But not too much. I want you to be happy. You are very dear to me, Barbara, dearer than anything else in the world."

"You're lovely!" She smiled through the tears on her lashes. And then there was a change in her face. Her eyes widened, the flush paled out of her cheeks. He felt her tremble, felt the swift beating of her heart. "Listen," she said.

"What is it, dear?"

But he heard it then. And he knew the song. He had heard it very often. . . .

We sail the ocean blue,
We catch-a da plenty-a fish. . . .

"That's Bruce!" Barbara slipped away from Stephen's arms. "He's coming, Uncle Stephen!"

Barbara met Bruce at the door. Stephen saw her hesitate, saw her expression change when she looked at Bruce, saw her run into his arms. He heard their incoherent words—

"Babble . . . Babble, darling."

"Where were you, Bruce?"

"I went away."

"But you came back here."

"I had to find something of you."

"You've found all of me."

"For always?"

"For always. . . . Do you hear it, Bruce?"

"What, darling?"

"The silver flute."

"Funny! . . . Do you hear it, dear?"

"Yes. I haven't for ever so long. Don't let it stop playing again."

"No. . . ."

"Don't ever let it be lost."

"No. . . . Darling! I love you so much. . . ."

They had forgotten Stephen. He went out and closed the door.

* * * * * * * *

Stephen sat in a deck chair under the willows, looking down across the harbor, calm in the twilight. The shadows were deepening. The sound of the wind in the willows was a song that was happy and sad.

Stephen's mood harmonized with the song. He, too, was happy and sad; happy because Barbara was happy, sad because something in him had died, something which he thought would never live again. There would never be for him a real and tender romance. He had had only glimpses of it, the Barbara he had loved a very long time ago, the Barbara whom he had held, for a moment, against his heart.

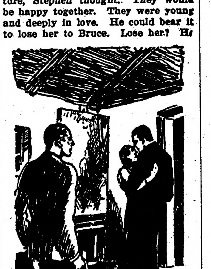
The thought hurt him deeply. But under the sadness it brought there was a feeling of contentment. Such things were not for him. He had been in the cradle a sedate bachelor, gray at the temples even then. Adventure? Romance? They had no part in the pattern of his life. Some men were destined for adventure. He had been born under a quiet star.

He knew, now, why he had been troubled by doubts and uncertainties at times during the summer. He hadn't wanted to marry Barbara. He hadn't wanted to marry Emily. He wasn't a marrying man. It was the future alone he had dreaded. He need not fear that now. There were Kit and Gay and Jamie to give his life a meaning. He would never feel entirely alone. A ready-made family was a blessing. He wasn't a marrying man. . . .

The notes of a guitar drifted through the shadows. Barbara and Bruce sat on the studio steps. Stephen could not see them but he knew they were there.

One small table, dear,
And two small chairs
A lazy parrot for a pet
The kind that never swears. . . .

Two small chairs! That was adventure, Stephen thought. They would be happy together. They were young and deeply in love. He could bear it to lose her to Bruce. Lose her? He need never lose her entirely. He had a place in her life. He knew that she would love him and remember him. That, he thought, was enough.



"Babble—Babble, Darling."

There would be cares, of course. But what did they matter? He could help them, perhaps; give them the gray-shingled house. Better not. Parents, he thought, amused at himself in the role of a father, meddled entirely too much. Better to let them make their own way. But he would buy the house. Sometime she might have it. . . .

"Uncle Stephen . . ." She was standing beside him, her arm linked through Bruce's arm, her eyes shining like stars.

"There's so much I'd like to say." She hesitated. He knew she was searching for grateful words.

"Never mind," he said.

She gave up the attempt. She left Bruce and crossed to Stephen's chair.

"I love you, Uncle Stephen," she said, her arms around his neck.

"I know." He smoothed the soft hair back from her brow.

"I—I'll always be grateful."

"I don't want you to be grateful." He held her for a moment, he held the Barbara he had loved, closely against his heart. "I want you to be happy."

"I'll do my best," Bruce said huskily.

"I'm sure of that."

"Thank you, sir."

They walked across the lawn and through the gate in the picket fence. Stephen watched them until they disappeared in the shadows. He was sad, for a moment, a sadness that had nothing to do with reason. There was in his heart for a moment a longing for the thing that was not for him. Too late, he thought, hearing above his head the happy, sad song of the willows. Too late, for always, too late. . . .

The door of the house opened. Kit came across the lawn, Gay waltzing like a butterfly, Jamie with "Chips" at his heels. They clustered about his chair. Gay's curly head dropped against his shoulder. Kit sat on the grass at his feet. Jamie hung over the chair, wanting to be close. "Chips" lapped Stephen's hand with a rough wet tongue.

"How long can we stay?" Gay asked, breaking a friendly silence.

"A day or two," Stephen answered, roughing her bright brown curls.

"Are we to live at school, Gay and I?" Jamie asked.

"I think so. Kit and I are going abroad."

"Just you and I, Uncle Stephen?" Kit looked up through the shadows with a question in his eyes. He wondered if Uncle Stephen was hurt about Bruce. He wanted to know that he wasn't.

Stephen read the question in Kit's lifted eyes. Suddenly the sadness vanished, the longing for something he could not have. They were nice youngsters. They were his. He need never feel alone.

"Yes," he said and there was a note of contentment in his voice. "We'll have to leave Barbara here, I guess. I think she wants to stay."

[THE END]

WASHDAY SATISFACTION

Housewives everywhere will recognize the truth of these remarks, on an important subject, by the well-known domestic economist, Ruby Baker:

"The weekly wash is an important event in many a household. And while nobody can honestly say washday is a picnic, it is a satisfaction to hang out lines of snowy-white clothes—and watch them flapping gayly in the sunshine.

"By the same token, it's disappointing to hang out clothes that look foggy and dull. Many a woman, though she tries and tries, can't get a wash to please her.

"Did you know that the quality of soap has a lot to do with the success of a wash? Good quality means good ingredients—more cleaning power—greater washing ability. A good soap gets dirt out easier—and gets it all out. It gets clothes cleaner, and that means whiter."

Household Hints

When mixing, cut or rub the fat into the sifted flour until the mixture looks like fine meal. The more finely divided the fat, the more tender the biscuit.

For sour milk or buttermilk biscuits the dough should be stiff but not hard.

To make Children EAT

Don't force children to eat! The girl or boy who has no appetite has stasis—which means the child is sluggish. But cathartics have caused more constipation than they ever cured! The "California treatment" is best—just pure syrup of figs. Try this for a few days, then see how eagerly your youngster will eat.

Stimulate the colon and that child with a finicky appetite will devour everything set before him. Here's the simple treatment that does more for babies or older children than all the diets, fad foods, or tonics.

Nature has provided the "medicine" you'll need to stir your child's colon muscles into proper action. California syrup of figs. Pure, delicious, harmless. It acts on the lower colon—where the trouble is. It has no ill effects on the intestines.

Begin tonight, with this marvelous "California treatment." Any druggist has California syrup of figs, all bottled, with directions. Use enough the first time to cleanse the clogged colon of every bit of poison and hard waste. Then just a little twice a week until the child's appetite, color, weight and spirits tell you the stasis is gone. Whenever a cold or other upset clogs the system again, use this natural vegetable laxative instead of drastic drugs.

WARNING! There are dealers who practice substitution. Be sure to protect your child by looking for the name CALIFORNIA on the bottle.

Birds' Songs Recorded After Many Failures

It took modern engineering and science to capture the songs of birds where the musical and imitative arts had failed, says the Literary Digest. Bird songs are among the most elusive of melodies. Musicians have often tried to write them down, but most birds do not sing in the man-made scale. Their notes are usually not whole or half tones, but may be quarter tones or other fractions.

The apparatus which has first successfully recorded bird melodies was devised under the direction of Albert R. Brand, associate in ornithology, American Museum of Natural History. This recording machine is essentially an adaptation of the equipment used in recording the human voice in talking picture studios.

The longest shot ever taken with the apparatus was during the recording of the song of a common oriole. The truck was 250 feet from the microphone, and the microphone and mirror were at least another 100 yards from the bird. At that distance it was hard to distinguish the bird through the mirror sight, yet the sound picture was completely satisfactory.

Record of Life

The average man of fifty is found to have worked 6,500 days, slept 6,000 days, walked 800 days, played 4,000 days, eaten 1,500 days, been sick 500 days and listened to the squawk of the pessimist all his days.—San Jose (Calif.) Mercury Herald.

For Quick Relief Say BAYER Aspirin When You Buy

Here is quicker relief from pain—the fastest safe relief, it is said, ever known. This is due to a scientific discovery by which BAYER Aspirin starts "taking hold" of pain a few minutes after taking.

The illustration of the glass here tells the story. A Bayer tablet starts to disintegrate or dissolve—go to work—almost instantly. This means quick relief from pain—fewer lost hours from headache, neuritis, rheumatism. And safe relief. For genuine Bayer Aspirin does not harm the heart.

When you buy, see that you get the genuine Bayer Aspirin. The best way is never to ask for aspirin by the name "aspirin" alone. But if you want Bayer Aspirin's quick relief always to say "BAYER Aspirin."

WHY BAYER ASPIRIN WORKS SO FAST

Drop a Bayer Tablet in a glass of water. Note that BEFORE it touches bottom, it has started to disintegrate.

What it does in this glass it does in your stomach. Hence its fast action.

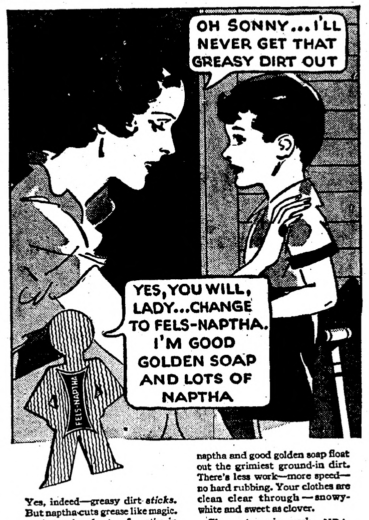
Co-operation the Call?

The day of rugged individualism has passed and the day of co-operation has come.—Dr. Eugene A. Colligan, president of Hunter college.

War and Taxes

"A war never effaces taxes," said Hi Ho, the sage of Chinatown. "It only decides who shall gather them."—Washington Star.



OH SONNY... I'LL NEVER GET THAT GREASY DIRT OUT
YES, YOU WILL, LADY...CHANGE TO FELS-NAPTHA. I'M GOOD GOLDEN SOAP AND LOTS OF NAPTHA
FELS-NAPTHA

Yes, indeed—greasy dirt sticks. But naptha cuts grease like magic. And there's plenty of naptha in Fels-Naptha Soap. Just smell it!

Working busily together, the naptha and good golden soap float out the grimiest ground-in dirt. There's less work—more speed—no hard rubbing. Your clothes are clean clear through—snowy-white and sweet as clover.

Change to easier washdays—ask your grocer for Fels-Naptha Soap.

Scraps of Humor

WHY, PROFESSOR!

Jane, the maid, tapped timidly on the professor's study door and entered.

"Gentleman in the hall wishes to speak to you, sir," she said.

The professor looked up from his book.

"Tell him I'm out, Jane," he said brusquely.

Jane shrugged her shoulders hopelessly.

"I did, sir," she replied; "but he won't go."

"What!" ejaculated her master angrily. "Send him in to me and I will tell him myself."

Street Sarcasm

"Lady," said the traffic officer to a driver he had stopped, "how long do you intend to be out?"

"What do you mean by that question?" she demanded, indignantly.

"Well," he replied, "there are a few hundred other motorists who would like to use this street after you get through with it."—Montreal Star.

Gumitis

"I thought I had discovered a new disease. The patient maintained that he could hardly drag his feet along."

"What did the diagnosis show, doctor?"

"That he had stepped on some chewing gum."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

No Dignities Due

"Are you interested in a war on crime?"

"Of course," answered Senator Sorghum. "But I'm not in favor of calling it anything so dignified as a war. It is a case where all good citizens should get together and conduct a plain ordinary rattlesnake fight."

Where the Money Goes

"Rather than trust banks, my wife puts her money in her shoes."

"So does mine—shoes and hats."

CATASTROPHE

Two country laborers were discussing a neighbor in the village inn.

"Yes" said Gubbins, "old Garge Martin fell plumb off the roof of his cottage while doing a bit of patching."

His companion nodded.

"I bet his wife felt awful!" he replied.

"Awful is no name for it," said Gubbins; "he fell right into her bed of sweet peas."—Stray Stories.

News of Minnesota
EVENTS of the week throughout the "State of Ten Thousand Lakes" told in brief form

Hallock—The American Legion post of Hallock, in co-operation with the high school sponsored a carnival.

Hallock—Superintendent Paul Hanson of Hallock has been appointed county chairman for the annual Red Cross drive.

Freeborn—The Freeborn Congregational church celebrated its sixtieth anniversary. The church was organized in 1873.

Onamia—The board of directors and stockholders of the co-operative creamery here unanimously voted to remain open.

St. Paul—Governor Olson has called a special session of the legislature for early in December. It will take up liquor control and relief.

Hastings—Reopening of the Latto hospital here was announced by Mrs. Mildred Smith of Hastings. She will be in charge, acting on behalf of the public.

Minneapolis—Preparing for the first time in its history to supply shoes to the needy, the board of public relief purchased 49,000 pairs at a cost of $69,930, an average of $1.42 a pair.

Minneapolis—Faced this year with the largest tax delinquency in its history, Minneapolis is confronted with prospects of the highest tax rate it has ever known for the year of 1934.

St. James—Mayor Claude M. Priest suffered amputation of his right leg just above the knee, as the result of an accidental discharge of his gun while he was pulling his hunting boat to shore.

St. Paul—The ship's bell of the old Civil war frigate Minnesota has found a permanent home in the museum of the Minnesota Historical society along with the steering wheel of the same vessel.

Minneapolis—The Minneapolis Symphony orchestra began another new season, as a part of the university's homecoming festivities, in Northrop Memorial auditorium with Eugene Ormandy conductor.

St. Paul—George H. Lund, in charge of drouth relief for the Minnesota department of agriculture, announced that 5,740 tons of hay have been transported to the drouth-affected areas in the state at a cost of $40,000.

Prinsburg—For the second time in nine years yeggmen entered the Prinsburg State Bank, 18 miles southwest of Willmar, burned their way with an acetylene torch through a vault door and safe and then escaped with about $3,500 in cash.

Wheaton—At a hearing on the Lake Traverse Bois de Sioux drainage and conservation project before Major Dwight Johns, United States district engineer, here nearly 500 persons from North and South Dakota and Minnesota expressed unanimous approval of the project.

Hibbing—The Oliver Iron Mining Company has indicated its willingness to renew negotiations on the North Hibbing purchase proposals. The matter of taxes between the company and the village recently was settled with a reduction in the tax levy promised by village officials.

Madelia—While an estimated gathering of 10,000 persons looked on, Theodore Balko of Redwood Falls successfully defended his state corn husking championship by establishing a new state record with a net load of 27 bushels. Balko's victory, coming over a field of 26 contestants, was his third in four years of state competition. Second place was won by Ray Hanson of Bingham Lake, with a net load of 24.2 bushels. Ramy Ferrarr of Delavan third, Alfred Gross of Butterfield fourth, and Clarence Maley of Austin fifth.

Minneapolis—The University of Minnesota agreed to lend its aid to a state educational relief program, which will send 1,000 more young men and women to Minnesota universities and colleges this winter. Upon recommendation of President Lotus D. Coffman, the board of regents voted to throw the university open to an undetermined number of students who will be offered usual courses of instruction at no tuition charge. Selected by Governor Olson's commission, which is handling the project, and the state board of control, each of the students will be given $15 a month under present plans seeking a federal government grant. The money will be used by the students to pay for housing and food.

Ulen—The fall and winter field work for the Northwest Crop Improvement association will be opened with a series of wheat and barley meetings starting here November 13. Other meetings in the first series are scheduled at Perley, November 14; Borup, November 15; Shelly, November 16, and Ada, November 17. During the next five months the association intends to spend about 10 weeks in the field holding farmers' meeting, H. R. Sumner, executive secretary of the organization, said.

Travelers Find Bible in Most Hotel Rooms

"Room with bath"—and Bible, too, though it isn't advertised. But one should use it, considering the traditional relationship between cleanliness and Godliness.

The Gideons continue to do their part in equipping hotel rooms. In 1928, as the Missionary Review of the World tells us, the Scottish Commercial Travelers' Christian Union placed some 3,000 Bibles, especially printed and bound, in Scotland, practically finishing their task north of the Cheviot hills. In New Zealand, 6,888 Bibles had been placed in hotel rooms by the end of 1930. Practically all the hotels in Canada have been supplied.

Working for the Gideons in Korea, Captain Swineheart has placed 1,500 Bibles in Korean hotels, together with 300 Japanese Bibles in Japanese hotels in Korea. As these hotels are generally without tables, a wooden holder, to attach to the wall, is supplied with each Bible. In Bombay and its neighborhood 18 hotels have been supplied with 327 Bibles, and 1,163 copies in English, Dutch and Chinese have been placed by the Gideons in the guest-rooms of hotels in Java, Borneo, Singapore, Kuala Lumpur and Penang.—Literary Digest.

BETTY MAKES A HIT WITH HER HUSBAND'S MOTHER
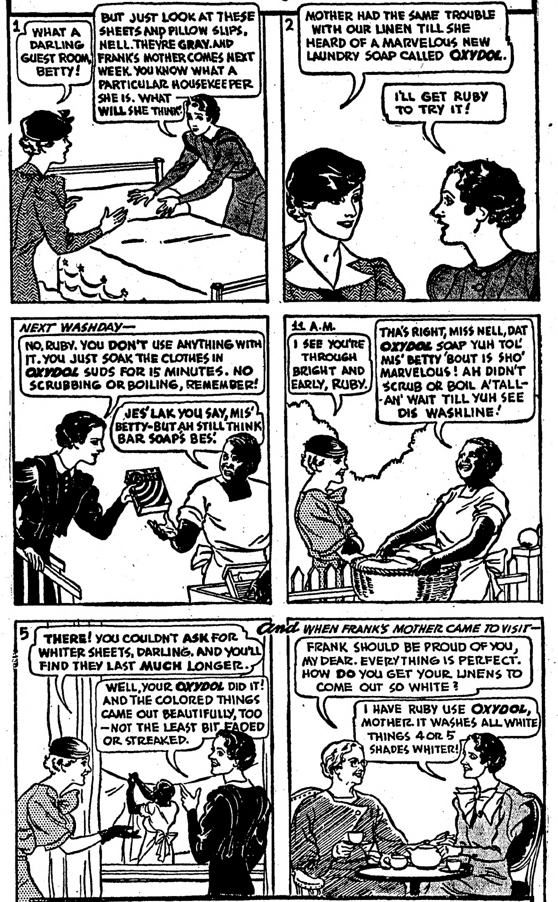
thanks to an amazing new Laundry Soap



1
WHAT A DARLING GUEST ROOM, BETTY!
BUT JUST LOOK AT THESE SHEETS AND PILLOW SLIPS, NELL. THEY'RE GRAY. AND FRANK'S MOTHER COMES NEXT WEEK. YOU KNOW WHAT A PARTICULAR HOUSEKEEPER SHE IS. WHAT WILL SHE THINK?
2
MOTHER HAD THE SAME TROUBLE WITH OUR LINEN TILL SHE HEARD OF A MARVELOUS NEW LAUNDRY SOAP CALLED OXYDOL.
I'LL GET RUBY TO TRY IT!
NEXT WASHDAY—
NO, RUBY. YOU DON'T USE ANYTHING WITH IT. YOU JUST SOAK THE CLOTHES IN OXYDOL SUDS FOR 15 MINUTES. NO SCRUBBING OR BOILING, REMEMBER!
JES' LAK YOU SAY, MIS' BETTY—BUT AH STILL THINK BAR SOAPS BES'.
11 A.M.
I SEE YOU'RE THROUGH BRIGHT AND EARLY, RUBY.
THA'S RIGHT, MISS NELL, DAT OXYDOL SOAP YUH TOL' MIS' BETTY 'BOUT IS SHO' MARVELOUS! AH DIDN'T SCRUB OR BOIL A'TALL—AN' WAIT TILL YUH SEE DIS WASHLINE!
5
THERE! YOU COULDN'T ASK FOR WHITER SHEETS, DARLING. AND YOU'LL FIND THEY LAST MUCH LONGER.
WELL, YOUR OXYDOL DID IT! AND THE COLORED THINGS CAME OUT BEAUTIFULLY, TOO—NOT THE LEAST BIT FADED OR STREAKED.
And WHEN FRANK'S MOTHER CAME TO VISIT—
FRANK SHOULD BE PROUD OF YOU, MY DEAR. EVERYTHING IS PERFECT. HOW DO YOU GET YOUR LINENS TO COME OUT SO WHITE?
I HAVE RUBY USE OXYDOL, MOTHER. IT WASHES ALL WHITE THINGS 4 OR 5 SHADES WHITER!

NEW LAUNDRY SOAP DISCOVERY WELCOMED BY HOUSEWIVES

A still faster-washing soap that gets clothes 4 to 5 shades whiter yet can't hurt anything plain water won't

WASHDAY in over a million homes has been revolutionized by an amazing new Laundry Soap Discovery of Procter & Gamble—America's largest soap-makers. Up and down the country, it is completely changing women's ideas of quick, easy washing, safe washing, and white clothes!

This remarkable invention is an utterly new-type laundry soap. A soap that multiplies itself 500 TIMES in suds. Which means you get at least twice as much suds as from old-style soaps. A still faster-washing, still whiter-washing soap that's utterly SAFE for colors, fabrics, and hands.

This remarkable new discovery is called OXYDOL. And you'll find to your surprise that it makes other soaps—"granulated," bar or flake—hopelessly out-of-date.

Women believed they had the fastest soap already! Then found it was slow, alongside OXYDOL. For OXYDOL utterly banishes boiling. It ends washboard scrubbing. It cuts soaking time to 15 minutes—gets clothes out far sooner.

They believed they had the whitest washes they could possibly get. And are now amazed by washes 4 to 5 shades whiter than before.

By impartial scientific test, ONE washing with OXYDOL gets clothes whiter than 2 to 4 washes with other soaps. But that's not all!

You'll find clothes actually last longer, washed with this new soap. That the daintiest colors DO NOT fade. That it is easier on hands than any soap you've ever used. For no strong agents, no chemical bleaches are in OXYDOL. Just pure soap elements so blended with others as to protect clothes against fading.

OXYDOL simply can't hurt anything clear water won't!

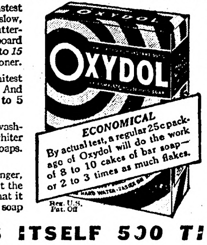
DISSOLVES Dirt—In Any Water, Hard or Soft

Its creamy, "free-acting" suds dissolve dirt out in 15 minutes. No boiling, no back-breaking scrubbing is necessary. Nor any "water-softener," either. For the right amount of water-softener is already there.

Different from ordinary soaps, OXYDOL is specially fitted to water conditions in each district where it is sold. The water in this district, for example, has been tested for "hardness" by expert chemists. The OXYDOL you buy here contains just the right proportion of "softener" to fit it.

With OXYDOL you'll do your wash in 25% to 40% less time. You'll get a whiter, sweeter-smelling wash than ever before. Everything will iron beautifully—no soap streaks or smudges anywhere. And you'll never be bothered with fading colors or red, soap-bitten hands.

These things we promise you. Whatever your former favorite, try OXYDOL next time you wash. You'll never go back to slower soaps or harsher soaps again! Procter & Gamble. 33E7



OXYDOL
ECONOMICAL
By actual test, a regular 25c package of Oxydol will do the work of 8 to 10 cakes of bar soap—or 2 to 3 times as much flakes.

Upper Grades

The seventh graders have completed the unit of work in Social Science covering the colonial period. Monday, together with the eighth graders, they had a contest to determine which group remembered the most concerning the period. The eighth graders had the highest average, although Opal Werner (a seventh grader) ranked highest. Opal Sanoden and Glenn Carlson ranked next.

Florence Mitchell, in the sixth grade, and Opal Werner, in the seventh grade, had perfect scores in Arithmetic Wednesday.

Palma Johnson has been absent because of an infected finger.

Mrs. J. N. Sather of Comstock, Mrs. J. Lindblom and Mrs. Eric of Spooner, and Miss Ellen Lindblom of Great Falls, Mont., visited in our room for a short time Thursday.

The sixth grade is studying France in Geography now. Vernice made the neatest free-hand map of the country.

The seventh graders memorized the poem 'In Flanders Fields' this week.

Robert worked the Arithmetic reasoning problems the seventh graders had Tuesday without making any errors.

We have had six cases of tardiness during the past week. That is six too many.

Two Important Dates

The Marshall County Wheat Allotment Assn. has two important dates for all wheat growers to remember.

Monday, Nov. 27, any applicant who feels as though he has not received a correct allotment in wheat acres or bushels can bring in his supporting evidence and appeal to the County Board of Directors.

Tuesday, Nov. 28, all contracts must be signed on that day by tenants and landlords. Any delay because applicants do not sign on that day will cause a delay in the receiving of the benefit payments. This does not apply to landlords where contracts must be sent by mail for signature.

Each township committee will have the contracts at various places for signature. Those in Agder, Holt, Mud Lake, East Valley, and Excel will go to the schoolhouse in Dist. 112, four miles east and half a mile north of Steiner.

Second publication of farm allotments and wheat acreage is included this week as a supplement to the News.

Went Deer Hunting

Several parties of deer hunters went out to slaughter the sly denizens of the deep blue muskeg this week. Those we know of were Albert and Lawrence Haglund, Walter Sandberg, and Lloyd Knutson; Olaf and Ted Ness, and Clarence Larson; and Hilmer Erickson, Harry Engen, Harland Gunheim, and Hans O. Hanson (the original 4-H Club) plus a salesman from the Cities. They all went east, to hunt in Beltrami and Lake of the Woods counties. The season began at sunrise Tuesday, Nov. 21, and will continue until sundown tomorrow, Nov. 25. Stand by for some good stories about the big one that got away, next week.

Mrs. Oliver Nohre called at the H. O. Hanson home Monday.

Mrs. Leo Horien visited at the H. O. Hanson home the forepart of this week.

Tony Rhen Promoted

Tony Rhen, who has been assistant buttermaker here since December 1, 1931, was hired by the creamery board at Alvarado to be the manager of the creamery there. He took over his new duties on Tuesday.

Tony has had several years' experience in the creamery business, having worked as helper in the creamery at Leonard, Minn., his home town, before he came to Holt. He also took the buttermakers' short course at the University Farm, St. Paul.

Mrs. Rhen and daughter joined Mr. Rhen on Wednesday. Art Thompson trucked their household goods over. Miss Vivian Peterson has taken charge of the telephone office, vacated by the Rhens. Their numerous friends here wish them success in their new home.

Mr. and Mrs. Leo Horien visited at the home of Mrs. E. Horien Sunday.

Quite a number of our local unemployed men registered for road work this week.

David Sandberg is working at the Wm. Steinhauer farm this week, while the latter is out deer-hunting.

Mrs. K. Burtness returned Saturday from Iowa where she has been visiting for some time with relatives.

Johnny Doran spent the weekend at a hospital in Thief River falls, getting treatments for a disordered stomach.

Mr. and Mrs. Emil Larson and daughter, and Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Swanson, of St. Hilaire, visat the C. L. Sandberg and Mrs. A. E. Anderson homes on Sunday.

Caucus Notice

The annual village caucus will be held in the schoolhouse on Monday evening, Nov. 27, at 8 p. m., for the purpose of nominating candidates for village offices to be elected in December.

"Cooperation"

If you are fond of pot-hunting in the dictionary, you might occupy some of your leisure time looking up the word co-operate. You will find it is derived from the prefix co, signifying with, together, in conjunction, or jointly, and the Latin root operari, to work. Co plus operari, to work together, in conjunction with, or jointly. It might be well for everyone in the community to memorize that definition, and to bear in mind at all times that it takes at least two to make co-operation, just as much as it does to make a quarrel, a prize fight, or a horse race. If you want co-operation from the other fellow, you'll have to give some yourself. If you are dissatisfied with the way things are going on in the community, you will do well to get into a huddle with yourself and figure out whether you are doing your share of co operating. Remember co-operation is a two-sided proposition and you'll have to be at one end in order to bring about results.—Ex.

TRACED TO ROMAN WRITER

The phrase "took to their heels" has an old-time flavor, and the very well read may have come across it in the "King Cambyses" of Thomas Preston, which dates 1561. However, for its origin we must go back a bit further, to classical antiquity! For its author was the Roman writer of comedies, Terence, who lived in the Second century B. C. It was in the second scene of the fifth act of his "Eunuchus," that we find, "I took to my heels as fast as I could!—Kansas City Times.

Farm Strike Renewed When President Rejects Price-Fixing Plan—United States Denounces Extradition Treaty With Greece.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

"NEVER again will we call off this strike until our demands are met by the federal government," declared Milo Reno, president of the National Farmers' Holiday association. Whereupon the "embattled farmers" of the Middle West resumed their picketing with renewed vigor, determined to prevent the moving of produce to the markets of the leading cities. Reno and his followers were enraged because President Roosevelt, on the advice of George N. Peek, head of the agricultural adjustment administration, and Secretary Wallace, had rejected the price fixing plan offered by Governors Herring, Olson, Langer, Schmedeman and Berry. And those governors were no less irate when they left the White House. They declared their attempt to bring about complete regimentation of agriculture was a complete failure and that they were disappointed and disgusted. They freely predicted "a great deal of disturbance" unless market prices go up on this year's crops, and the farm strikers saw to it that this prediction was justified.

Geo. N. Peek

Mr. Roosevelt, in a written opinion based on Mr. Peek's advice, said that the governor's plan amounted substantially "to the licensing of every plowed field, and the marketing by a ticket punch system of all grain and live stock; and he then went on to denounce severely such a scheme of regimentation. The effect of the adoption of the plan, he said, "even if successful in the Midwest, might be that the very states the governors are trying to help might be left holding the bag while other states expanded production.

"These questions are wholly aside from grave problems of legality under existing law and questions as to raising the necessary funds."

The governors were called upon, instead, to give full co-operation to the program of benefits and curtailed production already under way. The farmers were reminded that checks for the wheat benefits are already beginning to go out; that loans are to be made on unsold corn on the farm, and that corn-hog benefit payments will start going out in a couple of months.

Day by day the violence of pickets increased, especially in Iowa and Wisconsin. In the former state they even stopped a live stock train bound for Sioux City and released all the cattle and sheep, in Lawton. The sheriff there said the crowd was "mostly Reds from Sioux City." In Wisconsin the strike affected particularly the dairy industry. Governor Schmedeman had ordered that the highways must be kept open at all cost, but the dumping of truckloads of milk and the bombing of creameries and cheese factories were of almost daily occurrence.

IMMEDIATELY after President Roosevelt had rejected the governors' plan the Department of Agriculture gave out a comprehensive study of the agricultural situation in forty states.

The report noted that, while the domestic demand for farm commodities seemed likely to improve, the prospect for increased foreign consumption of American agricultural products was less favorable.

Crop reduction for 1934, it was estimated, will be kept at 1933 levels through the acreage reduction program of the agricultural adjustment administration.

Despite a reduction of 25,000,000 acres in land used for cotton, the total supply still will be large in 1934, it was pointed out.

The world wheat market continues to be depressed, the report noted, adding that improved business conditions abroad and relaxation of import restrictions as a result of the London wheat conference might stimulate exports of this grain.

The report said the supply of meat animals on farms would be slightly larger at the beginning of 1934 than at the same period in 1933. An increase in cattle, it was noted, will more than offset a marked reduction in the number of hogs on farms and a slight decrease in the number of sheep and lambs. The consumers' demand for meat will be greater in 1934 than in 1933, it was predicted.

A gloomy outlook was painted for the dairy industry. On the other hand, the new year will bring more favorable conditions than have existed in the past two years for commercial truck crops.

GEN. HUGH JOHNSON, NRA administrator, went out to Chicago and addressed the Illinois Manufacturers' association and the chamber of commerce at a luncheon, and did not disappoint those who had expected a lot of vigorous language. "No matter how he did it," he said, "Franklin Roosevelt has pulled this country one-quarter of the way out of the March dumps in six months.

"This country, under the incitation of witch doctors, has the jitters. Let the heathen rage. Their raging just now takes the form of dead cats and hobgoblins—that NRA interferes with freedom of the press—that it is unconstitutional—that it coerces industry—that it interferes with individual initiative and so forth.

"Now, we do not mind really honest and substantial dead cats, and I have some justly coming to me. My only complaint is that most are synthetic. The biggest imitation dead cat is the one about the freedom of the press. Nothing will ever be done by the NRA to impair the freedom of the press.

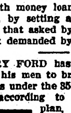
"It's no time for calamity howling. It is time to get ready to take care of increased business and to carry on the excellent progress thus far gained."

LATE developments concerning the recovery program include these events:

Counsel for an employees' brotherhood obtained a temporary injunction restraining the New York Edison company from violating the NRA and the re-employment agreement.

President Roosevelt settled two disputes with the steel industry. He obtained a "substantial agreement" between the United Mine Workers and the captive mines of Pennsylvania operated by the steel companies, forcing the latter to accept the checkoff system. He ended the differences between Transportation Co-ordinator J. B. Eastman and the steel companies over the price of rails to be bought by the railways with money loaned by the government, by setting a price halfway between that asked by the companies and that demanded by Eastman.

HENRY FORD has started to lay off his men to bring their working hours under the 35-hour code maximum, according to his announced plan. His plants had been operating on a 40-hour basis. The recovery officials were astonished by this move, and General Johnson tried to avert it by offering to "consider an exception" in Ford's case, without avail.



Henry Ford

Observers watched this renewal of the prolonged NRA-Ford controversy with keen interest. They said the Ford statement that the layoff was solely to meet NRA requirements was another indication that the manufacturer intends to comply with the letter of the law while at variance with the spirit of the program.

The real showdown will come later, it was said here, over the collective bargaining provisions of the code.

The striking tool and die makers of the Detroit area were returning to work in large numbers under agreements with employers that were negotiated by the regional labor board. The terms were not made public. The strike started in Flint and was marked by violence and sabotage.

REFUSAL of the Greek Court of Appeals to permit the extradition of Samuel Insull is held by the United States government to be "utterly untenable and a clear violation of the American-Helenic treaty of extradition signed at Athens on May 6, 1931." Therefore, by direction of the State department, Lincoln MacVeagh, American minister to Greece, delivered to Foreign Minister Maximos in Athens a strong note denouncing the treaty. The document expressed the "astonishment" of the government in Washington at the news that the Greek authorities had again declined to honor the request for Insull's extradition, and continued that this made it apparent that the treaty is now entirely useless.

Lincoln MacVeagh

The Greek government could get out of the embarrassing situation, if it so desired, by inviting Insull to leave the country within a stipulated time. By law the minister of the interior may deport any person "if undesirable for social or public reasons." However, Insull's lawyer told the fugitive the government could not remove him without casting a slur on the Greek judiciary. Then, too, the Venizelists, opponents of the present regime, would attack it and probably overthrow it if the American were deported.

FREQUENTERS of night clubs during the era of prohibition read with interest and considerable sadness of the death of Texas Guinan, so-called "queen" of those resorts. Stricken with an intestinal disease while on tour with a troupe of forty girls, she was operated on in Vancouver and a few hours later passed away. Born in Waco, Texas, she had a long stage and film career.

News of Minnesota

EVENTS of the week throughout the "State of Ten Thousand Lakes" told in brief form

Marshall—Marshall's big new well is now furnishing water for the city.

Maynard—W. H. Harris, living on a farm west of town, exhibited a winter radish that weighed exactly six pounds.

Grand Meadow—Fire, said to have been set by pheasant hunters, burned 20 tons of hay on the farm of John Heffern, farmer living six miles south of here.

St. Paul—Minnesota had its first general snow when practically the entire state was covered. Moorhead lead with five inches.

Glenwood—Fifty-four merchants of Glenwood will give away turkeys in contests this month. Six turkeys will be released from the roof of a hotel.

Duluth—Archibald M. Chisholm, 69, mining operator, philanthropist and one of the outstanding citizens of Duluth and the ranges died at his home here.

Fairmont—When Street Commissioner John Hartjen heard that small boys were selling wheelbarrow loads of wood at a nickel a load he learned where his paving blocks were going.

Mankato—There's $80,000 piled on the ground here—$80,000 in sugar beets. Consigned to the refinery at Chaska, there are about 16,000 tons of beets here, valued at about $5 a ton.

St. Paul—Governor Floyd B. Olson will convene the state legislature in special session about December 4, he said, to repeal state prohibition and pass a new liquor control measure.

St. Paul—The Home Owners' Loan corporation announced it had stopped foreclosures on 57 homes from the time of its establishment in June to October 27. Property involved was valued at $123,150.

Round Lake—Harry Olds of Round Lake is the potato king of this section. He has shipped out 25 carloads of potatoes to distant points from his 90-acre tract, which is expected to yield close to 22,000 bushels.

Aitkin—The Aitkin county Turkey Growers Association conducted its annual turkey tour of covering the entire county by automobile. A caravan of 100 members headed by Dr. W. A. Billings, turkey expert of the University of Minnesota, cruised about the county visiting turkey farms.

Hibbing—Proposals to float two bond issues for projects under the federal reconstruction program were defeated by voters at a special election. One provided for a $290,000 bond issue ofr a sewage disposal plant and the other was a $60,000 proposal for improvement of streets and highways.

Grand Marais—Minnesota's Arrowhead country—the spearshaped portion which borders on Lake Superior in the extreme northeastern part of the state—is practically normal. For 60 days, reports the Cook county re-employment committee, no man or woman in the entire county who wanted to work has been without the opportunity.

St. Paul—The number of civilian conservation camps in Minnesota will be reduced from 61 to 51 for the winter and spring months, it was announced in Washington by Robert Fechner, director of civilian conservation corps work. He said 60,152 men would be employed in 292 camps in the middle west and southwest states for the second period.

Togo—Four black bears killed two yearling heifers and a calf on the William Anderson farm near here, proceeding to the Ray Kurtz pasture where they attacked two work mules. Here their operations stopped as the mules put up a brave fight and both Anderson and Kurtz intervened with rifles. A few nights earlier 11 sheep on the Ernest Gibbs farm near Bear river were killed by what is believed to be the same renegades.

Minneapolis—A federal grant of $120,000, presumably to carry out the education relief program in Minnesota, was received by F. M. Rarig, state relief administrator. It is expected the money will be used to finance approximately 1,000 students in continuing their higher education in colleges and universities of the state. Each student, under the plan, will receive $15 monthly for living expenses. The University of Minnesota has agreed to suspend tuition fees for these students.

Shakopee—Scott county farmers will be the first in Minnesota to get their bonus checks for co-operating with the government in the matter of acreage reduction and it is expected the money will be distributed about November 15.

St. Paul—Roger Touhy and his gang are being tried here for the kidnaping of William Hamm, Jr., last June. Joseph Keenan, who played a major part in the conviction of George Kelly and Harvey Bailey in the Urschel abduction in Oklahoma, is the prosecutor.

A cyclist was boasting about his abilities as a rider. So strongly did he hold forth that the landlord of the village inn challenged him.

"Look here," he said, "I bet you can't ride up and down this street till the church clock strikes six."

The cyclist looked at the clock. It was 5:15.

"Done!" he said, and started. After a time he shouted to some villagers, who stood watching in amazement: "Has the church clock struck yet?"

"No," came the answer. "It never does."

"But why should you mind, if you're really not?" comforted the perspiring salesman.

"But that's just it," complained the harassed lady. "You see, I am." Boston Transcript.

Imitation Influence

"Are there any lobbyists around the United States Capitol?" asked the lady with a note book.

"Certainly not," answered Senator Sorghum.

"Who are the gentlemen who pretend to have so much influence?"

"They are enterprising persons who manage to get paid large sums for fooling their employers."

SOLVING ONE PROBLEM

Do this for Your Child in TWO WEEKS

How to rid any boy or girl of sluggishness or constipation and build a big appetite.

The trouble with children who will not eat is usual stasis. The symptoms are a tongue that's always coated, bad breath, poor color, dull eyes that are often a bilious yellow. No appetite, no ambition—even for play. Hard to get to sleep, hard to wake in the morning.

There's an absolute remedy for this condition. It gives listless youngsters the appetite and energies of a young animal! They eat! They gain! They keep well!

It's not the stomach, but the bowel condition that keeps children from eating. But the trouble is in the lower bowel—the colon. California syrup of figs is the only "medicine" that is needed to stimulate the colon muscles. The very next day, your child is eating better and feeling better. Keep on with the syrup of figs a few days and you will see amazing improvement in appetite, color, weight and spirits.

Any drug store has the real California syrup of figs, all bottled, with directions. Nature never made a nicer acting or nicer tasting laxative. (It is purely vegetable.) Remember California syrup of figs when sickness, a cold or any upset has clogged a child's bowels.

WARNING: Even when it's something to give children, some stores will try to substitute. So be sure the bottle says CALIFORNIA Syrup of Figs.

CHAPTER I

—1—

Seventy hours of hard nor'-easter had tied up marine activities in and about the little fishing port on the Maine coast, and now on the warm hazy day that followed, work and play began to carry on again.

Lobster men put out to haul and bait their pots. Small inshore seiners stood on and off, masthead lookouts on watch for the first run of mackerel reported. A scanty summer population, for the place was remote and thus far unexploited, ventured forth in pleasure craft, skirting the rugged and storm-beaten coastline, enjoying the smell and feel of the sea breezes.

A furlong off a rocky point where the sluggish swell mounted more steeply over a sunken ledge known as Pollock rock, a young man in a fisherman's dory was shoving his boat slowly and to all appearance aimlessly about. He stood facing forward and thrust at the oars with easy strokes.

Passing fishermen sighting him thus employed were mildly curious about the object of his efforts.

"What's Tom Jordan doin' over yonder?"

"Dunno. Tryin' to sweep up an anchor, maybe. There's plenty of 'em daown there."

This theory was as good as any other. But it was not enough to satisfy the curiosity of a girl who since early morning had keep Tom under observation from the porch or window of a long, rambling house that was set on a knoll under the oaks of a wooded island about a furlong away. The young man once or twice had caught the heliographic flash from the fore lenses of her glass; he smiled to himself, a little sheepishly.

He smiled still more when presently he saw her go down the winding steps, big slabs of stone, and walk out on the runway to the float. Getting into a rowboat she shoved off and pulled in his direction with a stroke that was of the longshoreman rather than of the athletic oarswoman.

Coming alongside she rested on her oars.

"What in the world are you up to, Tom?"

"Call it treasure hunting, Jessica." His voice had the local accent, old English with a slight drawl.

"What sort of treasure?"

"Your sort. You."

"Me, Tom? Where do you think I am?" A twinkle appeared in the dark eyes.

"All around me, just out of reach. Up overhead, or down below there. That seems the handiest place to look for you, just now."

"Down there—?" quizzically.

"Down there." He pointed to her colorful reflection in the still water.

"But you said that you were after treasure. I'd never have thought you a fortune hunter, Tom."

"I am, though. Only it's not your fortune I'm after. One to match it."

Jessica nodded, and her long lashes drooped. She knew his meaning—and secretly wished that somehow he could reach success. Between the two of them—or between Jessica and any suitor, as far as that went—bulked a conditional inheritance of one hundred thousand dollars. By the terms of her father's will, in order even to seek her in marriage, a man would have to own a like amount. "Sometimes I wonder if money is worth that much," she questioned demurely. "You see, if ever I did want to marry, I'd have to do all my charming in the baldheaded row. Of course I don't—and then, even if my Lochinvar came out of the West with saddle bags full of gold, there are two pretty long ifs, even then. My guardian's consent—and mine."

"I'll cross those bridges when I come to them," Tom said, doggedly, "but I'll cross 'em!"

"Yes, that will be time enough," Jessica admitted. "Gardy says my fortune is about one hundred thousand dollars. Do you think you can hook that much off bottom, Tom?"

"No. But, with a little good luck, I might hook up the key to open the vault to it."

Jessica stared at him with a puzzled curiosity, though Tom appeared suddenly to have lost interest in the pleasant and easy task of looking at the girl. Rising in the dory he shaded his eyes with his hand, to glare at a motor cruiser that had come from the little fishing port and was heading out around the eastern end of the island from which Jessica had rowed.

"There they are again," he growled, as if to himself.

"There who are?" Jessica demanded in surprise.

"Those foreign lookin' guys. They were out early this morning fishing over the Corvette ledge—or takin' soundings," he muttered. Jessica said nothing, but, turning, scanned the cruiser with its foreign-looking crew long and with a little frown of anxiety on her face.

Suddenly, coming out of her brown study and with a glance at the curious-looking apparatus which almost filled his dory, she burst into a ringing laugh. "Tom—you old silly! I actually believe you are trying to locate the sunken corvette."

"Well, what if I am? What's more, I'm beginning to believe that I'm not the only one. There are others on the same job—that pair that just passed, and another outfit from New Harbor. Look like Canucks. What gets me, though, is why after all these years there should be three of us with our thoughts apparently suddenly turned to the same job."

Jessica gave him a pitying look which was not quite all feigned, shook her head, then dipped her oars. "I'm afraid you're quite unpromising, Tom. Can't waste any more time on such a wild-eyed bachelor. Aunt Martha's ashore and I must see to luncheon. Better come over in an hour or so for a bite."

"No, thanks. 'Fraid I wouldn't be good company. You might tell the doctor I'll be over a little later for a consultation."

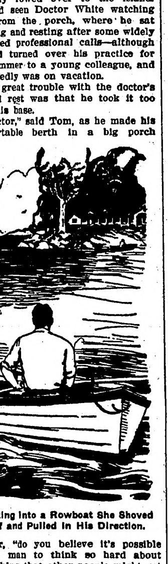
"All right, and I'll tell him to prescribe the best tonic for your troubles, and that's good, steady work."

CHAPTER II

At four of the afternoon Tom called it a day, a twelve-hour day, and leisurely rowed over to the island. He had seen Doctor White watching him from the porch, where he sat smoking and resting after some widely scattered professional calls—although he had turned over his practice for the summer to a young colleague, and supposedly was on vacation.

The great trouble with the doctor's alleged rest was that he took it too near his base.

"Doctor," said Tom, as he made his comfortable berth in a big porch rocker, "do you believe it's possible for a man to think so hard about something that other people might get it off his mental radio?"



Getting Into a Rowboat She Shoved Off and Pulled in His Direction.

The doctor nodded. "It happens constantly," he said.

"Some day," Tom complained, "there'll be no more privacy of mind. We'll all become abstractionists or Einsteins in self defense!"

"Well, perhaps by that time there may have been a mental insulator invented."

"Let's hope so, doctor. There ought to be some way to negative your thoughts, or shuffle 'em. I'm not worrying about this simple device for locating the wreck. It may be in use, for all I know. Just a big compass dragged along the bottom and wired up to a galvanometer thing, another compass, really, that registers any sudden oscillation of the one below when it fetches up against a mass of iron."

"But the corvette must have been a wooden ship, Tom."

"There would be iron enough about her to set the needle chasing its tail. We've got authentic record that she's down there, somewhere."

"They failed to locate her after repeated efforts twenty years ago," objected Doctor White dryly.

"Faulty methods, sir. Settling slowly she might have drifted a long way before fetching up." He went on with a sort of hard determination. "What's the use of my plugging along as a pretty poor reporter when I've got to make a hundred thousand dollars in a hurry or lose Jessica? I think her father was right in asking you to carry out that decision. He showed sense. He knew that she was bound to be the wonder girl she is, and he didn't intend that she should be a poor man's drudge, if he could help it. For my part, if I can't have Jessica I don't care a blinkety-blank what else I don't get; so for the immediate future my only chance, it seems to me, is to play long shots and back 'em with all I've got!"

Doctor White frowned. "I'd call this a long shot at nothing, Tom. It wouldn't get you a hundred thousand, or anything near that if you hit the bull's eye."

"Very likely not, sir. But it might get me a stake to take a shot at the hundred thou. A shot of dynamite laying bare the vein, or the rotary drill down to pay sand. But nothing like this blooming old wreck that's been sitting on bottom for two hundred and thirty odd years. That's just a wild grab at a grubstake. What I'm thinking of is her forty brass guns."

Materials for the Cocktail

Hostess Who Follows Fashion in Serving This Popular Appetizer to Her Guests Has a Wide Choice of Ingredients at Her Command.

We often hear that food of today is not original—that no new dishes are being created. This may or may not be true in general, but we certainly do find in the menus today a few things that were unknown a generation ago. You would, for instance, look in vain for a cocktail recipe. The cocktail is of American origin and was, of course, originally a term used to describe a concentrated mixed drink served as an appetizer.

Perhaps it was the prohibition law that turned our attention to other appetizers and consequently we have developed a long list of combinations which are served as appetizers and to which we have given this title. These are not all liquid by any means, although the tomato juice cocktail has taken such a hold upon us that it appears on almost every restaurant menu at least twice a day.

In many households it is served several times a week both in winter and summer. When cocktails are served to guests in the living room before dinner it has become quite the custom to have a shaker of well-seasoned tomato juice for those who prefer this type of cocktail—and there are many of them. Sometimes grapefruit and orange juice are used in the same way. It is no longer considered smart to force strong cocktails upon guests. Clam juice, well seasoned, is another one of the liquid cocktails which may be served in the living room or as a first course. Cranberry juice cocktail, which is so colorful, is one of the later arrivals for use as a first course, as it is a little sweet to serve with canapes in the living room.

The second type of cocktail may be made from fruits or sea food except in the case of oysters and clams, when it is served in a glass of cocktail type which, is however, usually larger. Oysters and clams are, of course, served around a low cocktail glass filled with a well-seasoned tomato juice. Crab or lobster meat or whole shrimp are usually dressed with a tomato sauce or a mixture of mayonnaise and chili sauce. The meat must be very cold. In restaurants or at a formal dinner in a home the glasses containing the cocktail are sometimes set into larger glasses filled with crushed ice.

Perhaps this is the moment to mention that cocktails of any kind must be very cold when served. There is nothing more unappetizing than a "warmish" cocktail of any description, although fruit undoubtedly suffers more from the absence of chilling than does anything else. Melons, especially when several kinds are combined, are most appetizing when properly chilled and most attractive for cocktail service.

Another appetizing cocktail is prepared by combining avocados and orange or grapefruit sections with tomato sections and using with either of these combinations a piquant french dressing, in which twice as much vinegar as oil as used, a bit of orange juice, worcestershire sauce or horseradish. Almost any combination of fruit when well flavored makes a good cocktail. Personally, I prefer two or three kinds rather than a great mixture of fruit. Some good combinations are white grapes with grapefruit, pineapple with watermelon, honeydew with lemon juice, white grapes with bananas, and grapefruit juice. One or two large berries as a garnish give color and variation from the overdone maraschino cherry. By the way, green cherries in creme de menthe make an attractive variation both as to flavor, and appearance in a fruit cocktail.

Alligator Pear Cocktail.

2 alligator pears.
Fresh pineapple.
2 teaspoons salt.
½ teaspoon paprika.
¼ cup lemon juice.
¾ cup orange juice.

Cut alligator pears in small pieces, add half as much pineapple cut in cubes. Mix remaining ingredients, mix lightly with the fruit, chill and serve in cocktail glasses.

Tomato and Orange Cocktail.

6 small tomatoes.
2 or 3 small oranges.
¼ cup orange juice.
2 tablespoons tarragon vinegar.
1 tablespoon catsup.
1 tablespoon horseradish.
Salt, pepper, sugar.

Peel tomatoes and chill. Pare oranges and separate in sections. Mix other ingredients and season to taste. Cut tomatoes into eighths and arrange in cocktail glasses to look like whole tomatoes. Fill center with orange sections and pour dressing over this. Serve as a first course for luncheon or dinner.

Melon Cocktail.

1 cup watermelon balls.
1 cup cantaloupe balls.
Fresh mint.
2 tablespoons lemon juice.

With a vegetable cutter prepare small balls of fruit. Add lemon juice and chill. Fill glasses. Garnish with sprigs of fresh mint.

Seek Origin of Disease

A search will be conducted in northern Canada for the source of the rabbit disease, tularemia, this winter, by Dr. Robert G. Green, bacteriologist of the University of Minnesota, and a party including Dr. J. A. Allen, pathologist for the province of Manitoba.

Doctor Green, says the Literary Digest, believes that tularemia and other diseases of small animals may have a northern center of origin. He seeks to find out what causes "die-offs" of such animals on a continental scale about once every ten years. The next die-off is due next year.

Why Children Need a Liquid Laxative

The temporary relief children get from some synthetic, habit-forming cathartic may cause bowel strain, and even set-up irritation in the kidneys. A properly prepared liquid laxative brings a perfect movement. There is no discomfort at the time and no weakness after. You don't have to give the child "a double dose" a day or two later.

Can constipation be corrected in children? "Yes!" say medical men. "Yes!" say many mothers who have followed this sensible medical advice: 1. Select a good liquid laxative. 2. Give the dose you find suited to the system. 3. Gradually reduce the dose until the bowels are moving regularly without aid.

An approved liquid laxative (one that is widely used for children) is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. The mild laxative action of this excellent preparation is the best form of help for children—and grown-ups, too. The dose can be regulated for any age or need.

PEG, I'M FRANTIC, THIS WORK MUST BE DONE - AND IV'E A SPLITTING HEADACHE
DON'T WORRY, GET SOME REAL BAYER ASPIRIN AND YOUR HEADACHE WILL BE GONE BEFORE YOU KNOW IT...
2 LATER
LOOK WHAT IV'E DONE, PEG... BAYER ASPIRIN STOPPED THAT AWFUL HEADACHE IN A JIFFY... NEVER FELT BETTER!
I KNEW IT WOULD! BAYER ASPIRIN IS THE QUICKEST SAFE RELIEF FROM PAIN KNOWN...

For Quick Relief Say BAYER Aspirin—When You Buy

Now comes amazingly quick relief from headaches, rheumatism, neuritis, neuralgia . . . the fastest safe relief, it is said, yet discovered.

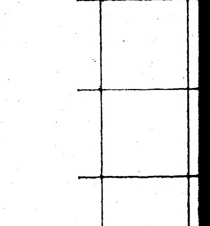
Those results are due to a scientific discovery by which a Bayer Aspirin Tablet begins to dissolve, or disintegrate, in the amazing space of two seconds after touching moisture. And hence to start "taking hold" of pain a few minutes after taking.

The illustration of the glass, here, tells the story. A Bayer Tablet starts to disintegrate almost instantly you swallow it. And thus is ready to go to work almost instantly.

When you buy, though, see that you get the Genuine BAYER Aspirin. For Bayer Aspirin's quick relief always say "BAYER Aspirin."



WHY BAYER ASPIRIN WORKS SO FAST
Drop a Bayer Tablet in a glass of water. Note that BEFORE it touches bottom, it has started to disintegrate.
What it does in this glass it does in your stomach. Hence its fast action.

War on "Hatless" Fad

Spain's "hatless brigade," started recently by young men, has spread until it has developed into a fashion to not cover the head, and as a result 200,000 Spanish families are facing want. Decreased sales have spread poverty among the hat-making and allied industries to such an extent that hatmakers are distributing printed appeals saying: "Our plight today may be your plight tomorrow. So be patriotic and wear a hat to help Spanish industry."

NOTICE OF FARM ALLOTMENTS AND OF MAXIMUM ACREAGES OF WHEAT FOR 1934 UNDER CONTRACTS FOR MEMBERS OF THE WHEAT PRODUCTION CONTROL ASSOCIATION OF MARSHALL COUNTY, STATE OF MINNESOTA.

Listed below are statements of the allotments which have been determined for members of the Marshall County Wheat Production Control Association from Marshall County. These allotments are to hold for the duration of the present wheat contracts, and they are the basis upon which adjustment payments are to be made. They have been determined by the County Allotment Committee after careful consideraion of the application statements. Every effort has been made to have these allotments as accurate as possible. The maximum acreage which may be sown to wheat for the 1934 crop on each farm, under the reduction requirements of the contract, is also listed.

The Marshall County allotment, which has been calculated from records of the United States Department of Agriculture, is 813,260 bushels. This is the total number of bushels allotted to the county under the wheat plan. The total of the individual allotments, including those allotments which could have been assigned to farms which are not participating under the wheat program, must be in line with the county allotment figure. The number of nonparticipating wheat farmers in the county is approximately 90; the average total wheat acreage for those nonparticipating farms during the base period is approximately 929 acres; the total average wheat production on these nonparticipating farms during the base period is 9185 bushels, estimated.

Drink Milk To Avoid "Sniffles" Doctor Advises

Five Rules Given By Medic Society For A Winter Without Colds

To avoid a winter of "one cold right after another," physicians of the Minnesota State Medical Association recommend five rules today. Here they are:

Drink three glasses of milk a day (in addition to a regular well balanced diet,) to help maintain a good supply of body calcium.

Get plenty of exercise on foot.

Keep home and office temperatures down to 68 degrees and see that there is plenty of moisture in the indoor air.

Get plenty of fresh air all the time.

Avoid contact with persons who have colds, and, by the same token, avoid giving others your cold if you should be so unfortunate as to get one.

If these five rules could be followed by everybody the doctors believe there would be far fewer colds, much less time lost and a great drop in the other respiratory diseases that are often mistaken for colds in the preliminary stages.

"Milk supplies calcium to the body and also Vitamin A both of which appear to have real protective value against infections of the respiratory tract," the doctors say. "It is possible to take calcium separately as a medicine and to get your vitamins in concentrates as medicines, too. Wise people will get theirs in milk, however, which has other valuable food elements to offer and is simpler and cheaper besides. Cod liver oil which contains a larger supply of vitamin D is advisable for children in the winter months."

The best exercise for keeping well is taken in the open air, walking, skiing, skating or sliding, the doctors declare. Reducing exercises rolled on the bedroom floor are not a substitute.

The part played by over-heated rooms in the prevalence of winter colds is easy to see, according to the bulletin. Too much dry heat dries up the mucous membrane and renders it liable to inflammation and infection.

"People are still very careless about exposing themselves and others to colds," the doctors point out. "The cold victim may be scrupulous about covering his sneezes and coughs, but he is usually very careless about talking into others' faces at close range. Also about shaking hands, especially with children, after using his handkerchief.

"One of the best of all known treatments for cold is a day or two in bed. This treatment also minimizes the danger of spreading the cold.

"Cold vaccines are used occasionally, and sometimes with success. They are still in the experimental stage."

CHICKS NEED "ELBOW ROOM" AT THE TABLE

Everyone will agree that a good ration is essential to raising good chicks, but not everyone recognizes the important part feeders play in raising these good chicks efficiently and economically, says Miss Cora E. Cooke, extension poultry specialist, University Farm, St. Paul.

"Enough feeder space should be provided so that all chicks can eat at one time," Miss Cooke advises. "Lack of space causes slow and uneven growth and, frequently, troubles with cannibalism, for an idle chick gets into mischief. A 4-foot feeder, feeding from both sides, will take care of 100 chicks up to about 3 weeks. Then more space must be provided. It takes two feeders for 100 chicks during most of the growing period.

"Feeders that get filled with litter and filth discourage eating. Set feeders up on stands and clean off any litter that does accumulate.

"Feeders that are too expensive discourage providing as many as are needed. The two-for-a-quarter kind that can be made at home makes unnecessary any delay because of the cost. A simple flat trough made of lath, a 4-inch board and a revolving reel lengthwise of the feeder to keep chicks out of the feed, are easy to make and entirely satisfactory.

"As chicks grow, the feeders can be raised higher from the floor and thus use floor space to better advantage.

"Floors can be kept much cleaner and chicks protected against disease, if feeders are placed on shallow platforms, covered with ¾-inch mesh hardware cloth. These should be just big enough for the feeder and to collect the droppings and waste feed and water," according to Miss Cooke.

The Village Election

The annual village caucus meeting was held at the school house on Monday evening and as usual only a few of the interested taxpayers turned out to nominate candidates to be elected to office at the annual village election to be held on Tuesday, Dec. 5.

The following men were nominated: For president of the village council, Olaf Ness and H. O. Hanson. For councilman for three years, C. L. Sandberg and Gilbert Sanoden.

For village treasurer for two years, A. L. Carlson and Rev. L. M. Redal. For justice of the peace for two years, Ole Backlund and Marvin Sandberg. For constable for two years, Joseph Nelson and Hjalmer Peterson.

The rest of the council holds over and are as follows: Geo. Fricker, clerk; O. E. Sovde and Harry Engen councilmen. The other two office holders are: F. K. Fredrickson, justice of the peace and Sam Lorentson village assessor.

Let us see you turn out to vote at the election on Tuesday and show a little interest in the men upon whom you cast the burden of carrying the resposibility of having charge of the village affairs.

Public opinion get a little sour sometimes but if all the taxpayers in the village give the council their cooperation there need be no friction when important matters come up. Bring your grievance to the council when they have their regular meeting once a month and don't single out the president of the council or any other member and jump on them individually for any matter as they are not always to blame.

Notice of Village Election

Notice is hereby given that the annual village election will be held at the Village Hall on Tuesday, December 5th, 1933, for the purpose of electing village officers for the coming year.

The following offices to be filled are: President of the Council for one year.; One councilman for three years; One justice of the peace for two years and one constable for two years.

The polls are open from 9 a. m., to 5 o'clock p. m.

A Bear Story

It has been reported to us that one of the Ringbo boys had big time while out hunting. It happened as he was making a little social call on a big papa bear whom was denned up in a road grade for the winter.

At this time of the year bears have no love for company, and when the brave hunter yelled "hello" at the door of the den, he was greeted with a whooping roar that which sounded cold enough to freeze the Niagara Falls, and which left the hunter powerless to move. But Bruin moved out and hit for the open country. He was making time and jumped over the hunter and in so doing set his hind feet into his back for good footing which resulted in the hunters coat ripping from end to end.

This was bad enough but when the bears' claws caught his belt he was passed along backwards like a football and landed in the bear den. It took the other boys a few minutes to explain to him that he was not dead but merely scared stiff, and that next time he goes out like that he should wear an armored suit.

Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Anderson and Iver and Nettie Borsheim were entertained at the Guy Anderson home on Sunday.

Several cars were ditched over the week end due to icy and slippery roads. None of those whom were figured in the smash-ups here were hurt, but Frank Smith of Thief River lost his life when his car skidded off the road south of that city.

Ours---Not Mine

(An Editorial)

Public property is anything which does not belong to you alone, but which belongs to the community and public in general. A good example of this is our school property. People often judge us and our school by the appearance of the building. If you enter a school building on whose walls pictures were drawn, names written, and chalk stepped into the floor, that wouldn't be a very good conception of the ideal school.

The public is doing much that you may have this school and enjoy the conveniences which they have so obtained for you. Certainly ruining it is no way to show your appreciation.

So next time you are tempted to write your name or draw a picture on a piece of school furniture ask yourself these questions before you act. Would you do this if it were your own property? Do I gain anything by doing this? Why do I do it? If every one answered these questions truthfully I feel assured that the appearance of our school building would be improved and people would come to realize that public property is Ours—not mine.—Ethel Nohre.

Notice for Bids

Sealed bids will be received by the clerk of school district No. 58 for 10 cords of green white split poplar wood to be delivered at the school house by Feb. 1, 1934. The bids to be in the hands of the clerk by Dec. 11, 1933.

The board reserves the right to reject any or all bids.

UNFORTUNATE CHILDREN

Approximately one-fifth of all preschool and school children in the United States are suffering from malnutrition, inadequate housing and lack of medical care, according to the children's bureau of the United States Department of Labor. In some regions, says the bureau, the proportion of below par children is even greater.

This tragic situation deeply impressed a recent conference of state health officers, a majority of whom placed the nutritional needs of children above all other national requirements.—Literary Digest.

To improve Any child's APPETITE

A sluggish appetite means a sluggish colon. Correct this condition called stasis, and see how quickly a listless, drooping boy or girl begins to eat—and gain! The only "medicine" such children need is pure, unadulterated fig syrup.

California syrup of figs is doing wonderful things for ailing, sickly children all over the United States.

If your baby, boy or girl is bilious—pale-faced and dull-eyed from constipation—breath bad mornings, tongue coated all the time—don't give cathartics that weaken twenty feet of bowels! Instead, a little syrup of figs that doesn't disturb either stomach or bowels, but does act on the lower colon—where the trouble lies.

Nature never has made a finer laxative for children; they all love the wholesome, fruity flavor of the real California syrup of figs. It's purely vegetable, but every druggist has it all bottled, with directions. Begin with it at once. Your child will soon be eating better and feeling better. Keep on with the syrup of figs a few days and see amazing improvement in appetite, color, weight, and spirits.

Children who get syrup of figs, now and then, keep well and avoid colds.

NOTICE: The bottlers of California Syrup of Figs respectfully warn mothers that the promises made here apply only to the genuine product in bottles plainly marked CALIFORNIA.

SYNOPSIS

Tom Jordan, young New England newspaper reporter in love with Jessica Poole, is barred from becoming an acknowledged suitor because of conditions of her father's will that her husband must match her small fortune with his own. To do this, Jordan has a wild hope of wealth from the salvage of a long-sunken French corvette.

"Brass guns?"

"Brass or bronze. She had them, if she was the Fourquet, as I have reason to believe. She was sent up there by the French government to seize the colony of Pemaquid that had been founded by Capt. John Smith. On her way north, off Eleuthera island, she had captured and burned a vessel that was formerly the Spanish caravel Purisima Concepcion, but which shortly before had been cut off by buccaneers and was being operated by them piratically. There was a rumor that the booty taken off her by the Fourquet was considerable."

"Well, if there should be a rival crowd, that would make your newspaper story all the more interesting," said Doctor White. "You could work in this idea of radio telepathy we've mentioned. I am willing to admit that the possibilities are fascinating! Let's walk to the point and see if there is anybody out there now."

They rose and walked to the end of the porch in a world of sand and sunshine. At the corner of the house they saw Jessica coming toward them through the woods, by the path from the little cove. She had thrown a long white coat over her bathing suit and against the dark rich background that held on that hazy afternoon she looked like a Druid priestess coming from her religious rites under her sacred oak.

At sight of her guardian and Tom, Jessica swung forward eagerly. "Gardy, there are two Frenchmen over in the cove. They asked me—politely—if they might land and walk out on the Whale."

Doctor White frowned. "That shall be promptly discouraged. I draw the line at any sort of intrusion while you are bathing, especially when you are alone. Altogether too many rough characters hereabouts, to allow anything like that."

"But these didn't really intrude," Jessica protested. "They stopped their motor and one of them, who was elderly, stood up and took off his hat and asked in a very nice way if they might land when I had finished my bath."

Doctor White raised his eyebrows and glanced at Tom. "What did you tell them, my dear?"

"I called back that they could come ashore whenever they liked, as I was going out. The older man thanked me and begged me not to hurry. But I had really got enough, so I went up into the woods and watched them from behind a little fir tree.

"The young man sculled in the boat like a sailor and helped his father ashore. I heard him say, 'Doucement, papa.' They had a chart and what looked to me, from the distance, like a compass with an azimuth. They started to walk over to the Whale, as I watched.

"Oh, don't frown at me that way, Gardy! I can take care of myself, you know that, even if my money and my 'hordes' of possible beaux are laid out wisely and drawing about the same amount of interest for me and from me—four and three-fourths per cent!

"I almost eloped with a pirate yesterday. Yes, I did! Real pirates always are ballasted with doubloons, aren't they?"

Both men started. "You?" cried the doctor. "When? Where?" He moved as if to start in instant pursuit. Tom said nothing, though the set of resolution in his clean jaw deepened and an anxious light played for a moment in narrowed eyes.

"I. Yesterday. Out there," she answered demurely. "I was swimming, when along came a semi-cabin cruiser fairly scooting. She was a rakish little boat, too. If I hadn't moved fast she'd have gone straight over me!

"Of course I trudgeoned out of the way as fast as I could, but would you believe it, that bloody pirate hove over his tiller—tried to run me down! It was a narrow squeak, but when I was up from my sudden dive I certainly told him what I thought of him.

"He was a swarthy chap, from Miquelon, I suppose. I wonder what particular business he could have had in that lonely spot."

"The frog!" growled Tom with all his native coastwise intolerance.

And before he could speak to ask further just what she meant she had flicked up the skirt of her robe and passed into the house.

"If I ever—see—him!" growled Tom slowly and distinctly.

Doctor White looked at Tom. "That will certainly have to be looked into," he said. "Meanwhile let's see about these others," and set off on a path that skirted the top of the low, broken cliffs along the shore. Coming presently on the corner that presented to open sea and in sight of the big rock called "The Whale" from its resemblance to a stranded cetacean, they discovered the two men whom Jessica had described, standing on its rounded back. The tide was out, so that the rock could be reached dry shod from the shore.

Both strangers were neatly dressed, as if for the deck of an ocean liner. The older man was in gray tweeds with a hat to match and a long cape thrown back over his shoulders and buttoned behind. The younger wore a blue serge suit and a yachting cap. He was holding a box compass in both hands, while the elder was examining, with intense eagerness, a half-rolled chart.

Catching sight of Doctor White and Tom they raised their hats in a formal, courteous way, exchanged a word or two, then began to make their way to the shore.

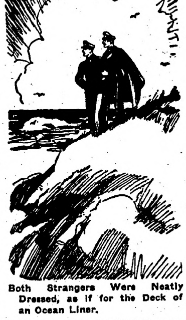
As they drew near, Doctor White perceived that the elder wore the rosette of officer, and the younger the red ribbon of chevalier of the Legion d'Honneur. Even without being in favor of their errand and ready to bristle instantly because of their intrusion on Jessica, both Doctor White and Tom were conscious of something likeable about their handsome, well-bred faces.

Coming close, they paused, and the elder of the strangers said in scarcely accented English, "I hope, sir, that we have not done so moch wrong in trespass'?"

"No, you are entirely at liberty to land, gentlemen," responded Doctor White, albeit in a tone that bespoke more courtesy than cordiality.

"But we must apologize for having disturb' the young lady. Unfortunately we do not see her until too late. You will permit we introduce ourselves? I am the Admiral Comte de Corlay, of the French navy, retired, and this is my son Robert, lieutenant of the French navy, on six months leave."

Doctor White returned the introduction. The younger De Corlay, who had a rather merry, mischievous face, smiled. When he spoke it was in perfect English, with an extraordinary and at times comical mixture of British and American idiom.



Both Strangers Were Neatly Dressed, as if for the Deck of an Ocean Liner.

"I say," he remarked, "I hope you don't think we're spies. You must wonder what we're doing here."

Tom spoke up. "I'll bet I can make a close guess, Lieutenant."

Robert looked amused. "Well, what then, Mr. Jordan?" he asked.

"You've come to try to locate the French corvette Fourquet that struck this ledge out here and sank, quite a good many years ago."

The effect of this speech was startling. Robert and his father exchanged a glance of astonished dismay. Both faces seemed to harden, Robert's whitening a little under its olive tan. Then the count asked slowly, as if with some effort, "And why should you think such a thing, monsieur?"

"Well, Count, I guess it's because I happen to be looking for her myself."

Doctor White, observing the consternation in both of the strangers' faces, gave a short laugh. He was rather glad that Tom had laid this first card on the table.

"About an hour ago, gentlemen, before we learned that you were here," he remarked, "Mr. Jordan told me of his premonition that others were already on the field with the same object in view. He asked me if I believed in mental radio telepathy."

"Sapristi," murmured the count. "It can be not so moch else!"

"But why should you want to locate this messy old hulk?" Robert asked. "She must be the barnacles' breakfast food, by now."

"Maybe for the same reason that you do, Lieutenant," Tom answered, then with an afterthought added, as a sort of volley of grape or canister, "and this third outfit."

"What's that?" Robert gasped. "Oh come, you don't mean to say that there are still others in the show?"

"Looks that way, Lieutenant. For several days past I've noticed three men in a half-decked motor semi-cabin cruiser drifting round off here. At first I thought they might be bootleggers from Nova Scotia or maybe Miquelon, but now I have come to believe they're something worse—pirates!"

"Miquelon?" The count's face was transformed suddenly from that of an amiable elderly gentleman to the fierce sea fighter of the race of Breton nobility from which he sprang. He looked at Robert and shot out the name, "Sebastien!"

News of Minnesota

EVENTS of the week throughout the "State of Ten Thousand Lakes" told in brief form

Windom—For the first time in 10 years a Cottonwood county grand jury convened here to consider a criminal case.

Luverne—The community chest quota of $500 for Luverne was exceeded, the volunteer canvassing committee reported.

Stillwater—Chris Biejum, 40 years old, a guard at the state penitentiary here for about a year, committed suicide at his station on the outer wall.

Balaton—Three bandits raided the Farmers and Merchants State Bank, held up two employees and three customers and escaped with $1,200 in cash.

So. St. Paul—Several hundred employes of Armour & Co., went on strike over demands for a 10 cents an hour increase and recognition of their union.

Virginia—After several weeks of discussion, the Virginia city council has agreed upon architects to draw plans for the city's proposed $100,000 municipal hospital.

Minneapolis—A vigorous effort to keep the present state liquor laws on the statute books was promised by drys as they prepared for the coming special legislative session.

Minneapolis—The board of trustees of the Twin City sewage disposal project meeting, approved a three-year program of construction for the plant and approved a salary schedule of $150,000 a year for officials and engineers connected with the construction.

Bemidji—No objection of any kind was raised against plans for the location of the new highway bridge across the Mississippi river where Trunk Highways No. 4 and No. 8 from the south and east enter Bemidji at the hearing conducted by the war department.

St. Paul—Re-employment and public works machinery of the state speeded up to secure immediate benefits of the new $400,000,000 federal emergency work program to tide over 4,000,000 workers on full-pay but temporary jobs until the federal permanent construction program gets under way in the spring.

Lake City—By an overwhelming majority, Lake City voters favored a bond issue for installation of a sewage disposal plant and to make dock and harbor improvements. The city will issue bonds for $50,000, the remainder of the $73,000 estimated cost to be paid for by government grant of 30 per cent of the amount needed for labor and material.

St. Paul—With selection of a jury composed of five farmers, two women, an accountant, a blacksmith, a hardware clerk, a grain dealer, and a railway clerk, the government began presentation of its case against Roger Touhy, notorious Chicago gang leader, and three of his lieutenants, charged with the $100,000 kidnaping of William Hamm, Jr., wealthy brewer.

Austin—1,000 farm strikers and striking employees of the Hormel packing plant held possession of the $5,000,000 Hormel packing plant after a battle in which they repulsed deputy sheriffs who attacked them with tear gas. Leaders of the strikers accepted a proposal, made by Governor Olson, that their demands for wage increases be submitted to the state industrial commission for arbitration.

Minneapolis—A carefully-laid plan to holdup the Marquette National bank and Trust company was frustrated, and six masked machinegun bandits fled without loot after holding up a custodian and messenger and keeping them prisoners in the bank loby for nearly two hours. The attempt was foiled by the auditor of the bank, when he fled instead of complying with the bandits wishes.

Minneapolis—Brewers and wine makers already are increasing the alcoholic content of their beverages—and storing the product pending the official demise of prohibition on Dec. 5. But Minneapolis and Minnesota, for the present at least, will have to be satisfied with the 3.2 beverage even after national prohibition is officially buried. In less than a month the United States will be "wet" again, but it doesn't mean a thing to Minnesota, at least not until the state legislature repeals a prohibition law, passed at the last session, forbidding sale or distribution of beverages containing more than 3.2 per cent alcohol by weight.

Granite Falls—The city council has been authorized to proceed with the proposed sewer plant project by voters who approved issuance of bonds to finance the work. The money, $58,000, will be borrowed from the state.

St. Paul—Crop shortages, together with a possible severe winter, constitute real menaces for upland game birds, E. V. Willard, state conservation commissioner, declared. He urged that sportsmen's club throughout the state co-operate in establishing feeding stations for wild fowl.

CAP AND BELLS

HER HEART'S DESIRE

A fond father was desirous of announcing to his little daughter that the fairies had visited the house and brought a beautiful gift.

"Well, darling," he said, "the fairies have brought something to mother which you will love as much as mother and I do."

The child looked up eagerly.

"Oh, daddy, do tell me what it is."

Father, looking very solemn, said: "I'll give you one guess. What is it you want from mother more than anything else in the world?"—and then collapsed as the darling, clapping hands, shrieked: "Guinea pigs!"

Really Cold

The explorer, recently returned from one of his many travels into the land of ice and snow, was recounting his adventures.

"Was it very cold?" asked a listener.

"Cold?" repeated the explorer. "Why, it was so cold that I couldn't blow the candle out. The flame had frozen stiff and I had to break it off."

Higher Education

Extract from a letter received by a mother from her daughter at college:

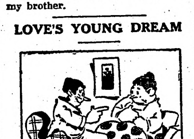
"I realize, mother, that daddy is paying a lot to keep me at school and that I must try and learn something. I am taking up contract."—Boston Transcript.

Natural Punching Bag

Old Gentleman—My boy, you must not fight. Haven't you been taught to love your enemies?

Bobby—He's not my enemy—he's my brother.

LOVE'S YOUNG DREAM



"Did your husband write you poetry before you were married?"

"No; but he used to write what we both thought was poetry."

Dumb

"What is Philip doing these days?"

"Running a branch business."

"But who on earth buys branches?"—Stuttgarter Illustrierte.

Knew the Stock

"You advertised for a cigar clerk?"

"Yes, I want an experienced man. Do you know the ropes?"

HE NEEDED WATER

Small Eric wanted to go to the swimming baths with the bigger boys, but his teacher thought it wouldn't be safe.

"But I'm a good swimmer, sir," he pleaded.

"Can you swim a length?" asked the teacher.

The boy did not seem to grasp his meaning, so to make it clear the teacher said, "Can you swim from your desk to the door?"

"Oh, no, sir," Eric replied, "there's no water there."—London Tit-Bits.

Cards

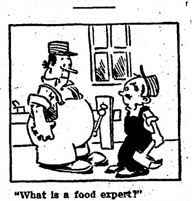
"Mesa Bill has gone away up in society since he gathered up wealth," said Broncho Pete.

"I still aver," answered Cactus Joe, "that he and his tribe are a bunch of card sharps."

"That wouldn't have anything to do with society."

"Yes, it would. The way they played the society game was by doin' trick shuffles with the visitin' cards."

AND HIGH IN RANK



"What is a food expert?"

"Any man who can make his wages buy enough for the family table."

No Dignities Due

"Are you interested in a war on crime?"

"Of course," answered Senator Sorghum. "But I'm not in favor of calling it anything so dignified as a war. It is a case where all good citizens should get together and conduct a plain ordinary rattlesnake fight."—Washington Star.

Head of the Class

"Stan," explained the teacher, "means the place of! Afghanistan is the place of the Afghans—where they are located, you see. Hindustan is the place of the Hindus. Can any one give me another example? How about you, James?"

"Umbrellastan," suggested James promptly, "the place for umbrellas."

Modern Youth

Teacher—Cuthbert, you have been very naughty today and I am going to keep you after school half an hour every day this week.

Cuthbert—Well, teacher, I don't care on my own account, but ain't you afraid that people will talk about us?

Nonsupport

"You say that your husband doesn't buy you any clothes?"

"No, judge. If my tongue were coated it would have to be at my own expense."

Golfing Pleasantries

Bert—I say, Gert, do be more careful! You just missed me.

Gert—I'm awfully sorry.

GETTING RID OF HIM

"No more shall I hear Tolliver's footsteps on yonder walk every night as the clock strikes eight."

"Goodness gracious, Naomi!"

"And the old parlor light will never be turned out for him again."

"You don't mean it!"

"I do. And furthermore, he will never sit on the sofa beside me seven nights a week and call me pet names as he has been doing for two years."

"You could knock me over with a feather!"

"And tonight I am going to burn all his old love letters and empty out my bureau drawer."

"But—are you going to discard him? I thought he was a very good fellow, as men go."

"Discard him! Why, you goose, I am going to marry him."

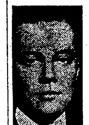
Progress of Negotiations for Recognition of Soviet Russia; Germany Supports Hitler Policies; La Guardia's Victory in New York Election.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

WITH the earnest, not to say eager, assistance of William Bullitt, special assistant secretary of state for Russian affairs, the conversations leading up to recognition of the Soviet government proceeded in Washington. But because the matter was so complicated, and because President Roosevelt insisted on discussing with M. Litvinov the issues previously covered in the State department by Undersecretary William Phillips, the negotiations went into another week. The expectation was that they would be concluded before the President left Washington for his Thanksgiving holiday in Georgia, but Mr. Bullitt said that while this was possible, the business might take longer. It appeared Mr. Roosevelt was not satisfied to let the matter of economic relations and the question of the Russian debt to Americans go over until after formal recognition.



W. C. Bullitt

Senator H. D. Hatfield of West Virginia, one of the few Republican senators who has been bold enough to attack the NRA, also has come out strongly against the recognition of Soviet Russia, but rather ridiculously he bases his objection mainly on the ground that the Russian Communists are atheists. Says Mr. Hatfield:

"This great nation which proclaims to the world its belief in a Supreme Being, in the imperishable motto of its coins, in the messages and state papers of its Presidents, other public documents, the acts of congress and the oaths of its officers, now admits to its household the apostles of another religion—for Leninism is a religion—that says: 'There is no God!'

"Yet, I do not believe the American people—Jew or Gentile—are ready to forsake the religion of their forefathers. To hold otherwise is to hold that our government is founded upon a myth."

Further on in his argument the senator becomes more rational, saying:

"Is our trade with Russia to be financed by the American government? If so, what are they going to pay us with? Are they to pay us in goods? Then, that means displacement of so many Americans from present and future jobs. Are they to pay us with money obtained from exports to other nations? If so, then they displace by so much our exports that formerly went into these markets.

"It would appear that after lending $28,000,000,000 of America's money to public and private borrowers in foreign lands, and being confronted with defaults on the greater part of these immense sums, that we had learned our lesson. If private creditors will not lend to Russia, is it any better risk to the government of the United States?"

CUBA'S latest revolution collapsed when the loyal troops captured the Atares fortress and a lot of the rebels; but the A. B. C. secret society leaders declare they will continue their efforts to drive President Grau and his government from the island. Rebel bands were still operating in the eastern provinces, though Havana was comparatively peaceful.

DETERMINED to give the monetary plan of Professors Warren and Rogers a full chance to work out, the President, it was stated authoritatively, will not change his policy at present. If it fails, he stands ready to turn to devaluation of the dollar and return to the gold standard. In its first three weeks the program of buying gold at premium prices at home and abroad raised the price of gold considerably, and the sponsors of the plan assert it also has been responsible for the rise of 4.1 per cent in commodity prices.

The "committee for the nation," whose ideas are largely embodied in the present monetary program, now has a rival organization, known as the "committee on monetary policy." It was formed by 26 business and industrial leaders of Chicago who indorse the stand recently taken by a group of mid-western university professors against tinkering with the monetary unit. The new committee thus sets forth its policy:

"1. Recovery can be achieved only through an increased volume of business, which increases wages and the whole national income.

"2. The fundamental condition for an increased volume of business is confidence in the dollar and in the national credit, and a reasonable expectation of profit for individual enterprise, in industry, in trade, and in agriculture.

"3. Confidence in the dollar and in the national credit demands that currency experimentation be abandoned, and that depreciation of the curreucy be stopped before it gets out of hand.

"4. A higher price level is desirable only if accompanied by increased income—for farmers, wage earners and business men, big and little—and this cannot be achieved by manipulation of our currency.

"5. Further depreciation of the dollar by government action is the road to printing press money, which means the further disorganization of agriculture and industrial production, and the ultimate impoverishment of the nation—of its wage earners, its farmers and of every individual citizen, debtor and creditor alike.

"6. An announced determination to return to a fixed-gold standard, giving effect to current needs and experience, is indispensable to elimination of uncertainty and to the restoration of confidence in the dollar."

This all may be dry reading for the average American, but it behooves all citizens to learn what they can concerning the vital topic of the nation's financial present and future.

GERMANY responded nobly to the demands of Chancellor Hitler for support of his foreign policies. Nearly forty-three and one-half million persons, or 96 per cent of the electorate, went to the polls, and of this vast number only a few more than two million voted "no" to the question submitted to the plebiscite:

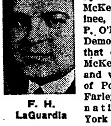
"Do you approve the policy of your government and are you ready to recognize it as an expression of your own view and your own will and solemnly pledge yourself to it?"

The voters elected 661 members of the new reichstag, and all of them had been picked by Hitler. But this was not remarkable, since no name not so selected was permitted on the ballots.

REPRESENTATIVE Dickstein of New York and his house committee on immigration and naturalization arrived in Washington and began their investigation of alleged Nazi activities in the United States. The revelations may be interesting even if not important.

GERMANY having taken itself out of the disarmament conference, Italy now announces it will participate as an observer merely, and the Hungary effectives committee says it will maintain a like attitude. Moreover, Italy declares it ignores everything approved by the great powers since July 15, when Germany accepted the original MacDonald plans as a basis for discussion; this includes the London and Paris agreements and the plan which Sir John Simon offered the day Germany left the League of Nations. Observers in Geneva were forced to the conclusion that the disarmament conference in its present form was doomed to failure.

FIORELLO H. LA GUARDIA, dynamic and radical Republican, is the mayor-elect of New York, and Tammany has been "smashed" once more—for how long no one knows. The fusion candidate easily defeated Joseph V. McKee, recovery nominee, and Mayor John P. O'Brien, Tammany Democrat, who ran in that order. Because McKee had the open and vigorous backing of Postmaster James Farley, who is both national and New York state Democratic chairman, the Republicans claimed that the result was a great victory for their party and a slap at the Roosevelt administration. The truth is that it was rather a slap at Farley and machine politics in general as well as representing a revolt against the Tammany regime.



F. H. LaGuardia

Tammany Hall is furious and an internecine war has broken out in the organization. Boss John F. Curry, it was expected, would be asked to relinquish his leadership.

Municipal elections were held in many other cities, and some of them were almost as interesting as that in the metropolis. The Republicans and Democrats broke about even, and one city, Bridgeport, Conn., elected a Socialist mayor.

Democrats made striking gains in upstate New York. Buffalo elected a Democratic mayor for the first time since 1914; Rochester went Democratic for the first time in 30 years; Poughkeepsie, nearest city to the home of President Roosevelt, named a Democrat for the first time in four years; Cortland went Democratic for the first time since its incorporation 33 years ago; Lockport also went Democratic for the first time in 16 years. In Jamestown, a thirty-four-year-old newspaper reporter, Leon F. Roberts, unseated Samuel A. Carlson, who has been mayor 24 years.

Pittsburgh, Pa., upset the Mellon Republican machine, electing William McNair, a youthful newscomer in politics who was backed by the Roosevelt Democrats. Frank Couzens, Republican, son of Senator James Couzens, won the mayoralty of Detroit. The Republicans also won in Cleveland, electing former Gov. Harry L. Davis. In Boston a Democrat, Frederick W. Mansfield, was chosen mayor.

Dried Fruits for Menus in Winter

Almost Numberless Variety of Combinations to Be Employed.

With the berry season over we begin to depend more than we do in summer on oranges, bananas and dried fruits which are in season all year round. Melons, pears, peaches and apples will of course have their usual places in the menu, but with colder days we find ourselves naturally using the others alternatively with the more seasonal fruits for breakfast and for desserts.

Many families have their particular favorite among dried fruits and do not vary them. Prunes are a general favorite, with apricots a close second. Peaches of excellent quality have become more favored, since it is possible to get them of first grade. Dried apples for sauce and pies are traditionally used in some homes where recipes are handed down. Figs are also well liked, both for stewing and for such puddings as fig tapioca, which, made with brown sugar and a few nuts and served with whipped cream, is always in demand. Oranges and bananas are good, cooked or uncooked, with custards and tapioca as well as with pastry. Dates and raisins are fruits which combine readily with almost any other kinds of fruit and with all sorts of desserts and cereals. Except when they are used in cake mixtures these are at their best cooked but little. It is best to add either of them at the last moment. For instance, a hot custard may be poured over either of these alone or combined with oranges or bananas. certain amount of flavor from them will go into the custard, but some will be retained in the fruit, to the advantage of the whole pudding.

Some recipes for the old-fashioned rice pudding call for putting in raisins during the last half hour of cooking. Surely there is no better flavor for puddings, cakes and cookies than orange. A little grated orange rind will usually improve any recipe. While perfectly ripe, raw bananas are hard to improve, there are a number of ways in which they can be used in cooking which are delicious.

Apricot Meringue Pudding.

¾ pound dried apricots.
1 cup granulated sugar.
3 eggs.
½ cup powdered sugar.
½ teaspoon vanilla.

Wash the apricots, cover with water, and cook until very soft. Beat together with a fork, and add half the granulated sugar. Beat the yolks of the eggs slightly, add the rest of the sugar, and beat into the apricot mixture. Bake 15 minutes in a moderate oven (325 degrees Fahrenheit). Beat the whites of the eggs stiff but not dry, add the powdered sugar and vanilla, and pile on top of the pudding. Return to the oven and bake at a moderate temperature (325 degrees Fahrenheit) until brown. Serve hot or ice cold.

Baked Banana Tart.

4 large bananas.
¾ cup water.
¼ teaspoon salt.
3 slices lemon.
3 cloves.
½ cup granulated sugar.
3 eggs.
½ cup powdered sugar.
1 tablespoon orange juice and grated rind.
1 pastry shell.

Slice the bananas, cover with water, add the salt and the lemon, into which the cloves have been stuck. Cook until the bananas are very soft, remove the lemon and cloves, and add the egg yolks, mixed with the granulated sugar. While the filling is cooking the pastry shell should be baked about four minutes in a hot oven (450 degrees Fahrenheit). Fill the shell, return to the oven, and bake 15 minutes in a moderate oven (325 degrees Fahrenheit). Beat the whites of the eggs stiff but not dry,

Stewed Apples.

6 apples.
1 cupful sugar.
1 cupful water.
½ lemon rind.

Boil the sugar, water and lemon-rind together in a shallow saucepan until the sugar is dissolved. Pare, slice into eighths and core the apples. Cook half the quality in the sirup until they are transparent, remove, add the rest of the apples and cook in the same manner. It may be necessary to add a small amount of water if the sirup cooks down. After cooking and removing all the apples, pour the rest of the sirup over them and serve as a dessert or with steamed rice as a sauce. A little raspberry and currant juice added to the sirup will give an attractive color and flavor.

add the powdered sugar, and when well blended add the orange juice and rind slowly. Pile on top of the filling, return to the oven, and bake at a moderate temperature (325 degrees Fahrenheit) until the meringue is a golden brown. Candied orange or lemon peel may be used to garnish the meringue. If this is done it should be placed on the top one minute before removing from the oven.

Valuable Food Plants European and Asiatic

While America first produced many food plants which have since found their way into the farms and gardens of the world, many of its most important crops are the results of importations, including wheat and all other small grains. These, together with most common fruits and green vegetables, are European or Asiatic in origin, although the watermelon, a delicacy considered to be "100 per cent American" originally came from Africa.

The biggest and most important crop of tropical South America is coffee, the product of a tree first discovered in Abyssinia and which was not brought to the New world until 1720. The finest grades of coffee are now grown on the high sloping Andean mountain ranges and constitute Colombia's principal crop. From the first seedling brought to that country, more than 480,000,000 coffee trees have sprung, incidentally called by many "the most beautiful trees in the world"; and 85 per cent of the coffee they bear finds its way from the Colombian slopes to the United States.

PERFECTLY WONDERFUL! THAT MARVELOUS BAYER ASPIRIN ACTUALLY STOPPED MY HEADACHE IN A FEW MINUTES!

Don't Forget Real BAYER Aspirin Starts "Taking Hold" in Few Minutes

Here is quicker relief from pain—the fastest safe relief, it is said, ever known. This is due to a scientific discovery by which BAYER Aspirin starts "taking hold" of pain a few minutes after taking.

The illustration of the glass here tells the story. A Bayer tablet starts to disintegrate or dissolve—go to work—almost instantly. This means quick relief from pain—fewer lost hours from headache, neuritis, rheumatism. And safe relief. For genuine Bayer Aspirin does not harm the heart.

When you buy, see that you get the genuine Bayer Aspirin. The best way is never to ask for aspirin by the name "aspirin" alone. But if you want Bayer Aspirin's quick relief always to say "BAYER Aspirin."

WHY BAYER ASPIRIN WORKS SO FAST

Drop a Bayer Tablet in a glass of water. Note that BEFORE it touches bottom, it has started to disintegrate.

What it does in this glass it does in your stomach. Hence its fast action.

Fricker Named Drivers' License Agent in Holt

It will not be necessary for automobile drivers of Marshall county seeking drivers' licenses to go to Warren to apply for their licenses, A. C. Swandby, clerk of court, in charge of county registrations, announced this week the appointment of sub-agents in various towns of the county.

Through the appointment of sub-agents in the various villages, the auto drivers will be saved considerable expense by not having to go to Warren to make their applications, said Mr. Swandby.

Automobile Drivers' Licenses can be applied for at the Marshall County State bank here, from Geo. Fricker who is local agent for Mr. Swandby.

As soon as the applications have been made out by the agent they are mailed to Mr. Swandby who in turn after going over the applications, submits them to N. W. Elsberg, state highway commissioner, who makes out the licenses. The licenses are mailed direct to the applicant after approval by the highway department head.

Those whom need these licenses are urged to apply for them early so as to avoid a heavy last minute rush. It is estimated that there will be a million and half of these drivers' licenses issued in Minnesota.

The Menagerie Will Soon Be On Display Again

On Tuesday in New Jersey, Wisconsin, Louisiana and Nevada, any one who was 21 years of age, and who felt inclined were given the opportunity to push themselves thru swinging doors and park their feet on polished brass rails, lean their elbow on the old-fashioned bar and ask for anything from beer to full proof spirits.

Where is the man who said that saloons would never come back? Of course it is no use to get sore about it as, you know it not only means millions to the big whiskey manufacturers but it will renew the stuffed animal business. You see whiskey will taste better if you can look at a mounted eagle on a bar post and a few deer heads or a full sized deer or, better still if you can crane your neck and gaze into the scowling face of a bull moose head hung high on a saloon wall.

Stuffed snakes are not highly recommended as an entertaiment feature. Bar-keepers claim you will see them yourself as soon as they get you stuffed full of hard stuff. Yep! you will see all colors, kinds and sizes.

Spelling Contest Held

The annual Spelling contest of the Holt section was held at the Holt schoolhouse last Saturday afternoon. Clarence Doran conducted the contest, and the judges were Mrs. Joe Nelson, Mrs. Louise Davidson, and Miss Vivian Peterson.

Safetygrams BY FRED W. BRAUN © The Safety Man

Do you know, Mr. Farmer, that an automobile traveling 30 miles per hour covers approximately 45 feet per second and that an automobile traveling 60 miles an hour will cover approximately 80 feet per second?

If you are going home from town late at night these winter evenings, why not hang a lantern under your wagon? If this is not desirable then get some red reflector glass for the back of the wagon so that these automobilists can see this in time.

On dark evenings wet pavement does not reflect the light very readily and it is difficult for the automobile driver to see farm implements and equipment in time to avoid a smash-up.

You will add safety to the highways in your community by taking this extra precaution. I strongly recommend it.

Grandma Stromberg, Pioneer of Rosewood, Dead at 90

Rosewood, Minn., Dec. 6—Grandma Stromberg 90 years old and for the past nine years a resident of this place died Saturday evening at a Thief River Falls hospital after a weeks illness following a stroke of appoplexy which left her left side paralized.

Born in Dalsby, Varmland, Sweden on October 2, 1843 she came with her family to the United States in 1890 and was engaged at farming in the Warren, Viking and Foldahl communities until her husbands death in 1907. Mrs. Stromberg was the mother of eight children, three of whom are living, Carl of this place, Peter of Thief River Falls and Axel at Jackson, Missouri.

The funeral took place from the Rindahl church here, and interment was made at the Bethlehem cemetery south from Newfolden.

No More "Bargain Counter" Tax Sales Will Be Held

According to the St. Paul Dispatch Governor Olson has given full support to a program to end "bargain counter" tax laws.

He assured a delegation of officials from Minnesota counties who met Monday in St. Paul that he would include their recommendations in his message to the Legislature and urge their enactment into law.

The county officials asked that tax leniency laws passed in recent years be repealed and that aggressive statutes be substituted. They urged immediate action to stave off effects of the old laws in 1934.

The tax leniency laws, which were passed in the hope that it would be easier to harvest tax dollars if statutes made it easier to pay, have had the effect of increasing tax delinquency.

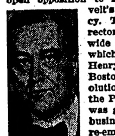
Organized Business Assails President's Monetary Program, Without Present Effect—Russian Recognition Completed—Morgenthau Made Acting Treasury Head.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

AMERICAN business, as represented by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, is now out in open opposition to President Roosevelt's monetary policy. The board of directors of that nationwide organization, which is headed by Henry I. Harriman of Boston, adopted a resolution declaring that the President's course was gravely retarding business recovery and re-employment, undermining the government's credit, preventing the expansion of normal credit and prolonging the demoralization of foreign trade—in other words, doing just the opposite of what Mr. Roosevelt hopes it will do. The directors demanded of the administration "complete avoidance of monetary experimentation, greenbackism and fiat money."



President Roosevelt

Until this time the chamber has been supporting the President and Mr. Harriman has been active in promoting the aims of the administration. He attended the meeting of the board, as did P. W. Litchfield, president of the Goodyear Tire and Rubber company; Redfield Proctor, president of the Vermont Marble company; Paul Shoup, vice president of the Southern Pacific railroad; Chester I. Barnard, president of the New Jersey Bell Telephone company, and nearly all the rest of the 52 directors.

Besides attacking the President's monetary policy, the board adopted three other resolutions of similar tenor. One protested against the expenditure of large sums by the public works administration for financing projects in competition with private business enterprises which are now rendering adequate service at reasonable cost. This was in protest against the government engaging in public utility works in localities which are already served by private companies.

Another protested against the public works administration's plan to engage in the building of federal housing projects, and insisted that such financing should be through private housing corporations.

In a resolution on the NRA, the chamber urged that industrial codes should be administered through the trade associations of each industry.

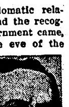
"In the orderly administration of a code it is only the legal penalties and processes provided in the law and abuses obviously harmful to the public or inherently wrong that should have the attention of government authorities," this resolution stated.

The board appointed a committee to study and investigate the NRA. Among its members are Mr. Harriman and three former presidents of the chamber.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S answer to these protests of organized business, as obtained by Washington officials who communicated with him at Warm Springs, was to direct that the program of depreciating the dollar for the purpose of raising commodity prices be continued.

The action of the chamber was coincident with the delivery of an address by Mr. Roosevelt at Savannah, Ga., in which he denounced the critics of his recovery program as "tories" and "doubting Thomases" and warmly defended the "experiments" he is making. He promised that "the principles and objectives of American self-government will remain the same."

RESUMPTION of diplomatic relations with Russia and the recognition of the Soviet government came, as was expected, on the eve of the President's departure for Warm Springs. He and Commissar Litvinov issued a joint announcement of the happy ending of their negotiations, and Mr. Roosevelt immediately designated William C. Bullit as American ambassador to Moscow, which greatly pleased the Russians. Within a day or so the Soviet government announced that its ambassador to Washington would be Alexander Antonovich Troyanovsky, formerly diplomatic representative at Tokyo and now vice chairman of the Russian state planning commission. This gentleman was born in Russia in 1882, studied in the University of Kiev, was exiled to Siberia in 1909, escaped and lived in France until 1917, and served in the Russian revolutionary army.



M. Litvinov

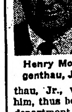
With recognition by our government, Russia agrees not to allow its agents to propagandize against the government of the United States; guarantees religious freedom and legal protection for American nationals in Russia, and waives all claims against the United States growing out of the American expedition into Siberia in 1918-21. No promise whatever was made by Mr. Litvinov concerning the attitude of his government toward the payment of $768,583,000 in debts owed by Russia to the United States government and to private American citizens. However, both he and Mr. Roosevelt expressed the hope that all outstanding debt questions might be settled "as soon as possible."

Closely questioned by reporters as to the full implication of the pledge concerning propaganda, Mr. Litvinov was evasive, asserting that the Third Internationale was not mentioned in the joint statement and falling back on the old excuse that the Russian Communist party is not the Soviet government.

The commissar's friends and admirers celebrated his success in the negotiations by giving him a banquet in New York, and Senator Borah, one of the steadfast advocates of recognition, traveled there from Idaho to deliver an address.

Mr. Litvinov and State department officials resumed their conversations after the reaching of the accord, discussing debts and claims. Also he and Acting Secretary Morgenthau of the Treasury department talked over trade relations. Troyanovsky, the new ambassador, is familiar with all these subjects, and also with the Japanese situation, having completed a five-year ambassadorship at Tokyo only last January. His selection added prominence to the Manchurian-Siberian difficulties and to some recalled the expression employed both by President Roosevelt and Litvinov in their recognition letters—that the new friendship would be "for the preservation of the peace of the world."

SOUND money advocates were rather dismayed though perhaps not surprised by the sudden shift of treasury officials that has taken place in Washington. Secretary Woodin, still suffering from the throat affection that has troubled him all year, sought to resign, but President Roosevelt instead gave him an indefinite leave of absence. Dean Acheson then, at the President's request, resigned as undersecretary of the treasury and Henry Morgenthau, Jr., was appointed to succeed him, thus becoming actual head of the department during Mr. Woodin's absence. The inference drawn, and it is inescapable, is that now the treasury will be dominated by inflationary policies designed to raise prices for the benefit of the farmer.



Henry Morgenthau, Jr.

Mr. Morgenthau, long a close friend and adviser of Mr. Roosevelt, is one of the Cornell university group that includes Prof. George F. Warren, coauthor of the gold buying plan.

So far as known Mr. Morgenthau has never advocated currency inflation via the printing press. As governor of the farm credit administration he has been more conservative than many farm leaders would have liked him to be. His main concern, however, is for agriculture and his associations are with men who have developed radical and inflationary ideas for meeting present conditions.

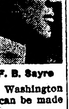
Mr. Acheson's retirement, according to observers in the National Capital, is likely to be followed before long by the resignations of others not in accord with the gold purchase scheme, these including Prof. O. M. W. Sprague, financial adviser of the treasury; Director of the Budget Lewis Douglas and Gov. Eugene Black of the federal reserve board.

Mr. Woodin announced that he would go to Arizona in search of renewed health and that he would accept no salary from the government during his leave of absence. The belief is general that he never will return to his post.

ON DECEMBER 5 the fascist grand council will be convoked to discuss the question of Italy's membership in the League of Nations, and informed opinion in Rome is that Italy will withdraw from the League unless France consents to the holding of a disarmament conference in Rome under the four-power pact that was engineered by Mussolini. So far the French have refused to participate in any such conference outside of Geneva and the auspices of the League. Three Italian newspapers already have hinted at the possibility of the withdrawal of Italy. One of them is the premier's Popolo d'Italia. The others are the Corriere della Serra of Milan and the Gazetta del Popolo of Turin.

In the effort to keep the disarmament conference alive Hugh R. Wilson, American minister to Switzerland, suggested that the slate be cleaned of all previous proposals and the situation be examined afresh. The British and some of the Italians liked this plan, but the French were aloof. Arthur Henderson presided at the meeting of the conference, but he has threatened to resign if something definite is not soon accomplished.

SECRETARY OF STATE HULL, who doesn't seem to cut much of a figure in the administration, is to have a new assistant secretary. President Roosevelt appointed to this post Francis B. Sayre, son-in-law of the late President Wilson, and he will succeed Harry F. Payer who has been transferred to the position of special foreign trade adviser to the RFC. Mr. Sayre is a professor in the Harvard law school and will remove from Cambridge to Washington as soon as arrangements can be made with the university.



F. B. Sayre

As adviser on foreign affairs to the government of Siam, Mr. Sayre has had wide experience in the negotiation, of political and commercial treaties. Since 1925 he has negotiated treaties between the Siamese government and the governments of France, Great Britain, the Netherlands, Spain, Portugal, Denmark, Sweden, Norway, and Italy. He holds decorations from all of the principal nations of Europe.

GOVERNORS, mayors and relief administrators in large numbers gathered in Washington to pledge assistance in the government's drive to put 4,000,000 persons back to work within a month, and President Roosevelt told them that relief of the needy must not be made a political football.
